New York.—Destruction of forty-four British and French airplanes on the Franco-Belgian front in one day's fighting was announced by the German war office, which added that the artillery duel continues with great intensity along the battle line from Lens to Arras. London admits twenty-eight machines are missing, but says forty-six German airplanes were destroyed or damaged. The French have been violently bombarding the German lines at St. Quentin and south of that city in the region of Lallon and Gruigies.

GERMAN POLICY UNCHANGED

Announced That Germany Will Not Take Steps To Wage War Against The United States

Berlin.—The press report of President Wilson's "state of war" message having reached Berlin at ten o'clock on the morning of April 3, it is declared that there will be no change in the German attitude—Germany will not declare war nor take any steps to wage war against the United States.

The submarine war will be continued as it has been conducted since February 1, but this, declare the officials, is not directed more against the United States than any other neutral.

It is also declared that there will be no change in the treatment of American citizens in Germany, who now have the same freedom as all other neutrals. But Germany expects that the United States will continue the same treatment of Germans in that country.

German Protest To All Neutrals

London.—An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Amsterdam says that it is reported there from Berlin that the German government contemplates sending to all neutrals a firm protest against the expected American declaration that a state of war with Germany exists. It is hoped in Germany, the dispatch says, that the protest will influence South American republics, as it will denounce President Wilson's policy as perilous to the neutrality of the republics of Central and South America.

American Policy Towards Germans

Washington.—While President Wilson indicated the benevolent policy the government will pursue towards Germans in this country, legal officers of the administration directed attention to a law already on the statute books under which as soon as congress declares war existing every unnaturalized male German 14 years of age or over may by presidential proclamation be confined or removed as alien enemies.

STRINGENT SPY LAW EARLY WAR MEASURE

Wilson Says Germany Has Had Spies Even In United States Government Offices

Washington.—The significance of President Wilson's warning of German spies "even in our offices of government" became apparent when it was learned that on several occasions trails of the German secret service have been discovered within some of the most closely guarded precincts of the executive departments.

Although officials do not believe that access has been gained by the foreign agents to any information of any great importance, they are understood to be convinced that not even the state department, with its highly confidential diplomatic facilities, has been free from invasion.

No evidence on which prosecutions can be based has been found, it is said, but enough has been revealed to prompt a sweeping official investigation and precautions which the department believes will safeguard its interests more adequately in the future.

Brazil Prepares To Enter The Fray

Rio Janeiro, Brazil.—The Brazilian government has received official confirmation of press reports of the sinking by a German submarine of the Brazilian steamship Parana, with the loss of three lives. The situation is regarded as most serious, and in view of the definite declarations of the foreign minister, Dr. Lauro Muller, a rupture of diplomatic relations with Germany is regarded in some quarters as inevitable. The public received the news calmly and it was assumed that the government would take energetic action, as indicated by the note sent to Germany in February. The police established guards over the Austrian and German consulates and business houses as a measure of precaution.

Submarine Secrets For United States

Washington.—All the closely guarded secrets of submarine catching, developed by the entente navies, are expected to come into possession of the American navy now that the United States is ready to enter the war. As the capacity of German navy yards—now that a standard of construction has been developed—is said to be two submarines a week, the suppression of the campaign would seem to depend only on development of efficiency in submarine catching.

Sentenced To 25 Years In Atlanta Pen

Martinsburg, W. Va.—Henry Grady Webb, charged with having been a member of the gang which held up and robbed an express train on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Central Station, W. Va., on October 9, 1915, and escaped with $100,000 in unsigned currency, pleaded guilty in federal court here. He was sentenced to serve twenty-five years in the Atlanta penitentiary. Eugene Liez, also an accomplice in the robbery, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

Britons Acclaim Entry Of U. S. In War

London.—President Wilson's message aligning the United States with the nations fighting against Germany was warmly welcomed and unanimously acclaimed by the British people. They recognize that no decision with a weightier influence upon the result of the world struggle has been given since Great Britain, after a few days of consideration, resolved to march with France. No news of the last year has so stirred the country, save only the Russian revolution.

UNITED STATES IN WORLD CONFLICT

President Wilson Signs The Resolution Of Congress Declaring The Existence Of State Of War

GERMAN SHIPS ARE SEIZED

Complete Mobilization of Navy Ordered—Naval Militia And Naval Reserves Called To Service

Washington.—The United States accepted Germany's challenge to war and formally abandoned its place as the greatest neutral of a world in arms.

President Wilson signed the resolution of congress, on Good Friday, declaring the existence of a state of war and authorizing and directing the chief executive to employ all the resources of the nation to prosecute hostilities against the German government to a successful termination.

The act was done without ceremony and only in the presence of members of the president's family. The act was accomplished in the executive mansion.

Word was flash immediately to all army and navy stations and to vessels at sea, and orders for further precautionary steps withheld until the last moment were dispatched.

By proclamation the president announced the state of war, called upon all citizens to manifest their loyalty and assured Germans in this country that they would not be molested as long as they behaved themselves. Orders were issued soon afterward for the arrest of sixty ringleaders in German plots and intrigues.

Navy Placed On War Footing

Complete mobilization of the navy, calling all reserves and militia to the colors was ordered by Secretary Daniels as soon as the war resolution was signed. The war department, already having taken virtually every step contemplated before raising of a real war army is authorized, waited on congress. Secretary Baker conferred with Chairman Dent of the house military committee, and arranged to appear before the committee to discuss the general staff army plans and consider the war budget of more than three billions.

The president went over all of the great preparatory measures with the cabinet, discussing what has been accomplished and dwelling, it is understood, upon arrangements for co-operation with the entente allies against the common enemy. Plans for co-operation are said to have taken very definite shape, although there will be no announcement on the subject for the present.

The seizure of German ships laid up in American harbors was the subject of interested comment, and legal officers of the government began consideration of the question of whether the United States can confiscate the ships outright or must pay for them after the war. In any event, as soon as they can be made seaworthy the fine merchant fleet thus acquired will give America a merchant marine that could not be duplicated in several years and add more than six hundred thousand to the tonnage available for the transportation of supplies and munitions to the allies.

William J. Bryan Tenders Services

Tallahassee, Fla.—William Jennings Bryan, three times candidate for president, and former secretary of state, sent this message to President Wilson: "Believing it to be the duty of each citizen to bear his part of the burden of war and his share of its perils, I hereby tender my services to the government. Please enroll me as a private whenever I am needed. Assign me to any work that I can do until called to the colors. I shall, through the Red Cross, contribute to the comfort of soldiers in the hospital and, through the Young Men's Christian Association, and in guarding the morals of the men in camp."

German U-Boat Sunk By Allied Ship

St. John, N. B.—The sinking of a German submarine which attacked their ship 90 miles off Queenstown, Ireland, was reported by officers of a British steamer on arrival here. In a running fight the merchantman scored a direct hit, officers said, and the underseas boat went to the bottom

Kaiser Facing Trouble At Home

Copenhagen.—American's entry into the war evidently has had an immediate and strong effect upon the reform movement in Germany. The conviction that the instant modernization of the Prussian constitution and the proclamation of a more democratic basis of government and diplomacy in the empire, without waiting for the end of the war, is necessary as a military and political measure to counteract the "tempest of the world's public opinion," as The Vorwaerts puts it, is evidently gaining ground

German Plotters Ordered Arrested

Washington.—The arrest of sixty alleged ringleaders in German plots, conspiracies and machinations in the United States is ordered by Attorney General Gregory. This action follows in the wake of the signing of the war resolution by the president. Every man citizen, is known by the department of justice, it is authoritatively stated, to have participated actively in German intrigues in this country, and is regarded as a dangerous person to be at large.

WAR RESOLUTION IS PASSED

Action Came In Senate At Close Of Debate, Which Lasted Continuously For Eleven Hours

Washington.—The resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany was passed by the senate April 4 by a vote of 82 to 6.

The resolution, drafted after consultation with the state department and already accepted by the house committee, says the state of war thrust upon the United States by Germany is formally declared, and directs the president to employ the entire military and naval forces and the resources of the government to carry on war and bring it to a successful termination.

The resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany, already passed by the senate, passed the house by a vote of 373 to 50.

The passage of the resolution was not marked by any outburst from the galleries. The senators themselves were unusually quiete. Many of them answered to their names in voices that quivered with emotion.

Text Of War Resolution

The text of the war resolution follows:

"Whereas, the imperial German government has committed repeated acts of war against the government and the people of the United States of America; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled, that the state of war between the United States and the imperial German government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the president be and he is hereby authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the government to carry on war against the imperial German government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination, all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the congress of the United States."

In the senate patriotic speeches of support for the president and a determination to press the war with all vigor were made by Democrats and Republicans, with pledges of non-partisan consideration for all war questions.

In the diplomatic gallery was Secreary Lansing, Counsellor Polk of the state department, Minister Calderon of Bolivia and Minister Ekengren of Sweden. Earlier in the evening Doctor Ritter, the Swiss minister, in charge of German interests of this country, had been there.

ARMY PLANS PLACED IN PRESIDENT'S HANDS

Two Million Men To Be Trained And Fighting Machine Will Be Built Of Men In Their Twentieth Year

Washington.—Detailed plans of the war department for raising an army numbering millions if that is necessary "to bring the government of the German empire to terms," were placed in the president's hands, April 4, in the form of a bill, prepared by the general staff and reviewed and revised in part by Secretary Baker and the general officers who are his military advisers. The president, as commander-in-chief, already has approved the basis adopted for the war army.

The scope of the war department's army plan is gradually becoming clear, although the details are being withheld from the public. Included in the scheme must be the funds and equipment necessary to establish military training on a basis never before attempted in the United States. Warfare has changed mightily in the European struggle. There is no open fighting of consequence. Trench fighting is the predominating feature of the battles raging there.

Government Seizes All Radio Stations

Washington. — Seizure of all radio stations in the United States and its possessions, operations of those needed for naval communications and closing of others is authorized by President Wilson. Enforcement of the order has been delegated to Secretary Daniels, and preliminary steps toward carrying it out have been perfected. It is understood that all plants for which no place can be found in the navy's wireless system, including amateur apparatus, for which close search is being made, will be put out of commission instantly.

Russians Cheer For The United States

Petrograd.—News of the impending intervention of the United States was first received at Tauride palace, where a council of soldiers and workingmen's deputies was in session. The announcement, made from the tribune, evoked a storm of applause and soon the entire palace echoed with shouts and hurrahs. Impromptu meetings were at once held in the foyer, where orators explained to the soldiers the enormous importance of President Wilson's declaration.

Henry Grady Webb Escapes Guards

Charlotte, N. C.—Henry Grady Webb, recently sentenced in West Virginia to a term in the penitentiary for train robbery, escaped from guards here, while being taken to the federal prison in Atlanta, Ga. Three deputy United States marshals were guarding Webb and another prisoner. While the train was standing in the shed at the local passenger station Webb jumped through a window and escaped. City and county police are searching for him.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

FALLING HAIR MEANS DANDRUFF IS ACTIVE

Save Your Hair! Get a 25 Cent Bottle of Danderine Right Now—Also Stops Itching Scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its luster, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, luster and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance; an incomparable gloss and softness, but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp. Vote for the Bond Issue.

It will give the county a lower rate of interest on its indebtedness.

It does not increase the county's debt. It puts the present debt into a better form.

The bond issue will place the county on a cash basis ,so it can pay for what it must buy and get it at half what it must pay under the present system.

By voting bonds to take care of the warrants, then the road and bridge funds can be used next year and each succeeding year, to improve the roads of the county, where necessary.

If bonds are not voted to pay the warrants, all the road and bridge tax for more than ten years will have to be applied to the payment of the warrants, with nothing to put on the roads and bridges for needed repairs.

By voting bonds you vote to the interest of every man in the county. By voting against bonds, you vote in favor of the moneyed men, who hold the interest bearing warrants.

Lay aside any and all petty ideas you may have about the present debt; remember we have the debt upon us, and must meet it some way. Bonds are the only possible way, and we hope you will see it that way and vote accordingly next Monday.

Next week the Union-Banner will publish the complete road laws of Chilton County. The laws are new and revised, and will be adopted by the Commissioners Court of Chilton County at its next meeting. You ought to secure a copy of the paper which contains this valuable document. We will have a number of extra copies of the paper which may be obtained at 5 cents per copy.

The present administration of the county officers was elected on the promise that they would reduce the cost of running our county business. We are, together with the people of the county, glad to see them living up to their promises. The way the Commissioners have cut down salaries and appropriations shows that they are watching the county's finances.

IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH

The people last November elected 215 Republicans and 215 Democrats to the House of Repdesentatives. They also chose five representatives under independent classification, and since then one Democrat and one Republican have died.

The day that Congress organized there were three Republican Representatives absent for sickness and other sufficient reasons. This reduced the total possible Republican number to 211.

Upon the vote for Speaker, only 205 members gave their support to Mr. Mann of Illinois, the nominee of the Republican caucus; two members voted "present"; two each voted for Mr. Lenroot of Wisconsin and Mr. Gillett of Massachusetts.

The 205 who stood by the nominee of their caucu merit the praise of all militant republicans everywhere. They did much to demonstrate that the great mass of Republicans, whom they represent are mindful of the party's cause and mindful that the party cannot exist and maintain public confidence without solidity, If Republicanism is to consist of only a disassociated group of ambitious individuals, Republicans cannot expect to succeed. But if Republicanism is to embody a disciplined force, of political co-thinkers, wherein a majority—fairly secured and freely expressive of itself—it is to settle mooted questions, then the 205 who voted for Mr. Mann have given a pledge for the future of Republicanism, in the next congress, and in the campaign, which will encourage the party to elect not 215 but 250 members of the Congress of 1918.

THE FARMER AND PROTECTION

Imports and food stuffs and food animals for the first eight months of the present fiscal year ended February 28, totaled $381,000,000—over $47,000,000 a month. Does that statement carry any warning to the farmer who today is realizing the high prices caused by the European War? That is an increase of $103,000,000 over the similar period of 1912-13, when this country operated under a protective tariff law, the imports for that period paying a health revenue into the Federal treasury. At the same time, the food producing countries of the world were shipping a large share of their harvests to Europe, where 18,000,000 are destroying instead of producing, and who have to be fed. Yet, our imports from Argentina, chiefly agricultural products, increased during the 1916-17 period 333 per cent over the 1912-13 period; those from Canada 125 per cent.

The figures of the Department of Commerce also show that imports of products in the manufacture groups shows an increase over 1912 period, in spite of the fact that Germany, Belgium, and Austria are closed out of our market, and the rest of Europe is spending more or less of its energy toward supplying the demands of war. Oriental competitors are making large strides in the commercial conquest of the American market. Europe will join in the rush after the war. Every American workman who is laid off as a result of post-war competition means much loss in the purchasing power of the farmers' products. More, even than the manufacturer, is the farmer concerned with the protective policy, because under free trade he gets the foreign competition in his own products and loses a customer in the laid-off laborer.

FAVORS CONSISTENT ECONOMY

Congressman James P. Glynn of Connecticut believes in the application of practical efficiency in the management of the Government and deprecates the sporadic outbursts of economy on the part of the Democrats in inconsequental matters while spending tens of millions on useless activities. Mr. Glynn does not hesitate to give expression to his principles by vote. He recorded his objection to unwise appropriations in the public buildings bill, the river and harbor bill, the armor plate factory bill and other measurer recklessly disposing of the people's money, and also registered his disapproval of the provision dictated by Mr. Gompers, and included in several big appropriation bills, prohibiting time measurements of work in government arsenals, etc. which Representative Glynn declares has resulted in the saving of thousands of dollars to private manufacturers, and would do the same for the government if allowed to be applied.

Book of Mixed Feeds

FREE!

Useful to every owner of dairy cows, beef cattle, work oxen, horses and mules

TELLS you how to prepare mixed feed scientifically. Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells the percentage of protein and carbohydrates. Directs what amount of each mixture to feed for maintenance, for milk production, for fattening and for work.

This book also contains an interesting chapter on

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

Shows why these delinted hulls have greater forage value than the old style hulls, why they allow better assimilation of food, why they go farther, why they take less space for storage, why they are easy to handle, why they mix well with other food, why cattle relish them, why they cost much less than old style hulls and why thousands of feeders are enthusiastic about them. The mixed feed formulas show how to combine Buckeye Hulls properly with concentrates and other feeds.

Mr. W. B. Lifford, Troy, Ala.,
prefers Buckeye Hulls to old style hulls. He says that they are less trouble to feed, are better for the digestive organs and seem to agree with the cows better.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

1917 Vote List

BUILDING FOR THE FUTURE

THE L. & N. represents an investment of more than $250,000,000 devoted to the public interest in the South.

During the past sixteen years the L. & N. has spent $148,000,000 or more than 100 per cent, in creating new, and improving existing facilities, such as modernizing its stations, building double track, and installing devices to increase the safety, and facilitate the operation of its trains.

The L. & N. has spent, and contracted to spend, $12,162,742 during eighteen months, ending Dec. 31st, 1917, to meet the high standards which the public demands in Freight and Passenger equipment.

In sixteen years the L. & N. paid out for the operation of its trains $559,448,992.52, or an average of $34,965,000 per year, of which $324,870,160.41, or 58 per cent, or an average of $29,304,385.02 per year was paid to employes, the average number of whom was 30,112.

During that time L. & N. passenger rate decreased 7.7 per cent and L. & N. freight rate decreased 10.8 per cent.

Every piece of construction is with a view of the South's present and future preeminence. Adequate transportation is a fundamental business necessity. The L. & N. will be able to do its full share, provided it is permitted to earn a reasonable margin of revenue over expenses. The South is equally interested.

Millions Spent In Improvement

OBITUARY

Mrs. Sallie Spivey Wright died at the home of her sister, Mrs, Frank Langston, Jr., near Mars Hill on the night of the 6th inst.

She was born and raised in Chilton County. The greater portion of her life was spent near Union Springs. Her life was blameless, her record says she did all she could. She leaves a husband two sons and an adopted daughter.

How sad to see our friends going one by one. She was true to her convictions, and believed in living a pure and holy life. While she sleeps in death, her life is engraved on the tablet of her Creator's memory, and in the resurrection she will not be forgotten.

To her loved ones we extend our sympathy. Her body was laid away in Mars Hill Cemetery, funeral conducted by Rev. Honeycutt.

Death now reigns over her, but ultimately there will be no more death. Happy thought! Through the rift in the clouds we see the dawning of the beautiful day.

TONOLINE IS BEAUTY AID, ANNOUNCES SPECIALIST

Mildred Louise Talk of Interest to Women.

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louise, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusal interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than tonoline," said Mildred Louise.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches would also add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness.

"Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, "Take tonoline.'

"Not long after I started the tonoline treatment, my patrons began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in in my face.

"What tonoline really did for me I cannot say. I am so grateful that I am very willing to reccommend tonoline publicly."

Tonoline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney troulble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood—and quickly restores proper action. Tonoline is being explained daily to many people at your druggist.

Notice:—As tonoline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by anyone not wishing to increase his weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefitted by tonoline in severe cases of stomach trouble, and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

PROMINENT BANKERS COME OUT FOR TANLAC

Two Well-Known Bankers of the South Voluntarily Write Strong Letters of Indorsement to Tanlac Office at Atlanta on the Same Day Telling What It Had Done for Them.

ON MARCH 7th personal letters from prominent bankers in two southern states were received at the Tanlac office. These, like hundreds of thousands of other communications that have been pouring in with every delivery of the mail for the past year or more, express the writers' high appreciation of the merits of Tanlac, as proven by their own experience with it.

The first letter quoted comes through Eli W. Goode, druggist and local agent for Tanlac at Hawkinsville, Georgia, containing the statement of E. J. Henry, president of the Hawkinsville Bank and Trust company, which is one of the best known financial institutions in that part of the state. His letter follows, just as it was written:

"Hawkinsville, Georgia, March 5, 1917.
"Mr. G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Georgia.

"Dear Sir: Mr. E. J. Henry, president of the Hawkinsville Bank and Trust Company, came into my store a few days ago and said:

"'Eli, sell me another bottle of Tanlac.'

"I said 'All right, Mr. Henry. What do you really think of Tanlac?' His reply was so commendable to the virtues of the medicine, that I asked him if he would give me a signed statement about it. He said 'yes, of course I will,' and this is his statement:

"'Last spring I was all wrong some way or other, and couldn't get right. I came to you and bought a bottle of Tanlac and began to improve. Two more bottles put me all right, and I felt perfectly well. A few weeks ago I had the grippe and was beginning to get down and out again, and about a week ago I bought another bottle and have taken it and am perfectly well again.

"'I unhesitatingly recommend Tanlac to anyone who is sick and worn-out, as I believe that if anybody will take Tanlac when they first begin to feel bad it will prevent and keep off sickness. It certainly is a great remedy.

(Signed)
"'E. J. HENRY, President,
"'Hawkinsville Bank and Trust Co.'"

The other letter referred to comes from the cashier of the Hornbeck Branch of the West Louisiana Bank, at Hornbeck, La., and is as follows:

"Hornbeck, Louisiana, March 5, 1917.
"Mr. G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Georgia.

"Dear Sir: I wish to say that I have taken five (5) bottles of Tanlac and have gained fifteen (15) pounds in three weeks. I think it is a great medicine.

(Signed)
"W. C. M'ELVEEN, Cashier,
"Bank of Hornbeck, Hornbeck, La."

It is nothing unusual for men of prominence to endorse Tanlac, as over twenty-five thousand endorsements have been given Tanlac within the past year alone. These endorsements have come from people representing practically every walk of life, including Bankers, Lawyers, Judges, Doctors, prominent Government, State and County officials, prominent men of affairs, etc., but it is a noteworthy fact that in this particular instance two well-known bankers of the South have on the same day voluntarily written an expression of their gratitude for publication, telling what Tanlac has done for them.

In this connection one of the best known newspaper publishers of the South recently said:

"I know that there are at least a thousand people in this city who would be glad to endorse Tanlac," and what is true of that city is true of practically every other city of the South and West; in fact, throughout the entire country wherever this medicine has been sold.

The fame and popularity of Tanlac, as everyone knows, has swept over the whole country like wildfire and is now a household word from coast to coast.

Although placed on the market a little over two years ago over seven million bottles have already been sold, and the demand is constantly increasing.

SWATH OF TERROR CUT BY DEAD EYE

Youth With Water Gun Garners Gold and Jewels From Frightened New Yorkers.

TIRES OF TENDING BABY

Thirteen-Year-Old Desperado Does Thriving Business Until Callous Hand of the Law Cuts Short His Career.

New York.—The callous hand of the law, which wots not of those glorious days when highwaymen strode abroad and garnered gold and jewels from fat and frightened burghers, summarily ended the newly fledged career of "Dead Eye," the boy terror, by carrying "Dead Eye" off to the donjon keep of the Children's society.

"Dead Eye," be it known to those whose prosaic minds know only material names and addresses, is Frank Kraus, who lives at 34 East Seventy-sixth street, and who is thirteen remarkably desperate years old. In about an hour and a half after he had determined to doff the drab garb of respectability and dish washing and baby tending to take up the parlous career of a highwayman with "Dead Eye" for his sobriquet, the youth made a record that will live long after he has reformed.

"Dead Eye" Sets Forth.

Armed with a water gun, a pocket full of nails, a red bandanna handkerchief twisted about his neck, a couple of novels recounting the lives of other bold highwaymen and a flashlight, "Dead Eye" set forth one night at nine o'clock. His first sally was to the tenement of Mrs. Palma Manning.

Mrs. Manning answered an innocent knock at the door to face the diminutive terror, who had the water gun pointed at her and who leered briskly from behind the black mask.

"Hands up and beware!" whispered "Dead Eye," and Mrs. Manning, with a scream, backed into a corner.

"Silence and yer valuables," the impassive "Dead Eye" added, "or you get killed."

With trembling hand, while the light from the flashlight flared in her eyes, Mrs. Manning handed over to "Dead Eye" $100 in cash, a gold watch, two gold bracelets, a diamond ring and a gold chain. "Dead Eye" seemed astonished at this lavish rain of wealth and as he stuffed the last of the booty into a frayed trousers pocket with a grimy hand, he said:

"Gosh!" but he recovered his aplomb quickly and, backing away with the water gun still pointed menacingly at Mrs. Manning, "Dead Eye" scurried to the street.

Hand of Law Descends.

A casual workman passed on his way home, and "Dead Eye" flashed the light in his face. The workman yelled and departed hurriedly. This cemented "Dead Eye's" determination that the bold and free life was indeed the career for a man of sporting instincts.

So he wandered down the street to Seventy-fifth street and First avenue, where a group of boys were playing. Hitching his mask over his face, he sallied into the gathering and motioning with his water gun he backed the terrified youngsters against a wall and commenced to rifle their pockets.

Then as he turned in triumph to bid the cravens depart, Policeman Shea of the East Sixty-seventh street station laid a heavy hand on his shoulders and "Dead Eye" the terror, faded into the oblivion of yesterday's triumph and Frankie Kraus was marched away to the Children's society.

In the meantime a squad of police men with night sticks and pistols ready searched the neighborhood for the "big thief" of whom Mrs. Manning weepingly told.

They Both Blushed.

Milwaukee.—Esther Wright blushed. So did the judge. And Esther's pretty rounded shoulders turned pink as she bared them in open court. She wanted to show where Oscar Teweles, deaf mute, had made advances by bruising her in the sign language.

ON LEARNING FLY-CASTING.

Mr. Dear Buck:

It's some jump from bait-casting with artificial plugs to fly-casting with the light, feathery imitation that coaxes the gamy fighters out of the waters, but you can make it easy enough, old man, by doing a stretch of "dry water" practice work on the back lawn. To the ordinary bait-caster who has accustomed himself to the stiffer, short rod, fly-casting with the nine or ten foot rod weighing from five to six and a quarter ounces seems like the impossible. Many are the yarns he has heard about the "fine art of fishing," fly-casting; much has been written about the "science" of this end of the game, in fact, the average every-now-and-then, week end fisherman who has become proficient in bait-casting has been scared to a fare-you-well at the thought of learning to toss the light flies and he has stuck to bait-casting as the "safety-first" of fishing, thereby missing many pleasant hours whipping streams.

Practice Makes a Fly-Caster.

Right down to rocks, Buck, you can learn fly-casting by a little practice with the right tackle—of course, you must not get the bug in your tackle-box that this practice makes you an expert fly-fisherman, but it gives you a start at an angle of the game to which you will become a regular member as soon as you have whipped a stream or two. You can learn the action of fly-casting quite easily, practice will make you in a short time a good fly-caster, but there is nothing whatever to make you bring home a well filled creel, except the study of fish, the streams you fish and the exercising of care and alertness of mind while after the game fish that rise to the fly.

You can whip a stream all day with any variety or selection of flies without creeling a fish if you don't know the habits and loafing places of the fish and how to cast without scaring them to death.

Tackle Necessary to Start.

Probably the best all round fly rod for all except the smallest of mountain brooks, is a split bamboo from nine to ten feet, weighing from five to six ounces, my preference is the nine and a half footer for general casting, with 25 yards of waterproof enameled silk line, size E or F, according to the weight of the rod, E for the heavier and F for the lighter one. An ordinary single action click reel of 100 yards capacity is necessary. Don't bother with a leader for the lawn practice, save it for the real fishing, although you can tie a very small piece of white string on the end of the line to locate the end easily to note the distance from your target.

Trying Out the Cast.

Peg down a newspaper or small cloth on the lawn, take a position facing it, say 25 feet away, place the reel on the underside of the rod with the handle to the right and keep it there at all times. Grasp the rod in the right hand, reel under, with the thumb straight along the top of the grip—never curved around the grip. Cast out about ten feet of line letting it fall in front of you on a line with the target, with the left hand unreel about fifteen feet of line—but do not pass this line through the guides and out the tip, but let it drop to the ground at your feet, retaining a hold on the line about a foot this side of the first guide. Point your rod at the target, keeping your arm as far as the elbow close to the body (this is essential, the forearm and wrist must do the work) swing the rod up to a vertical position slowly at first, taking up loose line and ending with a strong, quick wrist and forearm motion. This throws the line in the air and the swing of the rod carries it back over the shoulder, but be sure of this point, stop the cast when the thumb along the grip shows that the rod is vertical; more casts are killed by too much of a swing over the shoulder than any other way. This is the first half of the cast and is called the back cast. This cast causes the line to fly out behind you and the instant you feel the slightest tug on the rod you know that the line has straightened out behind and at this point start the forward cast. Make the forward cast beginning it with an easy swing putting the steam on at the windup, stopping the cast with a snap when parallel with the ground.

Big Points to Remember.

The main points to watch are: Make the back cast forcibly. Not to swing the rod back too far on the back cast, keeping it at vertical rather than back farther—start forward cast at the slightest pull of the line—start forward cast mildly, finish it strong, and not to lower the rod too near the water at the wind up.

HEALTH FIGURES FOR 1916 GIVEN

TOTAL NUMBER OF DEATHS GIVEN AT 24,306, AGAINST 54,190 BIRTHS.

AT THE STATE'S CAPITAL

Interesting News Budget of Happenings in Various Departments of State.

—Montgomery.

The annual report of the state board of health for the calender year of 1916 has just been issued. The report was gotten up while the department was under the control of Dr. W. H. Sanders, who resigned as state health officer later. The report shows that there were 24,306 deaths in Alabama during the year, a rate of 4.14 per cent. The number of births were 54,190, a rate of 23.04 per cent.

Henderson Urges More Food Crops.

Governor Henderson issued a formal proclamation to the citizens of the State, stressing the imperativeness of conserving the food supply of Alabama and urging that every available acre of land be planted in food and feedstuff.

The seriousness of the food supply and the assured food shortage, unless precautions are taken and provisions made are impressed strongly.

Lee Cowart Must Serve Sentence.

Lee Cowart of Birmingham, former commissioner of immigration, must serve a term of two years in the state penitentiary, according to a decision of the court of appeals, on a charge of embezzlement of state funds. The court of appeals in its decision in the case of Cowart against the state, appealed from the Montgomery city court, affirmed the decision of the lower court. Cowart, while state commissioner of immigration, had issued a handbook of the resources of the state, and had, it is alleged, embezzled money collected from advertisements which appeared in the handbook. He was convicted on a charge of embezzlement in the Montgomery city court, and appealed the case, his defense being based on the claim the money which he received did not come into his possession as bailee or trustee of the state, as he had no authority to receive money for the state under the provisions of his office. The court of appeals held i na previous case, that of Lacy vs. the state, that "Any fund or property belonging to the state, coming into the hands of a public officer of the state by virtue of his office, constitutes such officer as trustee for the state."

Bricken's Salary Ordered Paid.

In response to a question from the state auditor early in March as to whether he should draw his warrant in favor of Judge R. C. Bricken of the court of appeals, for salary in February the attorney general answered in the affirmative. Auditor M. C. Allgood declined to issue the warrant on the ground that during a part or all of the month in question the latter had also drawn pay from the federal government as commander of the Alabama brigade. He held up the payment of the salary while questioning the attorney general on the point of law, resuming the salary payment with the first of April when Judge Bricken received his salary for services on the bench, but was known to be receiving no compensation from the federal government.

Killing Bystander Not Murder.

That a man who shoots another and at the same time kills an innocent bystander accidentally, is not legally responsible for the death of the bystander was the principle laid down by the court of appeals in its decisions in the case of Andy Moss, alias Anthony Moses, vs. the state, appealing from the Jefferson county criminal court. In revising this decision the court of appeals points out that a man may commit two criminal acts at the same time, "but each act must necessarily have all the elements of a crime and each must be a separate act. But if a person, by the act of defending himself, fires four shots as one continuing attack, with the same purpose and intent and in so doing accidentally kills an innocent bystander, he can only be tried for one offense."

Prisoners Get Parole.

Five paroles were issued by Governor Henderson. One to M. S. Kerley of Jefferson county, sentenced to 18 months for passing false checks; Lucile Colemanof Bullock county, convicted of bigamy; Charles Caldwell of Randolph county, sentenced to life imprisonment for murder; James D. Clump of Jefferson county, convicted of forgery, and George Russell of Lowndes county.

Served Time; Case Remanded.

An unusual circumstance surrounds the life of Joe H. Kramer, the former employe of the German bank of Cullman, for his handling of the funds which were in his charge as assistant cashier. The unusual feature that has developed is the fact that the court of appeals reversed and remanded the decision of the Cullman circuit court which sentenced him to three years penal servitude, two and a half years of that time which have already been served

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

106 Fly Poison Cases Reported in 3 Years

A Large Percentage Fatal

Appalling as this record seems, it is only a fraction of the real number. The symptoms of cholera infantum and arsenical poisoning are almost identical. Diagnosis is extremely difficult. Many actual fly poison cases are unrecognized and unreported.

The Government recognizes this danger to childhood and issues this warning, in supplement No. 29 to the Public Health Report:

"Of other fly poisons mentioned, mention should be made, merely for the purpose of condemnation, of those composed of arsenic. Fatal cases of poisoning of children through the use of such compounds are far too frequent, and owing to the resemblance of arsenical poisoning to summer diarrhea and cholera infantum, it is believed that the cases reported do not, by any means, comprise the total. Arsenical fly-destroying devices must be rated as extremely dangerous, and should never be used, even if other measures are not at hand."

Rats and Fires.

At a time when everyone is complaining of the high cost of living it might be well to see if we cannot eliminate two great sources of waste—fires and rats.

Most fires are needless. All rats are so. Some years ago a study of the rat problem in Philadelphia arrived at the conclusion that the rodents of that city ate more than a million dollars' worth of food each year. At that rate, the disgusting creatures can hardly cost less than $100,000,000 per year to the whole country. This is a pretty high price to pay for the companionship of impish pests which, besides their other bad habits, undermine floors and carry the most dreaded of all diseases, bubonic plague.

Yet fires are more expensive than rats. In 1915—the last year for which figures are at hand—the American people paid out in premiums for fire insurance $419,361,346. Of this vast sum at least three-fourths could be saved by reducing our fire record to the rate prevailing in England, France or Germany; and even in our time and nation $300,000,000 per year is a saving worth noting, and one which would have a perceptible effect on the cost of living.

More to the Purpose.

"Register gloom!" bellowed the movie director. "You look as if you were going on a picnic."

"I don't understand your meaning," answered the screen star, haughtily.

"Hang it! Try to look the way people do when they are coming back from a picnic."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 15

JESUS THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

LESSON TEXT—John 10:7-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the good Shepherd: the good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep.—John 10:11.

This lesson probably occurred at the Feast of the Tabernacle in October, A. D. 29. The place was Jerusalem, perhaps in or near the temple. Facts, pictures and illustrations regarding eastern shepherd life can be used effectively in teaching the lesson. The true teacher must impart, develop and protect. Jesus does all of these things.

I. Jesus, the Door (vv. 1-9).. Anyone who tries to get access to the sheep any other way than through Jesus the door is a thief and a robber (v. 1). A door is an invitation to enter, to investigate, to purchase, to learn, to meet others. It is the proper entrance. To go in through any other way arouses suspicion. It is also a means of safety to control those who enter; it can be closed in case of danger, and is strong to protect against storms and thieves. It is a means of separation, to insure privacy, and to furnish a means of egress. Jesus says we are to "go in" for communion with God, and to "go out" for service, to "go in" for strength and to "go out" for conflict. Verse nine is a wonderful verse. In it we have the simplicity of the Gospel, "I am the door;" the exclusiveness of the Gospel, "By me," the conditions of the Gospel, "Enter in;" the certainty, "Be saved;" the liberty, "Go in and out;" the provision, "Find pasture."

The true acceptance of Jesus leads not to a life of fear and constraint but to the perfect liberty of a child, satisfaction in green pastures (Ps. 23; 2) that never fail (Rev. 7:16-17). The world's richest pasture lands are bleak and barren wildernesses in comparison with this. Christ is the door to other things not mentioned in this lesson (See John 14:6; Eph. 2:18; Rom. 5:1-2; Heb. 10:19-22). By him we enter the room of the knowledge of God. The Christian's business is to know God and to make him known.

II. Jesus, the Good Shepherd (vv. 10-18). It is not enough to be a door. A door has no volition. It cannot leave its place. A shepherd can go in and out. A false Christ and false shepherd are really thieves and robbers who come to "Steal and kill and destroy." On the other hand, Jesus' mission was a glorious one, "I came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." As a good Shepherd (1) he has courage (v. 12). Jesus was not only willing, but actually did give his life for the sheep. He had love for all of the sheep, and was willing to seek the lost (Matt. 18:12). He also had confidence, due to his knowledge of God (v. 14). This is not audacity but quiet confidence due to experience. He knows the proper pastures. He knows where to find water for the sheep. He knows the dangers and pitfalls along the pathway. He knows how to direct our efforts. Sunday school teachers who are following in the steps of the master, and who perform the acts of a good shepherd, must pay the price of knowledge. (2) Jesus had character (v. 15). He was right in the sight of God, but in order to be right in the sight of God he must also be right in the sight of men. God expects results. The church expects results from us. The parents who trust their children to our teaching expect results. A sheep does not live for itself. It lives for others. Unless it produces wool, and is good for meat, it has existed in vain; so God, man and the church expect of us, as undershepherds, that we shall produce results. This we do not have to do in our own strength for any of us may have the life which is "abundant" and "exceeding" and "beyond measure." The question is, have we this superabundant life? (See I Pet. 1:8; John 1:15; Col. 1:19; Eph. 3:16-19).

Doctor Torrey has called our attention to ten points about the good Shepherd. (1) He knows the sheep. (2) He is known by his sheep. (3) He has a personal interest in his sheep, calls each by name (v. 3). (4) He leadeth them on. (5) He thrusts forth the laggard sheep (v. 4). (6) He overlooks none; all are his own (v. 4 R. V.). (7) He goeth before them. He has trodden every step of the way that they must take. (8) He careth for the sheep (v. 13). (9) He layeth down his life for the sheep (vv. 11 and 15). (10) Giveth eternal and abundant life to the sheep (vv. 10, 28, 29).

Jesus has sheep outside of Israel (v. 16). When these are brought in they will all become one fold (Eph. 2:14, 15; Gal. 3:28). It is through hearing his voice that they are to be brought. The laying down of his life was a voluntary act on his part, but it was performed in obedience to the father's will (See Chap. 6:38; 15:10). Jesus intended that his relation to his followers should be exactly like that which bound himself to the Father (See Chap. 17:21-23).

This love of the Good Shepherd led him to die for our sins, and to be raised for our justification.

AUSTRIA BREAKS WITH AMERICA

UNDER PRESSURE OF GERMANY DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH U. S. SEVERED.

WAR DECLARATION TO FOLLOW

Following Break All Austrian Merchant Vessels in American Harbors Were Seized.

Washington. — Austria - Hungary, ranging herself unreservedly with Germany, has severed diplomatic relations with the United States, precipitating a situation which generally is expected here to lead to war.

Baron Erich Zwiedinek, the Austrian charge, asked the state department for passports for himself, his staff and the Austrian consular force in this country, and simultaneously American minister Stovall reported from Berne that Austria had announced the break in relations to the American embassy.

Immediately the department ordered the seizure of all Austrian merchant vessels in American harbors. The Austrian crews were taken off and sent to immigration stations and American guards put on board. The measure was explained as purely one for police caution, but it is realized that it may be interpreted by Austria as an act of war. In a similar situation after the break with Germany no ships were seized until a state of war actually had been declared.

Whether Bulgaria and Turkey are preparing to follow is unknown, but officials generally believe that sooner or later they will follow. Bulgarian Minister Panaretoff called and Secretary Lansing to ask if this government had any information from Sofia, but was told none had been received. Both Bulgaria and Turkey are believed here to be weary of the war, but German domination of the central European alliances is expected to drive them, as it drove Austria, to a break with Germany's new enemy.

RICHARD OLNEY IS DEAD

Once Secretary of State Passes Away at Age of 82.

Boston.—Richard Olney, statesman, once Secretary of State and always a noted student of international affairs, died at his home in the Fenway.

The end came after a protracted period of intense suffering which had failed, however, to shake the courage of good humor that had marked his 82 years, or to divert his mind from the intense interest which he had maintained in America's quarrel with Germany. Three days ago he lapsed into semi-consciousness with a smile on his face. He had just been advised of the President's war message to Congress and his joy was unbounded. It was the consummation of his most earnest hope.

TO INSIST ON CONSCRIPTION

Summoning Men to Colors By Draft Necessary, Says Wilson.

Washington. — President Wilson threw the weight of his personal influence into the scales in an effort to overcome opposition in Congress to the administration army plans based on the draft system.

Summoning Chairman Dent of the House military committee to the White House, the President made it clear that he believes the safety of the nation hangs on the action of Congress in this regard.

In his action the President recognized the fact that there may develop a strong feeling in Congress in favor of adhering to the old volunteer system and sought to bring home to Mr. Dent, one of those who holds that view, the lesson to be drawn from the great war into which the United States now has been plunged and which all point, military advisers of the government declare, to the absolute necessity of facing the issue squarely and summoning men to the colors by draft.

Jacksonville Pier Burns.

Jacksonville, Fla.—One of the New Piers of the Clyde Line Steamship Company was destroyed by fire here. A second pier damaged, and a lighter laden with rosin and considerable freight burned. The steamer Huron, lying in the slip, was moved to safety. The origin o fthe fire was unknown and, although there were many rumors as to how it started, the police could find no one who could give a clear account of its cause. The loss was estimated by company officials at $150,000.

STOP CALOMEL! TAKE DODSON'S LIVER TONE

New Discovery! Takes Place of Dangerous Calomel—It Puts Your Liver To Work Without Making You Sick—Eat Anything—It Can Not Salivate—Don't Lose a Day's Work!

I discovered a vegetable compound that does the work of dangerous, sickening calomel and I want every reader of this paper to try a bottle and if it doesn't straighten you up better and quicker than salivating calomel just go back to the store and get your money.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your thirty feet of bowels of the sour bile and constipation poison which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable.

I guarantee that one spoonful of this harmless liquid liver medicine will relieve the headache, biliousness, coated tongue, ague, malaria, sour stomach or any other distress caused by a torpid liver as quickly as a dose of vile, nauseating calomel, besides it will not make you sick or keep you from a day's work. I want to see a bottle of this wonderful liver medicine in every home here.

Calomel is poison—it's mercury—it attacks the bones, often causing rheumatism. Calomel is dangerous. It sickens—while my Dodson's Liver Tone is safe, pleasant and harmless. Eat anything afterwards, because it can not salivate. Give it to the children because it doesn't upset the stomach or shock the liver. Take a spoonful tonight and wake up feeling fine and ready for a full day's work.

Get a bottle! Try it! If it doesn't do exactly what I say, tell your dealer to hand your money back. Every druggist and store keeper here knows me and knows of my wonderful discovery of a vegetable medicine that takes the place of dangerous calomel.—Adv.

He Knew.

A supervising principal recently was testing some children in reading and, in order to know whether they interpreted correctly, asked the meaning of different words. One word which promised difficulty was "christened." When asked, none could tell its meaning. In order to lead up to its meaning the supervisor asked: "Well, what do they do when a baby's born?"

One urchin, whose home must have had a recent visit from Mr. Stork, popped up and said, "They weigh it."

WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

"I don't know."

"But what do you hear?"

"Some say it's going to throw a lot of brunettes back on the matrimonial market."

Old Looks?

(BY DR. L. H. SMITH)

Persons suffering from too much uric acid in the system frequently look older than they should. They age faster and the appearance of gray hair or baldhead in early years is, indeed, often a sign of uric acid. The face appears lean and haggard, lines and wrinkles appearing in young men or women.

The best way to combat this premature age and the obstruction to the arteries and faulty circulation is of the simplest: Drink copiously of pure water between meals. This will not make you fat, as it is only the water taken with the meals that fattens. Obtain at any drug store a package of Anuric, double strength, which is to be taken before meals, in order to expel the uric acid from the system. The painful effects of backache, lumbago, rheumatism, gout, due to uric acid in the blood should quickly disappear after treatment with Anuric.

Men Welcome Mother's Friend

The husband is often worried over the condition of his wife during her period of expectancy. The thought that he is helpless to relieve her physical suffering and discomfort causes him great distress.

"Mother's Friend" is a safe external lubricant which penetrates to the fine network of nerves beneath the skin of the abdomen. It has a marked tendency to relieve the muscular strain to which these broad, flat abdominal muscles are subjected.

If husbands will secure for the expectant mother a bottle of "Mother's Friend" from their druggist, they will find that they have aided to a very great degree in relieving much of the discomfort during pregnancy and pain at the crisis.

The mother should apply "Mother's Friend" every night and morning, right up until the time of giving birth to the child. By aiding nature in its pre-natal work the mother will experience much less pain.

Every mother should have the free book prepared for users of "Mother's Friend." It concerns her health and well-being during and after the crisis. Write to Bradfield Regulator Company, Dept. D. 554 Atlanta, Ga. Get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today.

Aims And Ideals of the High School Teacher

An Address Delivered Before the Alabama Educational Association, Montgomery, April 5th.

H. Clifford McDonald.

Our education has become universal so far as individuals are concerned, but it is yet far from universal with the respect to the interests represented in the courses of study.

The inclination of all people of all classes is to be educated. The recent and growing demand that the policy of this education shall be administered with at least some reference to the probable occupation of the student, and to the development of the major activities, has raised new and fundamental questions as to the real object of our education. What are we educating for? What ideal is the goal to be attained? These questions must be answered in the platform of our educational policies, and in the administration of our schools.

Among all the purposes that our education may be expected to serve, it is perfectly clear that individual and community efficiency is paramount; and in order to attain that we must vitalize and idealize our courses of study to the end that we may have few schools with many courses of study rather than money schools with few courses of study. We must in our teaching get away from the fossilized ideal that we are training our boys and girls to live at some future time. They are living now. They must work and are at work now. They are confronted by real life conditions now. They are citizens of the kingdom of humanity now. Their life touches their real problems now. They must meet responsibility now just as truly as when they shall have attained their three score and ten years. Let the teacher not strive to live before and on a plane above his pupils, but if he loves and praises the greatest opportunity given to men to serve, let him live with his pupils.

The modern high school is a new institution and its function is to educate its natural and local constituency in the duties of life. It is thoroughly a public institution, and it should serve its community directly through the masses of men and women who constitute their constituency. Their service to education is primary and fundamental.

The modern high school cannot rise above the aims and ideals of the high school teacher. As these schools are the most powerful educating and elevating agencies known to our complex and growing civilization, the supreme glory of opportunity is today first of all and above all, to the high school teacher. But if we do not rise to the occasion and meet and satisfy the demand, the civilization that we represent will hand over to another that which is ours, and another system of schools will rise that will do it.

It seems to me that, to put thought into our work, and then to put work into our thought and to make sure that both the work and the thought shall be in direct touch with the active life around us, to idealize existence, and to preserve these ideals by living and teaching them every day, this is both culture and the end of education.

Therefore, what are some of the ideals; what are some of the aims to actuate the life, to direct the energies of the teacher in this, the university of the masses? That his aim ought to be his ideal, and that the attainment of his ideal ought to be his aim, we all agree, but these aims and ideals must be both comprehensive and practical that they may be workable, to the end that while aiming at ideals, and idealizing aims we may not forget the very necessary compliment of every school, THE PUPIL AND HIS GROWTH. That this may be, every ideal ought to be shot through and through with the burden of thought concerning both teacher and pupil. Every aim must be projected into the future just far enough to guarantee progress but not far enough to sever connection with the life which moves the mind and spirit to do and to dare.

So then, as these are self-evident truths, what are some of the aims of the teacher for himself?

First, I would say a rich personality; second, an adequate professional equipment; third, a vitalized leadership; fourth, a reproachless life.

Some of the aims of the teacher for the student:

First, a living and lasting interest in the student; second, a quest for the student's needs and limitations; third, a sympathetic and thorough presentation of the subject; fourth, make truth and duty compelling to the student.

Ideals of the teacher for himself:

First, a vision of a transformed and unified humanity; second, a vision of universal truth; third, a complete and realized efficiency.

Ideals of the teacher for the pupil:

First, discovery and growth in every worthy possibility; second, a thorough and rational adaptation; third, life investment for humanity.

Now, it is evident that Icannot attempt in any measure to discuss this subject in the light of this outline. I can but touch it here and there. Perhaps the outline itself may worth more than what is being said from it. But in its larger aspects this subject touches vitally the whole race. Has humanity come limping through the ages of its present place in the sun? Why are we halt? why are we lame? It is for the want of a knowledge of ourselves and of the world in which we live? Knowledge is power and truth is freedom's handmaiden. Can we see a race cured of its ailments and superstition, ehibiting the image of God, in which man was made? The claims of ignorance and superstition forged in the centuries past and gone, can be made to give way to the unified effort of men and women with a vision of the perfect day. That day cannot be ushered in upon a race unprepared to receive it. But if we are to believe in any measure the revelation brought about in the last few years through the study of biology, we may hope in the near future to be able to evaluate the elements which make up the measure of existence, namely: heridity, environment, and personal effort.

From the wonderful strides made in invention, scientific research, economic achievement, and phylanthropy, in the last few decades, we are reminded that we have only just touched the hem of the garment that has shrouded nature's resources during the centuries. The wonderful resources and the adaptibility of earth and air and sea to man's needs and enjoyment, speak of God's beneficent kindness. These are but a feeble prophecy of what God has in store for His people, when they shall reach out and compel nature to yield out her secrets. God never intended for man to walk recumbent on the earth, but to be sun-crowned and to live above the fog, to think the thoughts of God and to march on toward the perfecting of the race.

The President of the great University said to me in conversation last year, "The man or woman who has not the missionary spirit ought not to attempt to teach school." Oh! brother teacher, how far are you willing to go that the other fellow may have a better chance than you. How much are you willing to sacrifice that the generation to follow may receive the interest on your investments? How much of time and of prayer and of thought do you give beyoud the demands of the law? Are you willing to invest your life with all its assets for humanity? Have we a message to carry? What does that message mean? Does it proclaim the birth of a new era? Does it shout forth to those in darkness that the new day, just being born, is freedom's greatest gift to any nation since people heard the message of the shepherds among Judea's hills some two thousand years ago. The golden dawn is upon us and as we grope in the uncertain amber light the quest is for leaders. Who shall lead us into the glorious dawn? 'Tis the teacher who sees the opportunity there is time and strives to be ready as the hour strikes. Another Moses must lead the hosts through the morasses of incompetency to the promised land where efficiency reigns. Man must and shall be free. God has decreed and the power of darkness can never succeed in thwarting the plans of the eternal God.

"The years of man are the looms of God let down from the place of the sun;
Wheron we are weaving always until the appointed task is done.
Weaving blindly but weaving surely,
each man for himself his fate.
We may not see how the right side looks, we can only weave and wait.
But looking above for the pattern,
no weaver need have fear;
Only let him look clear into heaven—
the perfect patern is there.
If he keeps the face of the Master forever and always in sight,
His weaving is sure to be perfect,
his work is sure to be right.
And at last when the task is ended, and the web is shown and turned,
He shall hear the voice of the Master;
It shall say unto him, "Well done".
And the white winged angel of heaven to bear him thence shall come down;
And God for his wage shall give him not coin but a golden crown."

GRAIN SEED TO FARMERS

Through the joint cooperation of business and government channels, it is expected to control the situation in each county in the state and throughout the entire South, so as to supply each former in the different counties, who is short of seed, with sufficient grain seed, to plant his 1917 crop, upon proper guarantee that the seed will be used for the specific purpose in hand.

An inquiry on this subject, addressed to Post Office Box 332, Clanton, will place the individual farmer in possession of information in this connection.

Eric Hart made a business trip to Deatsville Wednesday.

A WISE MEASURE

Modern warfare is conducted in a manner far different from that practiced in 1776. Equipment, provision and transportation have become such an important feature in war, that executive ability in handling of large problems is of no less importance than strategy and bravery upon the battle field. This fact has been recognized in the recent effort of the administration to call to its assistance some of the leading business men of the country. There should be similar recognition of present needs in congress by the appointment of a special committee, such as that proposed in the Weeks-Madden resolution, composed of men of both houses and of both political parties, but made up of men of experience in handling large enterprises which committee should give attention to war needs and war politics. During the Civil War a committee of that kind rendered the Lincoln administration valuable service in coordinating the work for the legislative and executive branches of the government, and now there should be no delay in effecting the organization of a similar committee.

THE GRAIN SITUATION OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

The marketing of the grain crop after it is produced is of the highest importance to our farmers. The national and state governments in these times of stress are cooperating to accomplish this result at satisfactory prices.

In this connection, it will be of interest to farmers and everyone who is raising even a little grain, that sufficient arrangements for works to handle all grain brought to Clanton, have been completed.

At a later date the Union-Banner will make further announcement, which will doubtless be of interest to all farmers. 4-9-4t.

WORK, FIGHT OR STARVE SAYS WADE

Raise Food Crops and Thereby Help Win the War for the U. S. A.

Wade's Weekly Letter, April 16, 1917

Food is the most important asset to the successful termination of war. History shows that more wars have been lost at the point of starvation than by the sword. Our country is at war and we must realize from the beginning that a well fed nation will be victorious and a starved nation is doomed to defeat, great privations and distress. Do not idle away your opportunities but get busy now, utilize all your spare time producing everything you can to feed yourself and to contribute your part to the ultimate success of the nation. This appeal is not only to the farmers and the common laborers but to the dignitaries as well. Lay aside your dignity and be a producer or shoulder a rifle and answer to your country's call. Are you a jelly fish or a patriot? If the red blood of patriotism flows through your heart, you will become either a priducer or a fighter.

"In the broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, be not like dumb driven cattle, be a hero in the strife."

The high prices and scarcity of food products at present make it imperative that we begin at once to increase production. One of the first things to begin with is garden vegetables and potatoes. Such products can be matured in the shortest period of time and should be grown in abundance. Sweet potato plants can be had now at $1.50 per thousand. If now set, the vines will furnish cuttings for additional acreage within a very few weeks. Cuttings may be set from now until July but the earlier the better.

The Irish potato is one of the country's best food crops. It is rather late for spring but a fall crop can and should be produced. The culls from the spring crop when harvested may be spread in a cool dry place. After they have seasoned about 3 weeks, they should be spread in a cool damp place until germination begins. They can be cut and planted in moist fertile soil and a splendid fall crop may be expected. The fall crop is not hard to keep over winter and makes ideal seed for the following spring.

It is estimated that the wheat crop will be fifteen million bushels short as compared with last year. It will be necessary to increase the corn crop in order to prevent a bread shortage, when the effect of the wheat shortage is added to the present high price of flour. By all means, increase your corn crop, using the best seed at your command. Plant velvet beans, peanuts and cow peas in abundance. They can be used as food or converted into meat through live stock.

Increase your poultry, hogs, and cattle by better care and breeding. Increase the supply of meat by producing larger and better animals. This can be done by growing more feed and better feeding.

Every idle man and every idle day is a loss to you and your country. Work, fight or starve. It is up to you.

GOOD RESULTS OF WISE POLICY

Reports from Havana report that there will be a large crop of "Cuba Libre" for exportation. The seed sown by McKinley was futile. The plant hoed by Roosevelt yields its bounty to Wilson. Cuba will assist us in freeing the German people from Hohenzollern despotism.

Better Farming in the South

WILLIAMSON PLAN OF CORN CULTURE

Has Proven Successful in Coastal Plains And Sandy Loam Soils

J. N. HARPER, Agronomist

E. McIver Williamson, of Darlington, S. C., has originated a plan of corn culture which has been adopted by a great number of farmers residing in the Coastal Plains of South Carolina and Georgia with excellent results.

Since a number of inquiries have come to the Farm Service Bureau about methods of corn culture it is considered advisable to recommend the Williamson method to farmers in the coastal region or those who have sandy loam soils. The following is an outline of the method in Mr. Williamson's own words:

"Break the land broadcast during the winter, using a two horse plow or, better, a disc plow. Bed with turnplow six-foot rows, leaving a five-inch balk. When ready to plant, break this out with a scooter. Plow deeply in the bottom of this furrow, using a Dixie with wing taken off. Ridge then on this furrow with same plow still going deep. Run the corn planter on this ridge, dropping one grain every five or six inches.

"Plant early, as soon as frost danger is past. Early planting is especially needful on very rich lands where stalks can not otherwise be kept from growing too large.

"Give the first working with a harrow or any plow that will not cover the plant. For second working use ten or twelve inch sweep. Corn should not be worked again until the growth has been so retarded, and the stalk so hardened that it will never grow too large. This is the most difficult point in the whole process. Experience and judgment are required to know just how much the stalk should be stunted, and plenty of nerve is required to hold back your corn when your neighbors, who fertilized at planting time and cultivated rapidly, have corn twice the size of yours.

"When you are convinced that your corn has been sufficiently humiliated, you may begin to make the ear. The plants should now be from twelve to eighteen inches high.

"Put half your fertilizer (this being the first used at all) in the old sweep furrow on both sides of every other middle and cover by breaking out this middle with turn plow. About one week later treat the other middle the same way. Within a few days side corn in first middle with sixteenth-inch sweep. Put all your nitrate of soda in this furrow, if less than 150 pounds. If more, use one-half of it. Cover with one furrow of turn plow, then sow peas in this middle broadcast at the rate of at least one bushel to acre, and finish breaking out.

"In a few days side corn in other middle with same sweep, put balance of nitrate of soda in this furrow, if it has been divided, cover with turn plow, sow peas, and break out. This lays by your crop with a good bed and plenty of dirt around your stalk. This should be from June 10th to 20th, unless the season is very late, and corn should be hardly bunching for tassel.

"Lay by early. More corn is ruined by late plowing than by lack of plowing. This is when the ear is hurt.

"The stalks thus raised are very small, and do not require anything like the moisture even in proportion to size than is necessary for large, sappy stalks. They may, therefore, be left thicker in the row. Stalks can not make large yields except extremely favorable seasons, for they cannot stand a lack of moisture. Corn raised by this method should not be over seven feet high, and the ear should be near the ground."

For Piedmont Section.

For the Piedmont section the Williamson Plan can not be closely followed but must be modified. Half of the fertilizer should be applied before planting. The other half should be applied not later than when corn is knee high. The nitrate of soda should then be applied when the corn is waist high.

Raise Corn As War Measure

In response to the call for food supplies in view of war condition, the Southern farmer should plant as large a crop of corn as possible. He should fertilize liberally and cultivate thoroughly so that maximum crops may be produced. It is recommended that from 500 to 600 pounds of fertilizer be applied on Piedmont soils and from 800 to 1,000 to coastal plain soils.

STATEWIDE MOVEMENT FOR INCREASED PRODUCTION

Governor Henderson has named Mr. W. M. Adams, of Clanton, to act in conjunction with others, to be selected by him, in promoting in Chilton County, the statewide movement of increased production in all channels of commercial and indusrial and agricultural activity. The central committee for this purpose in Chilton County will be promptly completed and announced.

Suggestions from anyone on a postal card, addressed either to Mr. Adams or to the Union-Banner, giving the names and post office address of five farmers, in each Beat of Chilton County to act as Beat Committeemen, will greatly aid in this work.

It is hoped that through these channels, necessary seed may be procured for those, who in good faith, are absolutely in need of them for the purpose of 1917 planting.

The aid and encouragement and cooperation of everyone interested in commercial and industrial and agricultural work is desired and solicited in this movement.

High class mule jack will make spring season at "Bird-Wood" farm near Bibb, Chilton, and Shelby County line. Colts to stand and suck, $10 Jack handled by owner.

PRESIDENT MAKES APPEAL TO NATION

Every Man and Woman Urged To Strive To Make Country a Unit For Preservation Of Ideals

SUPREME TEST FOR CITIZENS

Urges People To Show Patriotism By Planting Food Crops To Help Feed The Allies

Washington.—President Wilson, in an address to his fellow-countrymen, called upon every American citizen—man, woman and child—to join together to make the nation a unit for the preservation of its ideals and for triumph of democracy in the world war.

"The supreme test of the nation has come," says the address. "We must all speak, act and serve together."

The president urges all the people to concentrate their energies, practice economy, prove unselfishness and demonstrate efficiency.

He appealed to the farmers, with emphasis on his words, and particularly to the farmers of the South, to plant foodstuffs. The Southern farmers, he said, "can show their patriotism in no better or more convincing way than by resisting the great temptation of the present price of cotton and helping feed the nations and the peoples everywhere fighting for their liberties and our own." Among other things, the president said:

"The entrance of our own beloved country into the grim and terrible war for democracy and human rights which has shaken the world creates so many problems of national life and action which call for immediate attention and consideration and settlement that I hope you will permit me to address to you a few words of earnest counsel and appeal with regard to them.

"We are rapidly putting our navy upon an effective war footing and are about to create and equip a great army, but these are the simplest parts for the great task to which we have addressed ourselves. There is not a single selfish element, so far as I can see, in the cause we are fighting for. We are fighting for what we believe and wish to be the rights of mankind and for the future peace and security of the world. To do this great thing worthily and successfully, we must devote ourselves to the service without regard to profit or material advantage and with an energy and intelligence that will rise to the level of the enterprise itself. We must realize to the full how great the task and how many things, how many kinds and elements of capacity and service and self-sacrifice it involves.

"These, then, are the things we must do, and do well, besides fighting—the things without which mere fighting would be useless."

AMERICAN GUNBOAT INTERNED BY TURKS

Scorpion Given 24 Hours To Leave Constantinople; Failing To Do So, Was Seized

Amsterdam.—The American guard ship Scorpion has been interned at Constantinople by the Turkish government, according to a news dispatch from the Turkish capital. It says that the Scorpion was given twenty-four hours to leave the harbor, but was unable to do so and was therefore interned "in accordance with The Hague convention."

The Scorpion is a converted yacht and has been stationed at Constantinople as a dispatch boat for the American embassy since November, 1900. A year ago members of the Scorpion's crew were reported to have clashed with German soldiers in Constantinople, and in March of this year the Italian newspapers printed reports that the Scorpion had been blown up. Constantinople dispatches denied this report. The commander of the Scorpion is Commander J. P. Morton.

Makes Attack On German Legation

Buenos Aires.—The German legation and consulate here have been attacked by a mob, as have the newspapers Deutsche la Plata Zeitung and La Union. The police dispersed the manifestants.

Publicity Board Created By President

Washington.—Control of publicity in connection with the government's war activities was placed by President Wilson in the hands of a committee of public information, whose task will be to safeguard secrets of value to the enemy and at the same time to see that all affairs of the nation are laid before the people as fully and frankly as possible. The committee named by the president is made up of Secretaries Daniels, Lansing and Baker, who recommended the step, with George Creel, as civilian chairman.

American Airplanes Equal The Best

New York.—American airplanes, type for type, are "equal to the best European products," while American fighting machines are much safer than the European, according to an official report made public here of an investigation conducted by the advisory committee on aeronautics which is co-operating with Rear Admiral Usher in the organization of the reserve forces of the third naval district. The investigation forms the groundwork of a plan providing for aerial defenses, which cannot be divulged.

MUNITIONS PLANT WRECKED

112 Persons Meet Death And Many Injured When Ammunition Factory Blows Up

Chester, Pa.—One hundred and twelve persons — most of them women and girls — are known to have lost their lives and 121 were injured by a series of terrific explosions in the shrapnel building of the Eddystone Ammunition corporation at Eddystone, one mile from Chester. Many of the injured were fatally hurt, and it is feared the final death list will reach one hundred and fifty.

How any of the three hundred or more employees in the building, in which was stored approximately thirty thousand shells, escaped, is a mystery, as there was scarcely a fragment of the structure left intact. Fire added to the horror and most of the bodies were so badly charred that identification was impossible.

Rumors of plots and arrests were numerous after the disaster, but all lacked confirmation. Detectives reported the explosion apparently was purely accidental and advanced the theory that shrapnel placed near a radiator might have caused it. An official of the company, however, said there never was more than half a ton of powder in the building and that this never was in bulk.

The explosion occurred in what is known as the "10-F" building, a two-story structure, 75x300 feet. In this building time fuses were prepared, more than eighty per cent of the workers being women and girls. Probably fifty men and boys were employed in the building at the time of the blast and most of them escaped.

The utmost confusion followed the explosion. A heavy pall of smoke darkened the entire town which has a population of about 5,000, but this was soon lightened by the flames from the burning building.

Rescue squads formed and a call for assistance was sent to Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington and other nearby points.

The entire Chester fire department responded and ambulances from Philadelphia and Chester were soon at the scene.

A strong guard of Pennsylvania militiamen and cadets from the Pennsylvania Military academy was thrown around the plant and every one except those assisting in the rescue work were forbidden to approach.

Fifteen minutes after the explosion the dead and injured were being taken out. Several bodies were fished out of the marshes two hundred yards from the destroyed building and it is feared that others may have been blown into the river, still farther away.

The Eddystone Ammunition corporation, which was organized originally by interests identified with the Baldwin Locomotive works and operated by those interests, was taken over last September by a commission representing the British and Russian governments. Since that time this commission has been carrying on the manufacture of munitions for the entente allies.

Governors To Name Defense Councils

Washington.—The council of national defense has requested state governors to name state defense councils to work with the national council in furthering preparedness plans. At the same time it asked the governors to delay starting military censuses until uniform measures are prepared by the war department and the census bureau. Already some states have named defense councils and some have begun taking censuses of their citizens liable for military service. Their value to the war department, it is said, will depend on their uniformity, and uniformity plans probably will not be worked out for some time little time. State defense councils, Director Gifford of the national council said, can give invaluable assistance in organizing for effective prosecution of the war. The governors were asked to give the councils broad powers and to make them representative of the state's resources.

Russ Government Grateful To Wilson

Washington.—President Wilson received a cablegram from Foreign Minister Milukoff of Russia, declaring that the active participation of the United States in the world war will accelerate the victory of the entente allies. He expressed gratitude for the prompt recognition by the United States of the new Russian government.

Great Losses For Germans In Battle

London.—In two days' fighting along the front from Lens to the southeast of Arras, the Germans suffered great losses in men and guns. More than eleven thousand prisoners, among them 235 officers, were taken, and 100 guns, 60 trench mortars and 163 machine guns have fallen into the hands of the British. Some of the larger guns are of 8-inch caliber. The advance of the British over the entire front was made to a depth of from two to six miles, the penetration being greatest east and southeast of Arras.

"New York" Hits Mine Off Liverpool

Liverpool.—The American line steamer New York bound from New York for Liverpool struck a mine when nearing her destination. The explosion occurred on the port bow of the vessel and distress signals were immediately sent out. Nearby vessels went to the assistance of the liner and all her passengers were taken off and brought to the landing stage here. It is found that the damage, confined to the forefront of the vessel, is not serious, and the New York went into the pier under her own steam.

BRITONS STORM GERMAN DEFENSES

Fiercely Striking On Wide Front General Haig's Troops Sweep All Before Them Near St. Quentin

MANY LARGE GUNS TAKEN

British Gains, According To The Military Experts, Almost Certain To Result In German Retreat

New York.—On a twelve-mile front northeast of Arras and one a nine-mile front northwest of St. Quentin, the forces of Field Marshal Haig have shattered the German defenses and forced the Germans to retire.

North and east of the Vimy ridge in the Arras region the British seized six villages from the Germans during a successful move forward from the Scarpe northward to near Loos. London says a footing also has been gained in the German trenches northeast of Lens, a mining and railroad center.

Vimy, Petit Vimy, Givenchy-en-Gohelle and Angres, all north of the Vimy ridge, and the villages of Willeval and Bailleul, east of the ridge, were taken in the advance All these villages are on the slopes of the ridge.

South of the Arras-Cambral road it is announced the British forces have gained ground east of Wancourt and are astride the Hindenburg line as far as a point seven miles southeast of Arras.

Prisoners taken since the beginning of the battle of Arras total more than thirteen thousand, says London. Field Marshal Haig also has captured 166 guns and other war material.

Northwest of St. Quentin the British advanced on a line between Hargicourt and Metz-en-Couture, capturing two woods, the Sart farm and the village of Gouveacourt. This advance enlarged the salient in the German lines between St. Quentin and Cambrai, and outflanked the Havrincourt wood on the south.

Vessel Shelled And Member Of The Crew Wounded—Great Excitement In Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires.—The Argentine sailing ship Monte Protegido has been sunk off the European coast, according to an official announcement made here.

The announcement was made by the minister of foreign affairs, who said he had received official information to this effect.

The government has ordered a complete inquiry into the sinking of the ship.

According to the newspapers, the ship was sunk by a German submarine.

It is announced that the ship was twice fired on by the guns of the submarine and that one member of the crew was wounded.

After the news became known an excited crowd marched through the streets shouting "Down with the German assassins." Groups of students paraded the streets singing patriotic songs.

Two German newspapers published in Buenos Aires, in view of threats by the crowds, closed their offices.

Bolivia Breaks With Germany

La Paz, Bolivia.—The German minister and his staff have been handed their passports by the Bolivian government with a note declaring that diplomatic relations between Bolivia and Germany have been severed.

The Bulgarian government has dispatched troops to Nish to suppress the disorders, which are said to have reached grave proportions.

WAR COMMISSION TO U. S.

Foreign Minister Balfour Of Great Britain, Heads The Commission To Visit This Country

Washington.—Assembly in Washington within a few weeks of a great international war council was foreshadowed by an announcement from the state department that a British commission, headed by Arthur J. Balfour, minister of foreign affairs, is expected to arrive within ten days to discuss with the government here questions connected with the conduct of the war. In addition to the foreign minister, the commission will include Admiral de Clair of the British navy, General Bridges of the army and the governor of the Bank of England, attended by a numerous staff.

This was as far as the announcement made by the state department goes, but it was learned authoritatively that a French commission composed of officials and officers equally as distinguished as the British representatives also will be in Washington about the same time.

It is not known definitely whether any other of the allied powers will send commissioners to Washington, but it is assumed that owing to the difficulties in passage and the probable delay, the interests of these governments will be confided to their resident ambassadors.

Beyond the statement that the object of the commission is to discuss generally questions of policy connected with the war no information was given at the state department. It was made clear, however, that in no way will the United States government depart from the traditional policy of avoiding anything in the nature of political alliances, though of course, that does not exclude full and intimate military and naval co-operation in the prosecution of the war.

UNITED STATES ARMOR PLANT TO WEST VIRGINIA

The $12,700,000 Concern For Which Many Cities Fought Will Be Located At Charleston

Washington.—The government's armor plate and projectile factories, for which congress appropriated $12,700,000, will be built at Charleston, W. Va., a location recommended by a special navy board as offering an ideal combination of military safety and easy access to manufacturing materials.

In announcing the selection Secretary Daniels said construction work would begin at once and would be hurried to completion. He also made public the report of the board personally inspected facilities of 29 cities chosen out of more than one hundred which offered sites.

For the armor plant an appropriation of $11,000,000 is available, but a greater sum may be asked of congress before construction is finished. The initial appropriation for the projectile plant is $1,700,000. Charleston offered several acceptable sites free of cost to the government, and one of these will be selected for the factories themselves while one of the protected gorges nearby will be taken over as a proving field.

Strikes Are Barred During The War

Washington.—No strikes or labor disputes of any kind during the war is the program of the labor committee of the Council of National Defense's advisory commission, headed by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. In a report made public the committee declares the "defense and safety of the nation must be the first consideration of all patriotic citizens," and proposes that whenever emergencies arise requiring a change of standards, such changes should be made only after investigation and approval by the Council of National Defense.

Diabolical Plot Causes Explosion

Chester, Pa.—A statement by a high official of the Eddystone Munition corporation placed the blame of the disastrous explosion, the worst in the history of the state, on a disloyal employee, who is thought to have sacrificed his life with the 116 known dead, most of whom were girls and young women. This amazing development spurred on the investigations of the catastrophe already under way by federal, state, county, local officials and officers of the company. Numerous suspects were rounded up here.

Two More Countries Join The U. S.

Washington.—Without formally announcing abandonment of their neutrality, two more Latin-American republics, Argentine and Costa Rica have given assurances of their moral support for the United States in the war against Germany. Argentina, choosing a middle course between those of Brazil and Chile, her sister nations in the influential A B C trio, has notified the state department that she "recognizes the justice" of this country's stand against German aggression.

One member, Representative London of New York, the only socialist in Congress, voted "present." Owing to general pairs and absentees only 389 votes were recorded for the bill, but both Democratic Leader Kitchin and Republican Leader Mann announced that all of their members would have voted affirmatively if they had been present.

Value of Good Roads Vigorously Sressed in the Several Addresses Made.

Delegates from nearly every state in the Union are in attendance and taking part in this gathering of good roads boosters. This association was organized in Birmingham April 11th and 12th and is credited with having started the movement to secure Federal Aid for the building of good roads throughout the nation. The value of good roads to the individual, the State and the nation was vigorously stressed in the several addresses made by men who have been prominent in the good roads movement.

The Association plans to push the campaign already started to induce the next Congress to make an annual appropriation of fifty million dollars for good roads on a continuous basis, thereby eliminating the necessity of going before every session of Congres to make a fight for an appropriation for good roads.

Girard Liquor is to Be Destroyed.

The Supreme Court decided the Girard liquor cases recently, holding that the liquor seized there last summer is contraband and shall be publicly destroyed, affirming the decision of the Russell County Circuit Court in each of the six cases tried.

The defendants were: A. L. Goulat, C. C. Phelps, the Theatrical Club, Ben Edmonds, E. L. Richards and J. E. Kittrell. The total value of the liquor which is condemned is given at $250,000.

In considering the question of a possible appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, it is believed that the only case in which a hearing might be granted by that court, would be in that of the Theatrical Club against he State, which based its defense on the theory that the liquor seized in Girard was in transit between Columbus, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla.

The Circuit Court of Russell County will be promptly notified of the decision by the Clerk of the Supreme Court. The destruction of the liquor probably will follow shortly.

Urge More Food Crops.

State Commissioner of Agriculture Wade, who recently returned from a conference in St. Louis held at the call of Secretary Houston of the Department of Agricultulre, announces that the mobilization of the farm forces of the country and conservation of the food supply was strongly urged in the conference, which was attended by agricultural leaders from all parts of the United States.

It was proposed at the meeting that all men rejected for army service for physical defect and all men who are unemployed to be included in the conscription bill, and those who at the same time are able to do farm labor shall be mobilized by the government placed in uniform and sent to work the farms.

Food Crops Planned.

Goodwater.—Never has there been such a demand for cattle, hogs and other livestock in this section. A number of farmers have sold hogs and cattle in such numbers to receive more cash that will be gotten from the crop that they have planned. But little cotton is going to be planted. The general cry that is going out for foodstuffs is causing a majority of the planters in this section to decide on foodstuffs as a crop. Corn is now being sold here for $1.65 a bushel, and with the price daily advancing

LESSON FOR APRIL 22

JESUS ANOINTED AT BETHANY.

LESSON TEXT—John 12:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—She hath done what she could.—Mk. 14:8.

This is a lesson of Jesus in the home. It occurred at the beginning of passion week. We have before us the master; the worker, Martha; the worshiper, Mary; the witness, Lazarus; the traitor, Judas, and the people without. An unconscious bit of wisdom fell from the lips of that good housewife who exclaimed, "How much better my neighbors' houses look when I have my windows clean." Too much we are looking through the eyes of selfishness. Out of this lesson let us learn to look through unselfish eyes.

I. Unjust Criticism (vv. 1-6). It is six days before Jesus' last Passover. The accounts of Matthew and Mark suggest it to have been within two days, because they mentioned this feast after telling of the conspiracy of the chief priests and elders with Judas, who came to his determination to sell his Master after the reprimand given him on this occasion.

(1) The Value of Good Deeds. Jesus did not forget, in the supreme hour of his life, the friends whom he loved. To bring them some further spiritual gifts, he had come to their home in Bethany. Doubtless he also had in mind the desire to nourish the faith which had been kindled in the hearts of all by the resurrection of Lazarus, just as he returned to Cana after having performed his first miracle (John 4:54). Jesus was Very God of Very God, yet he was very much of a real man; therefore he enjoyed the pleasures of home as much as other men, and the joys of kinship and brotherhood.

(2) The Wealth of Good Deeds. Out of her love Mary expended $51, probably her whole treasure, in the purchase of this alabaster box, and put it aside to use it upon him at the proper time. We do not think that she stopped to calculate the cost of this ointment. Love never estimates value. Her deed proved a safer guide of conduct than the calculating prudence of Judas and the other disciples (see Matt. 26:8). Such deeds are always looked upon with suspicion. The Iscariots usually are the leaders in criticizing the actions of others. Envy lay at the bottom of their criticism, but good deeds are unconscious, for we read that "the house was filled with odor."

(3) A Standard of Good Deeds (Mark 14:8); "She did what she could," and we have also the record of good deeds, a memorial to her (Mark 14:9). A large number of people who never give of their own to the poor nor to the kingdom of God are willing to criticize others who do give out of the gratitude of their loving hearts.

II. Gracious Commendation (vv. 7-11). Jesus praised where his disciples and Judas criticized. The poor they always had with them (Mark 14:7). This must have been a challenge that evidently they had not attended to the poor as they should. Jesus also tells them frankly that whatever they do for him they must do speedily. Jesus' judgment upon Judas is a rebuke of the disciples; his exposure of the sophistry of the critics and of their subtlety is suggestive. Upon Mary's act he bestowed the highest possible praise. "She hath done what she could." That is all that is asked of anyone (II Cor. 8:12). Such commendation as Jesus bestowed upon Mary he bestowed upon no other, and his wonderful predictions concerning her (Matt. 26:13) have been literally fulfilled. Jesus' judgment upon Mary is also suggestive. He shielded her, "let her alone;" He approved her works as being good, and he interpreted her innermost purpose in the act which she had performed. This outward act was literally the pouring forth of her heart's adoration and worship. Martha was in part taken up with her household service. Lazarus was in part taken up with his enjoyment of the presence of Jesus, but Mary was wholly taken up with Jesus himself. Does the record surprise us: "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also which she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her?" Judas, under the judgment of Jesus, was stung (Matt. 26:14) and hurries at once to the enemies of Jesus to strike a bargain with them for the betrayal of his Lord though he did not secure from these enemies the equivalent of what she had poured upon him. Christ will be no man's debtor. He takes the poor offerings we lay before him, and crowns them with the richest reward. Mary's gift of ointment received words of commendation of which she never dreamed, and a reward far beyond her fondest hope, and has been the fount of countless deeds rich with love. Many people had gathered, not only for Jesus' sake, but that they might see Lazarus also. He drew people because of what Jesus had done for him, yet he drew them to Jesus. This brought him also under condemnation, for we must share the bitterness of the foes of Jesus.

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver and bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment giv

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Adv.

PRAISES CARDUI AS GOD-SEND

To Women. This Alabama Lady's Sincere Expression of Her Experience Will Interest You.

Quinton, Ala.—Mrs. Rebecca Cox, of this place, writes: "About 22 years ago I had been in bad health for a year or more, and it didn't look as though I could get well. . . . The beginning of this trouble, I overdid myself. I began suffering with my back . . . it hurt so. . . . The doctors said it was change of life . . . and an operation was all that would help me. I felt I couldn't have that and my husband did not believe in patent medicines. When I asked him to get Cardui, he said, 'that's just a dollar thrown away,' but to please me, he would get it. I suppose there was a year I was never hungry and after taking Cardui, my husband said 'I had better order a carload of corn and meat with it.' After one bottle I felt better. I took about a dozen bottles. I have never had an operation . . . I have worked in the fields, done our washing, ironing and cooking; we have two orhpan children added to our family for which I do as my own. I can praise Cardui as a God-send to women."

Cardui, the woman's tonic, is for sale at all druggists. Get it when in need of a good, reliable, strengthening tonic. Give it a fair trial.—Adv.

What the Doctor Knows

KIDNEYS MUST BE RIGHT TO INSURE HEALTH.

Few people realize to what extent their health depends upon the condition of the kidneys.

The physician in nearly all cases of serious illness, makes a chemical analysis of the patient's urine. He knows that unless the kidneys are doing their work properly, the other organs cannot readily be brought back to health and strength.

When the kidneys are neglected or abused in any way, serious results are sure to follow. According to health statistics, Bright's Disease, which is really an advanced form of kidney trouble, caused nearly ten thousand deaths in one year, in the State of New York alone. Therefore, it is particularly necessary to pay more attention to the health of these important organs.

An ideal herbal compound that has had remarkable success as a kidney remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

The mild and healing influence of this preparation, in most cases, is soon realized, according to sworn statements and verified testimony of those who have used the remedy.

When your kidneys require attention, get Swamp-Root at once from any pharmacy. It is sold by every druggist in bottles of two sizes—50c and $1.00.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

The supports for a recently constructed New Zealand wharf include 20-ton concrete piles 100 feet long.

Send 10c to Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, for large trial package of Anuric for kidneys—cures backache.—Adv.

WILL THEY EVER LEARN?

Are there some persons in Chilton County who can or will never learn that they can't accomplish any creditable or decent success at anything by their devilish methods of kicking at all measures from the standpoint of personal prejudice or political enmity?

Such statistics are base and unsound and are indeed not bringing their promoters a very fair dividend on their investment. Why don't they see the weakness and wrong of such a way and muster the manhood and moral courage to quit it?

There are men in this county who conducted themselves in such a way on the recent bond issue question that it has proven a matter of disgust to the others in their own party. The individuals referred to made the serious mistake of trying to turn the matter into a partisan fight altogeher.

These erratic and unscruplous individuals believed that they could muddy the waters a little, holler, "Reynolds" and "Bossism" a few times, and literally set the woods on fire, and burn up bond issue, commissioners court and all, with Reynolds and Adams thrown in. But bless your soul, brothers, the people of this county are not such fools as you wish they were. There are things which are right or wrong, it matters not how Reynolds and Adams looks at them.

(But we will say here that on this question, as well as many others, they have seen the right way, and had courage enough to stand to the principles of justice.)

The fact that Judge Reynolds is today at the head of the county government it due to his broad view of the principles of right. He has always seen the proper things for the people in the correct light, and has had manhood enough to fight for them on a sound and sensible basis.

But the right or wrong of any proposition does not hinge on Reynold's magic word, as some try to make folks believe. If he had taken the wrong step on many questions as some have had the misfortune to do, he would today be sitting at the same seat of obscurity as other transgressors. The people of this county are, we are glad to say, free and independent. They are glad to follow the lead of Reynolds or any other man who will take up the banner of right and march in the ranks of the common interests. But they have got courage enough to very soon play the devil with those fellows who flop about here and yonder, toot any kind of old horn, just so it stinks with prejudice and malice. They have been giving such scheemers the black eye for a long time, and may God bless them with courage to continue in the same course from generation unto generation.

Men who are so tanked up with malace as some in this county are not worthy citizens. They are a dishonor to any political party under the sun, and are veritable hypocrits, mocking at any and everything for the sake of venting their spleen with jealousy and hatred.

The bond issue is right, therefore the people voted for it. We venture that there are as many in one party as in the other in either the advocates or opponents of the measure. Reynolds never made it right; neither did Judge Adams. True, they, together with many others, had the courage to declare themselves in favor of it, without any thought as to personalities, politics, or prejudice. The question would not have been made wrong if they had happened to be on the opposite side from what they were.

Truth, right, honesty and courage are all made by powers higher than the ability of any man in Chilton County. He who would come out in his might and espouse these things will always be received by the common mind of the multitude with approval. He who would seek to damper these things by prejudice and malice will be cast away by the same common opinion with scorn and disgraceful repudiation.

"THE ELOPMENT OF ELLEN"

The Senior Class play of the above title which was exhibited at the high school last Thursday night was indeed a most delightful specimen of amateur dramatic art. Attendance was good, and everyone present was intensely pleased with the performance. A nice sum was realized for the promotion of the high school annual.

Don't forget your Subscription.

THE MAJORITY CONSENT

In the result of the Bond Issue election Monday, we do not see any reason why there should be any tooting of horns for any particular party, on the one hand; nor for the drastic condemnation of any one on the other. We rather think we should devote ourselves to the congratulation of the whole people of the county in their good fortune of having a majority of the people express themselves in favor of giving the commissioners the requested privilege of issuing bonds to take care of the county's indebtedness.

While we do not indorse the views of those who voted against the proposition, we do respect their opinions in the matter ,and trust that their contentions were honest and conscientious. We believe the gravity of such a matter calls for no trifling; the proper handling of the affairs of Chilton County in future is a matter that calls for more than personal prejudice mixed with political spitefulness.

Now, that the people by a majority vote, have given the commissioners what they asked for, further procedure lies in their hands and likewise the responsibility of redeeming their promises and causing the interests of the county to be better served than they would have been without the bond issue.

We entertain not even the slightest doubt that they will make good their promises. The court has given ample study to the conditions of the county's finances, and have carefully completed their plans.

They asked the permission of the people to issue bonds on the promise of better business for the county. The people have given their consent, and the court will forthwith render to their people ample returns in good service, yea, better service, to the satisfaction of every citizen who rejoics in seeing the county reach a better financial condition.

REASON FOR MORE EFFICIENCY

Some favorable comment has been made of the fact that the affairs of the Navy Department are now being conducted with more efficiency. As a matter of fact Secretary Daniels has improved, the improvement consisting in his permitting his chief of naval operations to handle the Department. Daniels has accepted and is acting on the old saying, "Little children should be seen and not heard by others." He is to be congratulated.

PROF. McDONALD'S ADDRESS

We print in this issue of the Union-Banner, an address delivered by Prof. H .C. McDonald before the Alabama Educational Association in Montgomery recently.

Prof. McDonald is recognized as one of the ablest men in the teaching profession in the state, having won for himself a high standing in the organization before the members of which he delivered this splendid speech.

As principal of our county high school, we should be, and are justly proud if him. Feeling that our readers are entitled to know of some of the thoughts of his master mind, many of which are laid out forcibly in this address, we gladly give space to its publication and trust that the thoughtful people of the county will not pass it up because it is a bit lengthy, but read and study every thought which he expresses.

It is for your good that Mr. McDonald studies and devotes himself and it is for your enlightenment, Mr. Citizen, that we bring his message to you.

We want you to give enough of your time in turn to do your part of the transaction, viz: Read the address, study it, and apply it unto yourself that your mind may touch with his on common ground of the transcending thought, dwell together in the consideration of the theme and emerge from the brief union, bigger, broader and better by having absorbed the elements of truth and goodness which he has refined and prepared for you.

FOOD SUPPLY FIRST PROBLEM

Discussing the problem of agriculture and food supply both for home and entente consumption, Dr. Graham Lusk, of Connell Medical College, advocates sending our troops to Europe, but believes this would be impractical unless the government could provide food in sufficient quantities both to maintain national welfare and to supply the entente. Americon soldiers must be supplied from the American commissariat. The United States army commissary has evolved the best and most comprehensive army ration in the world. Our soldiers would not thrive on the rations issued European troops, and a poorly fed army is a dangerous animal. As the American troops were in China during the Boxer rebellion, our commissary was the wonder of the allies. Spring planting is here, and it behooves every food producer in the land to do his best in meeting the heavy drafts for foodstuffs which we will have to meet. The American woman will be no slower than her European sister in donning jumpers and laboring in the fields. It is a healthy work and fine patriotism.

How many pounds to a ton—2000 or 1500?

HOW many pounds of real roughage are you getting to a ton? If you are buying old style hulls you are getting about 1500 pounds because they are about one-fourth lint which has no food value.

If you are buying

you are getting 2000 full pounds because they are free from lint and are practically 100 percent roughage. Try them and see how much farther they go.

Other Advantages

Cost much less per ton than old style hulls.
Allow better assimilation of other food.
No trash or dust.
Sacked—easy to handle.
They mix well with other forage.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

PROMINENT BANKERS COME OUT FOR TANLAC

Two well known Bankers of the South voluntarily Write Strong letters of endorsement to Tanlac Office at Atlanta on same day, telling What it had done for them.

On March 7th, personal letters from prominent bankers in two southern states were received at the Tanlac office. These, like hundreds of thousands of other communications, that have been pouring in from every delivery of the mail for the past year or more, express the writers' high appreciation of the merits of Tanlac, as proven by their own experience with it.

The first letter quoted comes thru Eli W. Goode, druggist and local agent for Tanlac at Hawkinsville, Ga., containing the statement of E.J. Henry, president of the Hawkinsville Bank and Trust Company, which is one of the best known financial institutions in that part of the state. His letter follows just as it was written:

"Hawkinsville, Ga., March 5, 1917. Mr. G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Ga.

"Dear Sir: Mr. E. J. Henry, president of the Hawkinsville Bank and Trust Company, came into my store a few days ago and said:

"'Eli, sell me another bottle of Tanlac.'

"I said 'all right, Mr. Henry. What do you really think of Tanlas?' His reply was so commendable to the virtues of the medicine, that I asked him if he would give me a signed statement about it. He said 'yes, of course I will,' and this is his statement:

"'Last spring I was all wrong some way or other, and couldn't get right. I came to you and bought a bottle of Tonlac and began to improve. Two more bottles but me all right, and I felt perfectly well. A few days ago I had the grippe and was beginning to get down and out again, and about a week ago I bought another bottle and have taken it and am perfectly well again.

"'I unhesitatingly recommend Tanlac to anyone who is sick and worn out, as I believe that if anybody will take Tanlac when they begin to feel bad, it will prevent and keep off sickness. It certainly is a great remedy.

(Signed)

"'E. J. HENRY, President, Hawkinsville and Trust Co.'"

The other letter referred to comes from the cashier of the Hornbeck branch of the West Louisiana Bank at Hornsbeck, La., and is as follows:

"Hornbeck, La., March 5, 1917. "Mr. G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Ga.

"Dear Sir: I wish to say that I have taken five (5) bottles of Tanlac and have gained fifteen (15) pounds in three weeks. I think it is a great medicine.

(Signed)

"W. C. M'ELVEEN, Cashier Bank of Hornbeck, Hornbeck, La."

It is nothing unusual for men of prominence to endorse Tanlac, as over twenty-five thousand endorsements of Tanlac have been given within the past year alone. These endorsements have come from people representing practically every walk of life, including bankers, lawyers, judges, doctors, prominent government, state and county officials, prominent men of affairs, but it is a noteworthy fact that in this particular instance two well-knowkn bankers of the South have on the same day voluntarily written an expression of their gratitude for publication, telling what Tanlac has done for them.

In this connection one of the bect known newspaper publishers of the South recently said:

"I know that there are at least a thousand people in this city who would be glad to endorse Tanlac," and what is true of that city is true of practically every city of the South and West; in fact, throughout the entire country, wherever this medicine has been sold.

The fame and popularity of Tanlac, as everyone knows, has swept over the whole country like wildfire, and is now a household word from coast to coast.

Although placed on the market a Drug Co.; in Riderville by E. E. Jack son Lumber Co.; in Stanton by W. C. Dyer and in Maplesville by Maplesville Drug Company.

little over two years ago, over seven million bottles have already been sold, and the demand is continually increasing.

Tanlac is sold in Clanton by Upchurch Drug Co.; in Mt. Creek by J. E. Deon; in Jemison by Langston Drug Co.; in Thorsby by A. K. Horn & Son; in Cooper by McSwain Mercantile Co; in Verbena by Gulledge Brothers; in Marbury bythe Plateau

Permitting Bridge to Remain Out of Repair.—When a bridge or causeway has been erected by contract with the County Commissioners, with a guarantee by bond or otherwise, that it shall continue safe for the passage of travelers and other persons for a stipulated time, and the contractor knowingly suffers any such bridge or causeway to remain out of repair and unsafe for the passage of travelers and other persons, for more than ten days at any one time, during the period stipulated for its safety by the terms of his contract, he must, on conviction, be fined for the use of the county in a sum not less than double the value of the materials and labor necessary to put such bridge or causeway in the state of safety required by the terms of his contract.

Sec. 51. Changing, Obstructing and Injuring Public Roads.—To change a public road except by order of the Court of County Commissioners, founded on a report of viewers appointed by the court, unless it straightens the same through enclosures, or renders it more convenient for the public; to obstruct a public road by a fence, bar or other impediment, except by gates erected across the same by leave of the Court of County Commissioners, obtained as provided by law; to cut or place a tree, brush, or other obstacle across or along a public road so as to impede travel, and not remove the same within six hours; wilfully to deface, injure or destroy any mile post, indexboard, bridge or causeway; or wilfully to injure or obstruct any public road in any way, is a misdemeanor.

Sec. 52. Failing to Keep in Repair, and to Keep Closed Gates Erected Across public roads.—Any person, who, having erected a gate across a public road by authority of the Court of County Commissioners or board of county revenue, or by authoriay of any act of the legislature, or any person who succeeds such person in the ownership, control or possession of such gate, or in the benefits to be derived therefrom, or whose duty it is to keep the same in good repair, fails for three or more days to keep such gate in good repair, or any person who leaves open such gate, must on conviction, be fined not more than twenty dollars.

Sec. 53. To Protect Bridges from Floating Logs, Etc., by Bond to County.—Any person, firm or corporation who floats any logs, timber, or lumber down any of the streams flowing through any county of this State, over which bridges have been built or shall hereafter be built by contract with or by order of the Court of County Commissioners or board of revenue of such county, unless such person, firm or corporation first execute a bond in the sum of five hundred dollars, with at least two good and sufficient surities, or in some guaranty company doing business in Alabama, payable to the Judge of Probate of the county or counties through which such streams flow, conditioned as required by law for similar bonds approved by such Judges of Probate and recorded and kept in their respective offices, to secure and idemnify such county or counties against loss, injury, or damage to such bridge over such streams by reason of floating logs, timber, or lumber down such stream, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, must be fined not less than twenty-five or more than five hundred dollars, and may be sentenced to the county jail or to hard labor for the county for not more than twelve months.

The foregoing comprises the new road laws recently drafted for Chilton County, and which are at present, pending consideration and adoption by the Court of County Commissioners. Said laws and regulations hereinabove set out are published by order and authority of the Commissioners Court, in order that the people of the county may read and study the same, and be able to offer some suggestions on any points they may see fit, before the laws are finally adopted by the Court.

For the hearing of any suggestions by any citizen of the county who may be so disposed, the Court of Commissioners has set a meeting to be on the 28th of April.

All citizens are urged to meet with the Court on that day to discuss the foregoing laws before they are finally adopted and put into force and effect.

K. C. MAHAN,
Brierfield, Alabama.

To the Directors and Depositors of the Union State Bank of Thorsby, Jemison, and Maplesville, Alabama:

It appears that there is considerable dissatisfaction among the depositors of the Union State Bank for the reason that they are not receiving payment of such dividends as they think could be reasonably collected and paid; and many of them are also unable to discover that the liquidation is being conducted in the best manner possible and for the best interests of all concerned. I am now frequently asked questions about the situation, and have also spent a considerable part of my time and thought for over a year on efforts to do what could be done to help insure an honest and efficient liquidation. During the past year committees have been appointed, attorneys retained, hearings had, etc., in the effort to help the depositors and stockholders but it appears to me that all these efforts on the part of the committeemen and others are likely to be of no avail. I have been studying the situation and have concluded that matters are in a dangerous condition unless the depositors can make arrangements with Supt of Banks, whereby they may be assured of a fair liquidation or unless they can in some other way protect their interests.

During the fifteen months since the bank closed the demand depositors have been paid twenty per cent of their claims. Of this amount, I suppose, without having the exact figures, that about one half of that amount was on hand and in other banks at the time of closing, in other words that probably ten per cent in dividends has been paid above the amount on hand at the time of the closing. It is it also reported that there has been on hand since about the middle of November, 1916, about 15 or 20 per cent, but none of this has been paid out in dividends, even though the depositors are anxiously awaiting payment.

I have studied the situation carefully and can find no good reason why we should not have an efficient and satisfactory liquidation unless someone connected with it wants to prevent such a result, and my conclusion is that a party connected with the liquidation has often shown, and does now show, a disposition to handle matters and to work in a manner not good for the interests of the depositirs. On account of the position I hold in the bank and my efforts in cooperation with the other committeemen and on account of the troubles and disagreements there had been in bank matters, I went to this party twice last week, and, in presence of a witness, discussed matters and tried to get him to agree that he and I use our efforts to secure a satisfactory arrangement for the protection of all interests and that we should then both retire from all connection with the liquidation; and in reply to his insinuation that I would still want to butt in, I offered to put my part in writing, which, I held, would deprive me of any influence if I went back on the agreement. His final conclusion and the limit to which he was willing to go, was that he will get out when it is shown to him that he constitutes a danger to the depositors and that his remark would be beneficial to the trust. Now, who in all the world could be shown anything on such a proposition, with the accused party as the judge.

This party, Lawrence F. Gerald, attorney for the Supt of Banks, can have no interest in the liquidation so far as I can discover, except the attorney fee to be earned from now until the end of the liquidation (unlss he is after something which he has not disclosed to the public) for he states that he does not expect for the stockholders to receive anything.

As I see the situation there is a great probability that the depositors will not get all their money. The agent recently assured a depositor that he thought that the depositors would surely get 60 to 75 per cent of their money, perhaps all. This party had a demand deposit, which must, of course be paid, before the savings depositors get a cent. When the day comes, as I think it will come, when the liquidation is completed and the depositors are not paid in full, then, in my opinion, is the time when indictments will be found against the directors of the Union State Bank including myself, for permitting deposits to be received when the bank was insolvent. In that contingency, what evidence can they present to show that the bank was solvent, and it actually was? Will the attorney and the Supt of Banks, as experts on the question, swear that there was plenty to pay the depositors if it had been handled properly, or will they swear that it was such a mess that they could not pay the depositors? What evidence could a director produce to counteract the fact of lack of full payment to depositors? Which would convince a jury, non-payment of the directors arguments? When I am tried on this charge, I expect to come clear because of the fact that I stated the condition of the bank to the board of directors and asked them for instructions, and they told me to go ahead and run it. I even told them that I would not accept another single deposit. If I had set up my judgment against that of the board of directors, the bank would have been closed by my action instead of by the run which closed it. It would in my opinion, be a great wrong to try to punish any director for doing his part to keep the bank running and to save the depositors and stockholders, but he might be made to appear guilty. It is made to appear to some of the stockholders that the Supt of Banks is likely to have the whole bunch of directors indicted if some individual displeases him, but they need not anticipate any danger in that way. I think, however, that I can well anticipate that John Patton, Jr., R. M. Smith and Olaf Schive will continue their efforts to have me indicted, and I do not see how I can be indicted alone. There is one thing about this part that makes me sore, and it is that two native Southerners can work on the same scheme with a foreigner who has continually been in the habit of calling the southern people "damned southerners" and "damned natives" and has continually belittled the education, honesty, and morality of the southern people. I have all respect for the right kind of a foreigner who comes to this country, but I have little time for one who comes to this country and abuses the privileges he finds here.

As I understand the situation the fight on the interests of the depositors and stockholders is conducted largely as a personal fight on me, because I have been instrumental in getting committees organied for the protection of depositors and have given freely of my time and much more of my small earnings than I could well afford. It was but right and proper that I should take a leading part in action of this kind, because of the position I had occupied and because I had such a knowledge of the facts in the matter that it would have taken a great deal of study on the part of anyone else to take my place, but I have been greatly handicapped by the fact that I was financially ruined by the closing of the bank. I had no employment and very little business to give me a living and I have known of no employment which I could accept because of the time required for bank matters.

For the reason that the fight on the depositors is conducted largely as a personal fight against me, and because of the impression, which is given out, that a party on the other side has a personal interest in my welfare, I mention some personal matters which should really not be in such a discussion at all, but are presented to correct this false impression.

To get the gist of liquidation matters, leaving more elaborate explanations to later articles, I want to ask Lawrence F. Gerald, attorney for the Supt of Banks to answer the following questions:

1. Have the depositors' and stockholders' private committees, whose work and efforts you belittle, done anything injurious to the interest of the trust, (Union State Bank interests)? If so,how ?

2. Have the committees made any unfair or unjustifiable attacks on any person whatever? Kindly give details?

3. Why do you belittle the work of the committees?

4. Do you convert members of the committees so that they will take no further interest in protecting the depositors or stockholders?

5. Why did you try to run a hearing over the committees last summer after warning that it would probably be impossible for any attorney to be there on account of official duty elsewhere? Did you expect to get an expense account allowed by jamming the hearing through as proposed until I made so much fuss that you dropped the plan?

6. Why did you oppose having your attorney fee fixed in advance, as the law requires? Was it because of your extreme regard for the depositors, thinking that their delicate feelings might be jarred by the mention of a reasonable or unreasonable sum as an attorney's fee, or was it for some other reason?

7. Have you any reason in the world to suppose that any member of the committees would have objected to the fixing of even a liberal fee in advance? If so, what the reason and who is the member?

8. Is it not true that, if the attorney's fee were made unreasonable in the beginning, there would be a chance to get it corrected, but if placed unreasonably high at the close it will be practically impossible to do anything about it?

9. Have my efforts so far as you know, resulted in any loss to the stockholders or depositors? If so please give details.

10. Why have you repeatedly expressed the desire that I get out of the liquidation (not that I have any official authority, but that sales, compromises, etc., must be referred to me before they can be put through) and that I remove from this section of the country? Have you done this because of a desire to benefit the depositors? Do you wish to put something through in my absence which you would not put through while I remained?

11. In your desire to get rid of me on account of my fights for the rights of the depositors or for other reasons, did you not arrange with a director of the bank, who had been a good friend of mine, that he should write me a letter, when it came, advise me to move myself and family from this section of the country?

12. Did you represent to this director that he would be in danger of indictment and prosecution if I, personally, took action against the Supt. of Banks in a perfectly legal and proper manner?

13. Have you not repeatedly told me that if I took action unfriendly to the Supt. of Banks, it meant a criminal prosecution for me? Do these threats correctly represent the Supt of Banks, or are you misrepresenting him?

14. Have you ever used your efforts to obtain any arrangement whereby the Supt. of Banks and the depositors or stockholders or their representatives, could agree on such measures as would result in a liquidation which would be honest, efficient and satisfactory to all parties concerned.

16. Did you not insinuate or report made, would it not prevent the payment of excessive attorney's fees and guard against loses and leaks?

16. Did you not insiinuate or report that the protective committees had a voice in the selection of an agent to succeed John Patton, Jr., and that they favored the selection of G. C. Walker?

17. Did you not state at about the time of the removal of John Patton, Jr., as agent, that the Supt. of Banks was in such a raging state of mind (or words to that effect) that it would be very unwise and harmful to endeavor to have him select an agent satisfactory to the committees?

18. Do you not claim that the committees have accomplished practically nothing, and that, when they have gone into court or made answers against the Supt. of Banks, they have given up their contentions and withdrawn?

19. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the banking department should propose to sacrifice the interests of the depositors, would you or could you, in your present position, oppose the proposition? In other words, are you personally, any protection to the depositors?

20. Did you not tell me when discussing a proposed compromise, which I had opposed and which was not accepted, that it was your duty to present the proposed compromises to the court? If this is true, and you must present petitions for other compromises as for this one, who is going to protect the trust, unless someone outside the banking department does it?

21. Are you so intent on holding your job that you will try to hold on to it, if your course precipitates a fight resulting in the impeachment of the Supt. of Banks?

22. Have you ever subordinated your own personal interests in any manner whatever, to the interests of the trust in this case? If so, kindly give details?

Now, let's have a fair and square reply to this article and these questions. Kindly show the people and me wherein I am wrong, as I do not want to do you any injustice whatever, but I am only trying to work, in the only effective manner I know of, to protect the depositors, and incidentally, myself and my reputation. I am not, however going to shrink from an unpleasant duty just because someone is in the way or because threats are made. I have been threatened with the pennitentiary for about fifteen months, and I still hear, "We will get him yet." My protection since the bank closed has been that I have stood for what was right, and no man, be he attorney, official or anyone else, is as big as right. I am glad to say that others have stood with me in these things which are right and will still stand for them.

I expect at an early date to publish as much more information as is necessary to inform the depositors and the people of Chilton County of the condition of things.

Better Farming in the South

FOOD AS WELL AS COTTON THE NATION ASKS OF DIXIE

South May Be Face to Face With Disaster If Food As Well As Cotton Is Not Grown by Farmers—Home Guards of Defense In Great Army, Is Position of the Farmer.

From the Farm Service Bureau.

In time of war the interests of the army come first. Regular commerce must give way to troop trains, ammunitions and army freight in general. At such times the wants of people cannot be readily supplied. Forethinking people will, therefore, prepare against it.

The Southern farmer is facing this situation. What ought he to do?

Railroads have been hauling millions of dollars' worth of food products to the South each year. Recently there have been occasional "famines" in some of these articles because of the inability of the railroads to haul all they were offered. In fact, serious situations have been narrowly averted.

What then might be the result of a car shortage more acute than has ever been experienced?

How would Southern cities be fed? Where would the Southern farmer who raises only cotton, get food? Grave possibilities are, therefore, confronted. They are probabilities if immediate steps are not taken.

How can such a disaster be forestalled? Only by the Southern farmer growing foodstuffs as well as cotton. He can do it. It is his duty to do it. It is his patriotic service. In doing this piece of work he will be one of the most useful units in the army of defense.

At this time it is as important for the Southern farmer to enlist to produce food crops as it is for the young men of the South to enlist as soldiers. It will be easy to get men for the army. It should be easy to get men to raise farm crops. Let Southern farmers rally to the call. Let them become Home Guards by producing this summer such crops as corn, cowpeas, sweet potatoes, beans, sorghum, peanuts, soy beans, velvet beans and such garden crops as tomatoes, turnips, cabbage, onions, Irish potatoes — by raising hogs, poultry — by producing eggs, milk, butter — by preserving berries, fruits, vegetables — and do all this not only for themselves, but produce enough to have some to sell.

Efficiency and maximum crops are what the national leaders are calling for. This means making every lick count to the utmost. It means good preparation, liberal fertilization, thorough cultivation, and crop conservation.

Emergency Crops

As a guide in meeting the crisis, which is now confronting the South, the Farm Service Bureau suggests the following, which of course, must be modified to suit local conditions:

Those crops which can be used for food for man or beast, and which can be planted at once should be given immediate attention. The acreage of cotton per plow may be maintained, and all possible efforts should be put forth to increase the yield. Lint will bring a good price, and seed will prove valuable because of their oil. On a 25-acre tract, in ten or eleven acres of cotton may be given each plow, and it is recommended that seven or eight acres be given to corn in which should be planted peas, soy beans or velvet beans. The corn can be harvested, and the beans or peas given over to pasture or gathered for feed. At least two acres should be given to soy beans or cowpeas and sorghum for hay. One acre for grazing; one acre for sorghum syrup; one acre for sweet potatoes, and one for different kinds of vegetables. This will give a total of 25 acres, and represents only the crops for summer planting. Winter grains may be seeded immediately after some of these are harvested.

Everything bearing upon large yields should be given emphasis. The land should be thoroughly prepared; the best known varieties used; the right kind and liberal amounts of fertilizer applied, and thorough cultivation given.

This is of special importance over much of the South where the soils are lacking in soluble plant foods. Not less than 400 to 600 pounds of fertilizer should be used per acre on the crops suggested.

On account of the car shortage and the farmers' inability to secure ample fertilizer to put under their crops at the time the land was being prepared, it is recommendd that a liberal side application of fertilizer be used on all crops already planted. Increase of crop yields will come with increase in quantity of fertilizer used.

Pale Faced Women Take Phosphates to Make Rosy Cheeks and Beautiful Forms. Men need Phosphates to Make Strong, Healthy, Vigorous Bodies.

Athletes increase their strength, energy and endurance 200 per cent or more by simply taking a few weeks treatment of Argo-Phosphate.

Atlanta, Ga. Dr. F. A. Jacobson says that phosphates are just as essential to any man or woman who tires easily, is nervous, or irritable, worn out, or looks haggard and pale to make a strong, robust, vigorous, healthy body, as they are to cotton to make it grow. The lack of phosphate is the cause of all enemic conditions and the administration of 5-grain Argo-Phosphate tablets will increase the strength of weak, nervous, care worn men and women 300 per cent, in two or three week's time in many instances, and their continued use will build up the whole nervous system, and give new life, vim, vigor and vitality to the whole body. I always prescribe Argo-Phosphate to patients who are pale and colorless, and it is surprising to see how quickly a few week's treatment will transform a pale face to a rosy cheeked beauty. There can be no rosy cheeked, healthy beautiful women without their system is sufficiently supplied with phosphates. In recent interviews with physicians on the grave and serious consequences of a deficiency of phosphate in the blood of American men and women. I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors prescribe more phosphates in the form of Argo-Phosphates for the weak, worn-out, haggard looking men and women. When the skin is pale, and flesh flabby, it is a sign of anema. When the phosphates go from the blood, the pink cheeks go too. The muscles lack tone. They become nervous, irritable, despondent, melancholy, the brain frags, and the memory fails. Therefore, if you wish to preserve your youthful vim, vigor and vitality to a ripe old age, you must supply the deficiency of phosphates lacking in yaur food by using Argo-Phosphate, the form of phosphates most easily assimilated.

NOTICE: Argo-Phosphate which is recommended and prescribed by physicians in all enemic cases, is not a secret or patent medicine, but one that is sold and recommended by well known druggists everywhere, and physicians are daily subscribing the constituents contained in it. Being entirely unlike many other phosphates, it is easily assimilated and will be found effective in the treatment of indigestion and stomach troubles, as well as for care worn, nervous conditions. The manufacturers of Argo-Phosphate will forfeit to any charitable institution $200.00 if they can not treat any man or woman under 65 years who lacks phosphates, and increase their strength and endurance from 100 per cent to 300 per cent. or more in a month's time, if they are free from organic trouble. It is dispensed by all reliable druggists.

If your druggist will not supply you, send $1.00 to the ArgoLaboratories, 10 Farsyth St., Atlanta, Ga., and they will send you a two-week's treatmen by return mail.

Ask Grandfather— He'll Tell You—

You Want To Be Strong And Well

Keep your blood pure; that's the only way. Don't wait until you feel badly, but begin NOW. Impurities in the blood put unnecessary work upon all the organs, making weakness and old age come quicker. Do as Grandfather did; take S. S. S., the best of all blood tonics, proven for 50 years. Take it now; take it often, and you will have strength, health and happiness. At your druggist's.

Battlefield Mascots.

An Irish soldier who had come out of the recent fierce fighting with a severe scalp wound had the following collection of charms: Piece of bog oak; prayer written by a French girl; withered shamrock; piece of wood from a saint's cell.

While many mascots are presents from mother, sister or sweetheart, some possess no sentimental associations. Quaint little idols carved in wood and lead, moonstones, bent coins and teeth of small animals are among the treasured charms. Most soldiers are shy of confessing their faith in mascots, says the London Chronicle, but hospital nurses soon learn of these hostages of luck.

General Bliss was relating reminiscences of sham battles.

"I had a young friend, Captain Exe, who could never be worsted in sham warfare," he said.

"Exe one day started to lead his valiant company at double speed across a bridge to storm a height, but a young captain belonging to the opposite side rushed up and shouted:

"'Hi, Exe! You mustn't cross that bridge! Don't you see the notice? The bridge is supposed to be destroyed.'

"'It is, hey?' roared Exe. 'Well, then, we're supposed to be swimming across. On, boys, and at 'em.'"

Miss Fawn Lippincut on a Sweet Disposition an' Other Things

Th' follerin' trite an' pertinent notes are from th' pen o' Miss Fawn Lippincut, long regarded as th' last word on th' human liver, an' a wart an' mole writer o' marked ability:

Th' season fer tub dresses, freckles, white shoes an' goat knee elbows is almost at hand, an' milady is hereby reminded that a good handy bathtub an' a sweet disposition are indispensable in successful combatin' th' trials an' vississitudes that go hand in hand with a long tortuous summer. In cultivatin' a sweet disposition it is first necessary t' git th' liver tidied up. While th' winter's tangoin' has kept that organ on th' jump, much o' the actual benefit derived therefrom has been counteracted by th' loss o' sleep, thereby leavin' much t' be desired. GAME FISHING

JUST ORDINARY OL' PICKEREL.

My Dear Buck:

If there is one of the fish family that we remember from the knee-pants and bent-pin stage of the fishing game, it sure must be Ol' Judge Pickerel and the young "picks." It certainly made your heart do a double-quick and started the cold creeps up your spine, the first time you hooked a pickerel, after a kindergarten course on chubs and sunnies. You probably had a long cane pole or a young sapling cut from the nearby wooded shore; anyway, from that time on you realized that there was "some sport" to the game. Since then, of course, the ol' pickerel has been sorta dropped into the discard, and it takes trout, bass or muskie, perhaps, to start the joy trips up along your vertebrae. But let me tip you off straight, Buck, there's many a good fighter left in the pickerel outfit, regardless of the many slurs cast upon his fighting qualities by some of the ultra-exclusive highbrows in the angling derby.

Find Pickerel Most Anywhere.

The pickerel is one of the fish that you can fish for nearly anywhere, and you don't have to make a five hundred to one thousand mile trip to his "home grounds." He is a common, ordinary cuss that can pick up a living on next to nothing, and at the same time raise a mighty big family. In nearby "civilized" waters he will even make a sure-enough professional fisherman sit up and take notice at his ability to evade the bait and make said fisherman use all his skill and wits to induce him to take the lure. The more he is fished for the wiser he gets, and to land a few fair-sized pickerel in much-fished waters takes keen work, more so than for the gamer fish in the usual fish haunts of the North woods. As a rule the pickerel found in local waters does not grow to excess size, say an average of two or three pounds. Some are larger, of course, but not the general run.

Where the Pickerel Hangs Out.

The pickerel from the running streams, like all other fish, puts up the best fight, while those from the warmer waters of the lakes and sluggish streams are dull and slow fighters. The pickerel is found in nearly all rivers and lakes or ponds, his preference being for shallow, grassy lakes. His main hunting grounds are along the edge of lily and weed beds and on the outskirts of the grassy growth that is often called "pickerel grass." Here he lurks, waiting for the smaller fish to swim past, often striking his prey with a snap of the jaws that cuts the victim in twain. He is a sure-enough barbarian, and is a destroyer of the weaker fishes, all of which points to the fact that he will be with us for many a day. He is vicious to the core, and at times will strike a trolling spoon with force enough to bend it double. In spring-fed lakes he is often found around the spring-holes, and deep fishing here will bring him out. You can feel reasonably sure of landing him any time from the first of the season to the windup, and then take a rap at him through the ice in winter.

Needs Dentist in August.

August is about the poorest month for pickerel fishing, caused, no doubt, by the soreness of the gums, as claimed by many of the old-timers. The "muskie," a cousin of the pickerel, loses his teeth in August, while the pickerel itself has a swelling of the gums during dogdays that does not put him in a humor to bite on anything. Late September and early October is about the best all-round pickerel season, at which time he is found in the shallows, at the mouth of outlets or inlets, where the feed is good.

Troll and Cast for Him.

Although trolling is the surest method of landing the pickerel, much sport can be had by casting for him, using light bass tackle. A weedless hook with a small frog, shiner or minnow for bait, and a single spinner is all you need. Row along the weed-beds, about seventy-five feet out and cast in toward the edge, landing your bait about five feet from the edge. Give the pickerel a little time before striking as he grabs the live bait and darts back to his lair, there to turn it around in his mouth and swallow it head first. Strike sharply and row away from the weeds. Bear this in mind: he may come up to the boat with ease, but he makes his big effort for liberty after you bring him up to the boat.

The usual way to get him is by trolling with a spoon or spinner. Take a No. 4½ tandem spinner with a treble hook bucktailed or feathered, or a No. 4 spoon and you have an excellent trolling rig. A chunk of pork rind adds to the attractiveness of the lure.

GIRLS! GIRLS! TRY IT, BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR

Make It Thick, Glossy, Wavy, Luxuriant and Remove Dandruff—Real Surprise for You.

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it, surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any store and just try it. Adv.

Life Preservers Improved.

Submarine warfare has resulted in numerous improvements in life preservers and the buoys. The passengers on any ship that sails the Atlantic today are likely to find themselves bobbing about in the icy water with no support but a cork jacket. Some time ago a number of sailors on a torpedoed ship saved their lives at night by signaling to the rescuers with little electric flash lamps. This principle has now been incorporated into the latest life buoy by an attachment which carries electric flash lamps as a part of its equipment. The lamps burn steadily as soon as the buoy hits the water, and serve to indicate the position of the person supported to any boat that may be searching for survivors.

Died of Premature Old Age!

How many times we hear of comparatively young persons passing away when they should have lived to be 70 or 80 years of age. This fatal work is usually attributed to the kidneys, as, when the kidneys degenerate, it causes auto-intoxication. The more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys the quicker will those noble organs be degenerated, and the sooner they decay.

It is thus the wisest policy, to prevent premature old age and promote long life, to lighten the work of the kidneys. This can be done by drinking plenty of pure water all day long, and occasionally taking Anuric, double strength, before meals. This can be obtained at almost any drug store. You will find Anuric more potent than lithia for it dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

DEMAND FOR TANLAC ALMOST INCREDIBLE

Big Laboratories at Dayton Unable to Supply Enormous Demand—Capacity Increased to Thirty Thousand Bottles Daily—Dealers and Jobbers Clamoring for It—Branch Plants to be Established Throughout United States and Canada.

"JUST tell the people to have a little patience and we will soon be able to supply the demand for Tanlac."

This was the message recently flashed from the offices of G. F. Willis, the Southern and Western distributor of Tanlac at Atlanta, Georgia.

The message was sent out in response to the urgent telegrams, letters and long distance phone calls which have been pouring into his offices from the leading dealers and drug jobbers from all parts of the South and West, complaining that the demand for Tanlac was greatly in excess of the supply.

In a later statement Mr. Willis said: "This condition was brought about not only by the enormous demand for Tanlac but by the congested condition of the railroads.

"When it seemed almost certain that the threatened nation-wide railroad strike would go into effect we made arrangements to keep our principal distributors supplied by express. Over one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars was spent for express charges in a single day on Texas and Oklahoma orders alone.

Working at Top Speed.

"Although the big Tanlac laboratories at Dayton, Ohio, have been running at top speed turning out their full capacity of approximately twenty-five thousand bottles per day, we have been wholly unable to meet the demand for Tanlac which has been created during the past two years.

"In addition to the Dayton laboratories with their enormous output the Cooper Medicine Company is now planning to establish branch plants in the Central West, on the West coast and in the Dominion of Canada, and unless international complications make it impossible for us to secure the numerous ingredients in the way of roots, herbs, barks, etc., many of which come from remote parts of the globe, we will be able to take care of any future demand."

The wonderful growth and development of Tanlac has been the marvel of the commercial world and the amazing success achieved by the preparations seems almost incredible.

What Dealers Say.

In only two years' time over seven and one-half million bottles have been sold and the demand is constantly increasing. Although placed on the market in Texas and Oklahoma but a few months ago practically a third of a million bottles have already been sold and thousands have been unable to obtain it on account of the inability of the laboratory to supply it.

Dealers and jobbers have been almost frantic because of their inability to fill the thousands of orders they have been receiving and the following letters and telegrams from well known firms gave ample evidence of the wonderful growth and popularity of Tanlac:

"Dallas, Texas, Feb. 21, 1917.

(Signed)

"About when may be expect car of Tanlac. Customers are complaining because we cannot supply them.
(Signed)

"Oklahoma City, Okla., March 7, 1917.
"G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Georgia,
"Rush our car of Tanlac. We are entirely out again. Orders piling up.
(Signed)
"ALEXANDER DRUG CO."

"Georgetown, Texas, March 12, 1917.
"G. F. Willis, Atlanta, Georgia,
"We could have made twice as many sales if your jobbers could only have gotten the Tanlac to us.
"POST OFFICE DRUG CO."

As can readily be seen, it is nothing unusual for dealers to order a car load of Tanlac and have every bottle of it sold before it arrives. In fact, many of the Tanlac jobbers and distributors invariably order the second and third cars before the car en route has time to reach them.

What is the answer to all this? There is only one explanation, and that is very simple. The inherent purity and wholesomeness of the medicine has confirmed it in the minds of the people and made it a household word throughout America.

HIGH VALUE OF LEGUMES IN ROTATIONS

NODULES ON ROOTS OF SOY BEAN PLANT.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From the earliest days of agriculture farmers have observed that the clovers, alfalfa, beans and peas enriched the soil so that wheat, corn, cotton and similar crops gave better yields following them than when planted after the grains or grasses. The reason for this benefit to the soil, however, is of recent discovery and the broader practical application of the knowledge is just beginning to be effective.

Leguminous plants are readily distinguished, in most instances, by the characteristic form of their flowers, of which the garden pea is typical, and by the seed-bearing pods which split upon ripening, at both edges or sutures. The most important difference, however, between leguminous and nonleguminous crop plants as they affect the fertility of soil is the formation of nodules or tubercles, normally attached to the roots of thriving plants of the legume family. These nodules vary greatly in size and shape. On the roots of red clover they are about the size of a pinhead and ovoid in form; on alfalfa they are somewhat larger and irregular in shape, frequently forming in egg-shaped masses, the aggregate of which may be the size of a very small marble, while on soy beans the nodules resemble the seeds of the common pea both in size and shape. For many years and until comparatively recent times these nodules were thought to be a form of root-gall disease. In 1886 the scientists Hellriegel and Wilfarth discovered their real function in relation to the plants and to the soil.

Function of Root Nodules and Nodule Bacteria.

If a nodule on a living plant be cut open and some of the juicy substance in it be spread thinly upon a glass slide, examination under a high-power microscope will reveal an immense number of living single-celled organisms of the kind called bacteria. These nodule-forming bacteria, when in the soil, pass into the minute root-hairs of leguminous plants during their early growth and establish themselves in the outer layer of cells of the true roots, where they multiply rapidly and form the enlargements called nodules.

The nodule bacteria and the host plant are mutually helpful. The plant furnishes a home for the bacteria and the bacteria in turn manufacture food for the plant.

Plants, like animals, require food materials for growth. Among the most important plant foods are compounds of the element nitrogen, which as an invisible gas comprises about four-fifths of the atmosphere. Nitrogen cannot be taken in directly by the leaves of plants as is carbon dioxid, but must first be combined with other elements to form soluble compounds of nitrogen which can be readily absorbed by the roots. The nodule bacteria of leguminous plants use nitrogen directly from the air as it circulates in the soil and convert it into nitrogenous compounds which are utilized in the growth of the plants.

Nonleguminous Crops.

Nonleguminous crops, including corn and other grains, cotton, and the grasses, secure all of the nitrogen for their growth from the soil. All leguminous crops, under normal conditions, obtain a large part of their nitrogen through bacterial action directly from the air, and in general they contain a larger percentage of nitrogen and consequently make richer feeds than nonlegumes.

Soil-Transfer Method.

A practical and effective method of introducing inoculation is to transport soil from a field containing the bacteria needed. Soil from fields of alfalfa, sweet clover and bur clover is interchangeable as regards inoculation; likewise from fields of red, alsike, crimson and white clovers; also from fields of the vetches and field peas. In the case of cowpeas and soy beans, however, each requires its particular strain of bacteria for inoculation. Soil for inoculation should be free from obnoxious weeds. It should be taken from the first five or six inches of the surface and spread at the rate of 200 to 400 pounds per acre on the field to be sown. Nodule bacteria are killed by much strong sunlight, so the inoculating soil should be spread during cloudiness, early morning, or late afternoon, and harrowed in soon after.

Soil-Coating Method.

Where inoculating soil is scarce, economy may be practiced by making a thin mixture of chip glue and water, sprinkling this over the seed to be sown at the rate of about a quart of the liquor to a bushel of seed, then mixing enough of dry, inoculated soil with the seed to make it sufficiently dry to sow well. The inoculated soil thus becomes coated over the surface of the seed and is carried into the soil with the seed.

Legumes and Cropping Systems.

Leguminous plants, because of their relation to nitrogen-fixing bacteria, are called nitrogen gatherers. If leguminous crops are not grown as a part of the cropping system of a farm, the nitrogen supply of the soil is apt to become depleted, especially where nitrogenous fertilizers are not purchased and freely used. The latter way of keeping up the nitrogen is expensive and is seldom profitable, except for truck gardening or other intensive farming. The safer and more practical way in most instances is to maintain the supply of nitrogen by growing legumes, which, besides furnishing nitrogen, keep up the needed humus supply in the soil. Every second to fourth crop in the rotation should be leguminous, depending upon whether the soil is generally fertile; whether the crops of the farm are chiefly sold or fed, and, in the latter case, whether the manure produced is carefully preserved and returned to the soil.

The place which leguminous crops should occupy in any cropping system must depend upon the crops of the rotation, the length of the growing season, and the legumes grown. The best returns are realized, as a rule, by following legumes with strong-growing cultivated crops, such as corn, cotton, potatoes or tobacco. Winter grain crops may well follow cowpeas or soy beans, and the nitrogen which is fixed in the soil by the legumes is valuable to the early growth of these grain crops.

From the farming standpoint leguminous crops may be classified in three groups: (1) Warm-season annuals, which include cowpeas, soy beans, peanuts and velvet beans; (2) cool-season annuals, such as crimson clover, bur clover, hairy vetch and field peas; and (3) biennials and perennials, including alfalfa, sweet clover, alsike clover, red clover and white clover. The purpose which the legume is to serve on the farm must determine from which group it should be selected

CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK, UGH! IT'S MERCURY AND SALIVATES

Straighten Up! Don't Lose a Day's Work! Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels With "Dodson's Liver Tone."

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. Take a dose of the vile, dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful tonight and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.—Adv.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

MASS MEETING AT THE HOTEL WILSON

Apropos the recent ruling of the County Commissioners, in discontinuing the work of our various farm demonstrators, there was a mass meeting of women representatives from nearly every home in the county at the Hotel Wilson, on the afternoon of April 11.

Upon being nominated Mrs. Lee Vickers of Mt. Pleasant and Mrs. Thos. A. Curry of Clanton occupied the positions of chairman and secretary respectively of the meeting.

The purpose of this meeting was to devise ways and means by which the work of the various food-conserving organizations might be continued without interruption. The wisdom of these women assembled amasse, directed them to form and to pass resolutions presenting to the county commissioners. These resolutions presented herewith are a resume of the work that has been accomplished by our farm demonstration agents, and by reading between the lines, any one with even ordinary intelligence can form a conservative estimate of what can be done in the branches of home economics, tomato, corn and pig club work under expert leadership. The resolutions also contain the urgent request that our county commissioners be made mindful of the benefits that might accrue by the retaining of our present officials in this branch of work, in order that they may help weigh their own responsibility to their constituents and abide by the unanimous decision of the majority of our citizenship, and refrain from resorting to such method of what they, the commissioners, conceive to be economy.

It is the general opinion of our citizens that it is not only to the best interests of our county that the services of our present demonstrators be retained, but that it will be positively detrimental to the interests of our county, of our state and of our country for the invaluable service of these officials to be dispensed with at this precarious period.

Resolutions.

Whereas, in view of the imminently satisfactory and useful work of Mrs. Lida Jones for some time past in her field of endeavor in Household Economics, Tomato, Pig and Corn Club work, and

Whereas, in view of the great interest of the whole people, and especially the young girls of the county, in this beneficial and practical work, and

Whereas, it is a fact that for each dollar invested last year, there were material returns of $11.00, and

Whereas, in view of the proved efficiency of Mrs. Jones in this work, and the practical results to be obtained in the future,

Be it resolved, by the ladies of Chilton County, in mass meeting assembled on this, the 11th day of April, 1917, that the past work of Mrs. Jones in her department is heartily endorsed.

2. That the Court of County Commissioners be memorilized to continue the employment of Mrs. Jones in this indispensible work. That to this end, a copy of this resolution, signed by all the members of this mass meeting, be presented to and filed with the Commissioners Court at its next ensuing term.

3. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each food conserving organization throughout the county for the signature of its members, then to be returned to Mrs. T. A. Curry, Secretary of this meeting for final presentation to the Board of County Commissioners.

4. That a copy of this resolution be deilvered to Mrs. Jones by the Secretary of this meeting.

This, the 11th day of April, 1917.

MRS. LEE VICKERS,
Chairman of Meeting.

MRS. T. A. CURRY,
Secretary.

AT CANAL ZONE COUNTRY WITH AN ALABAMA BOY

Culebra, C. Z., April 4, 1917.—The Union-Banner, Clanton, Ala:

As it has been some time since I was in good old Alabama, and as I am forever thinking of that state and longing to once again be back, I have finally decided to drop a line to the Banner and endeavor to tell its many readers a little of my experiences and climate and the nature of the people of the Sheltering Palm.

I left Fort Jay, New York on March 17, 1917, and arrived here on 26th of the same month. The most of the county and especially this camp was surrounded with tall grass, nearly as tall as the soldiers. However, after several months we succeeded in cleaning away the grass and other cast-off material which had collected there for many years. At the present time, this camp is as clean as the rest of the country.

There are two seasons here—the wet and the dry. Each lasts six months of the year. During the wet season rain falls almost continually, stopping only time enough to get a fresh start again. It seems at times it will never stop raining, but finally it does, and the soldiers are always glad to see the sun's face again. In the dry season the days are very hot and the nights damp. We all sweat an enormous amount, but are becoming more used to the heat now.

I am looking forward to July when my enlistment expires and I will be able to return one more time to dear old Alabama.

The people here are mostly all negroes and Spaniards. The Spaniards on the whole are a dirty set of people and the "twags" are not allowed to mingle with them.

This is indeed a beautiful country to one who has never before had the pleasure of visiting the Canal Zone, but after remaining here two years and having done many hard days labor with pick and shovel, the scenery loses all its beauty, and things do not appear as lovely as when we first set foot on this siol.

Panama City, situated 12 miles from this camp is a real pretty city, but hasn't the beauty and charm of a city in the good old U. S. A. Colon and is the largest city in the Zone. It is situated 45 miles from the camp, it a noted resort and large boats arrive and leave there every day. It is strange but equally true that there are no street cars in this city, but a movement is under way to build a line in and about the city.

There are many kinds of wild animals to be found here in the Jungles. Mountain lions are plentiful and very dangerous. A number of soldiers have already been killed by them. There are also some very large snakes here including the boa constrictor, which although is very seldom seen, except many miles within the depth of the forest.

Many different kinds of fruits may be found here, among them being the mango, which resembles the peach but is much larger and contains a rich mellow meat and is a delightful desert. Oranges are plentiful, also bananas and lemons. Coffee is grown on large farms here.

I could continue to write and tell the readers of the dear old Banner about many different things which are found here, but as this is my first letter I will close for this time.

Hoping to see my letter in print, and trusting that it may prove interesting, with best regards to my old friends and home, I remain,

THOS. E. JONES.

DR. IGNORANCE DROPS SCOTT HAS A FEW WORDS TO SAY

Jemison, Ala., April 30, 1917.

Editor Union-Banner:—Here I am with a few more doses of "drops."

First, I will say that everything in and around our town is moving on smoothly.

Everybody is at work these beautiful days. It is right amusing to see Mr. Wallace Hand plowing old Dock, and Mr. Tom dropping corn. I tell you there is a great interest among people here in farming.

Uncle W. B. Scott has rented him some land and is going to try to make him some corn and peas.

Mr. G. C. Shaw and Sons are going to do some farming this year.

There are a lot of us old benchwarmers who have got to go to work to help feed the soldiers.

I want to say a few words about the singing held at Center Hill last Sunday. It was good, and it seemed that all who went in the house enjoyed it. The holy spirit seemed to be in the hearts of those who took part in the singing. We had a lot of directors and among them were Prof. Lawley from Shelby, and also Miss Wallace Our old friend, Homer Lowe, of Birmingham, was there.

There are a lot of people who go to such occasions to sit around out of the house in buggies and automobiles till dinner time comes, in the hope of getting their craws filled.. And I am sorry to say that these are mostly all young people too.

But I have never seen such a stir among parents to educate their children. And I wonder why they don't teach them better than to carry on such conduct at occasions like this. Much money is being spent to educate children these days; but as I see it many parents could give their children some very valuable lessons that would not cost them any money. The education that is most needed is being overlooked by most parents.

My father and mother never sent me to school but a little bit, but at home by the fireside, they graduated me in the lesscns of how to behave myself when out to public meetings. They taught me to go in the house when I went to church or any other kind of services, and to keep quiet I was not allowed to stay out and to play around the house and on the yard, sit in buggies and autos, and to keep a great noise going on all the time of services.

This is a progressive age, and many are the new ideas and improvements; but I tell you there are many who would do well to have a little of the good old fashioned "larning."

Mr. Editor, I notice that you almost filled a whole page of your paper last week with solid truths. I am sure our county officers are going to do what they promised us they would do, at least as nearly as they can. I know they will not act Democrats on us. Four years ago Wilson said he wouud bring down the high cost of living. He put on so many Demonstrators on good fat jobs until he has robbed the farm of its labor and everything has gone up till we are now on the verge of starvation.

I am proud of the fact that we have some good level headed people all around over the country who want to see the right things done without any regard to party. We have some of those good Democrats around Jemison. They want to see our county prosper under any sort of officers.

I will close for this time, and come again when the spirit moves me.

DR. J. N. SCOTT.

FITTING MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE VETERANS

Brandon and Governor and Mrs. Henderson present and Address the Audience.

Memorial day was observed at the Old Alabama Soldiers Home on Sunday, April 29th, by an immense number of visitors and prominent people from different sections of Alabama. By count there were 41 automobiles parked on the Home grounds, and numerous vehicles in which people from the surrounding country had traveled miles in order to be present to honor the memory of the dead soldiers who are sleeping in the cemeteries.

Visitors, until the hour arrived for the exercises in the auditorium, called at the cottages and the hospital to speak friendly words with the old soldiers, who were cheered by their presence. At the noon hour little groups were scattered over the campus delving into well-filled lunch baskets.

On the sound of the bell the crowd gathered in the auditorium building until it was necessary for Mr. O'Reily the librarian, to refuse permission in the main hall.

At 1:30, that "grand old man," Capt. J. M. Simpson, was requested by Dr.Eiland, the Commandant to act as chairman.

Rev. J. D. Rudd, the Chaplain of the Home, asked God to bless all who had assembled to do honor to the soldiers of the Confederacy.

Hon. W. W. Brandon was introduced by Rev. J. R. Hornady, and he proceeded to deliver one of the most eloquent addresses that an audience ever listened to. Mr. Brandon was, in his remarks, eulogistic and painstakingly appropriate.

Mrs. Charles E. Mitchell of Montgomery, surrounded by a quartette composed of excellent voices, furnished the music for the occasion.

Governor Henderson and Mrs. Henderson both delivered short addresses to the assemblage. They were well received and amply appreciated.

Capt. Rich, with his forty Clanton Boy Scouts, and a number of the scout boys from Verbena, were in the hall.

Hon. F. A. Gulledge ,Sheriff H. A. Harris, Judge L. H. Reynolds, Tax Assessor, J. N. Dennis, and Mr. M. D. Foshee were there and all of them had cheerful words to say to the old veterans during their visits among the different cottages.

As to attempting to mention all of the Chilton county people who were present, fairness suggests that we say that there were no less than 400 of them were present.

As to our scouts and Capt. Rich and Mr. Atkinson and Prof. Johnson, they surely did much towards the making of the day pleasant for the veterans and visitors alike.

The Banner deems it appropriate to make mention of the fact that five daily newspapers were represented on the occasion.

Dr. J. D. Eiland and his wife, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Kicker, made it pleasant for all in attetndance.

The flower garden, attended by Prof. B. J. Hughes, the neat appearance of the park, and a visit to see Mr. Scott's pretty Jersey and Holstein cattle, all were pleasant and appreciated.

During the exercises Miss Pearson, daughter of the late beloved Judge W. W. Pearson, recited choice selections of a patriotic tenor.

Rev. J.D. Rudd thanked God for the day and the occasion.

At 3:30 visitors and old veterans and children scattered flowers over the graves of the near 200 heroes who are sleeping in the cemetery.
of the worst famine we have ever had in this country.

M. D. McQUEEN APPOINTED CHILTON COUNTY SURVEYOR

At the first meeting of the Commissioners Court in April, Mr. M. D. McQueen was appointed as County Surveyor of Chilton County.

Mr. McQueen lives in the west side of the County, on the Autauga line. He was in Clanton Wednesday arranging his bond, and plans to locate in Clanton in a short while to take up his work in the county.

He is a well known and experienced surveyor, having been in the business a long time. Some years ago he was located in Clanton anddid surveying around here for many people.

J. Tom Jones was in our office Tuesday and was telling the editor about his last years crop of peas. Mr. Jones says he has sold $160.00 worth of peas which he raised last season. He sold $100 worth in one lot to a man in Clanton this week.

Bill Goodgame gives the bestservice at his restaurant, and invites you to come there to get your dinner when you are in Clanton.

EAT LESS, GROW MORE, OR WE WILL LOSE WAR IS OPINION OF THE EXPERTS

The country must be Aroused to necessities that are in the face of people of America.

HERBERT C. HOOVER MAKES AN APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Herbert C. Hoover, the great American success as chairman of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium, did his work so well that the people say he is more efficient than the Germans themselves. President Wilson has called him home to be head of the American Food Board. He is still in London, but he sends a call from there to the American people to get ready for starvation. This call every patriotic American should hear—eater, farmer and college student alike. The man who plants another acre of corn this spring, or the student who helps him cultivate it, is surley a patriot meeting our greatest need.

London, April 21.—The first and most important duty of the American people to their allies is to economize on foodstufls. This is the appeal of Herbert C. Hoover. "If we do not do it," he declared today to the Associated Press, "we stand a grave chance of losing the war, because our allies cannot fight without food. Our enemies are calculating that America will fail in this and our allies will need to give in. America can upset these calculations."

Mr. Hoover's observations were made after [illegible] forks' consultation with members of the British, French and Italian cabinets. He also investigated the food and shipping situation and plans for American cooperation. The net result he arrived at was that between now and the next harvest it would require a supreme effort by the American people.

Of "Utmost Gravity."

"I feel it my duty to emphasize," Mr. Hoover continued, "that the food situation is one of the utmost gravity, which, unless it is solved, may possibly result in the collapse of everything we hold dear in civilization.

"The total stock of food today available in the allied world is simply not sufficient to last until September if America continues its present rate of consumption. We are now face to face with last year's poor harvest, the diversion of man-power from agriculture all over the world, the unavailing efforts of European women to plant available fields fully, the isolation of Russia, the sinking of food ships and many other causes.

"England, France and Italy are reducing consumption by drastic steps, but even with all this reduction they must have from us during the next three months more than twice as much food as we should have exported normally or than we can send if we consume as usual.

"The only hope of providing the deficiency is by the elimination of waste and actual and rigorous self-sacrifice on the part of the American people.

What Allies Must Have

"To carry the Allies over until the next harvest we must reduce our wheat consumption 30 per cent. This means that every man, woman and child must forego at least one loaf of wheat bread per week and eat something else or less generously.

More than 70 per cent. of American homes already are places of thrift economy and a clean plate. In the remaining 30 per cent. no one can deny that there is profligate extravagance and waste. Temperance in entertainment, food and drinks is likely to become no longer an ethical question among this class, but a grim imposition of war.

"I do not believe that there will be any necessity to rigidly ration the American people, for if democracy is of any value as a spiritual and political faith the personal initiative and willingness to volunteer self-sacrifice of every member of the greatest democracy in the world will be ample to solve the problem."

As an answer to this call the University of Pennsylvania is forming its students into Food Growers' Battalions. Columbia University, New York, is doing the same thing. These students are sent to farms where thereis land and equipment sufficient to make them effective in increasing acreage. These universities are giving college credit for this work, which is the most vital thing in the world today. There is no danger of low prices on this crop. Plant more and write to your nearest college or high school asking for help to make the crop. The Department of Agriculture at Washington has already called on them to help, as the Universities of Pennsylvania and Columbia are doing.

CONGRESS PASSES CONSCRIPTION BILL

By a Great Majority The House And Senate Orders The Drafting of Men To Fight Germany

CONFERENCE ON AGE LIMIT

House Passed Conscription Bill By 397 To 24 And Senate By 81 To 8

Washington.—By an overwhelming majority both the senate and house passed the administration bill to raise a war army by selective draft.

The final roll calls brought into line behind the bill many senators and representatives who had fought for the volunteer system until routed by decisive defeat of volunteer amendments earlier in the day in both houses.

The senate, which had voted down the volunteer plan 69 to 18, passed the bill by a vote of 81 to 8. In the house the vote against the volunteer plan was 313 to 109, and that by which the bill itself passed was 397 to 24.

As passed by the senate the measure provides for the draft of men between the ages of 21 and 27 years, while in the house measure the age limits are fixed at 21 and 40. This and lesser discrepancies will be threshed out in conference early so that the bill may be in the hands of the president as quickly as possible. The war department already has completed plans for carrying it into effect.

Congress will go to work to smooth away differences between the drafts of the war army bill as passed by the senate and house. With the administration's plan of raising the country's millions of fighting men by selective draft accepted in both houses by overwhelming majorities, it is regarded as certain that points in dispute can be disposed of in conference so that the measure may go to the president for his signature as soon as possible.

The parliamentary tangle resulting from the almost simultaneous action by the two houses requires the next move to be made on the senate side. The bill must be repassed there, with unlimited opportunity, under strict interpretation of the rules, for further debate and amendment. It then will go to conference, with the principal task that of harmonizing the two houses on the maximum conscription age, fixed by the senate at 27 and by the house at 40.

Upon disposing of the army bill the senate leaders plan to resume consideration of the administration's espionage measure, with interest centered on its presidential expert embargo provision. Many other food questions are before both houses and the administration bills to deal with various food supply questions may be introduced in both houses shortly.

MANY COUNTER ATTACKS LAUNCHED BY GERMANS

Kaiser's Troops Charged In Mass Formation And Were Slaughtered By British Artillery

New York.—The three-mile stretch of territory from Aleux-en-Gohelle to Gavrelle is the scene of great battles for supremacy between the British and Germans.

Another trench system—a barrier to the forward march of Field Marshal Haig's forces toward Douai—has been taken in most sanguinary fighting.

The Britishers went into the fray with their usual intrepidity. The Germans resisted strongly, but King George's men would not be denied and soon drove out the defenders of the position and entered it. Counter attacks launched by the Germans were unavailing.

When dawn broke over the battlefield April 28 it found the Canadians holding tenaciously to Arleux-en-Gohelle, which they had captured in a thrilling battle. The preceding night had not been a restful one, for the Germans threw a heavy counter attack against them that required hard work to put down with rifle and machine gunfire — a task which, however, the Canadians successfully accomplished and inflicted heavy casualties upon the Germans.

State Of War Ignored By Germany

Berlin.—Although the police circular, ordering Americans to report daily to the police stations and to remain indoors between 10 p. m. and 6 a. m., sets forth that Americans are to be treated henceforth as enemy foreigners, officials of the foreign office says this is only in modified form. At the foreign office it is still said Germany has not recognized the American declaration of the existence of a state of war and that, therefore, Americans are not enemy foreigners but merely non-neutrals.

Homage Paid To Gen. Washington

Mount Vernon, Va.—The flags of Great Britain, France and the United States floated proudly together here over the tomb of George Washington. Beneath them spokesmen of the three great democracies paid homage to America's soldier and statesman, and pledged themselves, each to the other in the name of the dead, to prosecute the present mighty struggle against autocracy on the lines he himself had followed in bringing America into being.

SPAIN THREATENS GERMANY

Declared If Ruthless Warfare Continues Spain Will Take Steps To Protect Herself

London.—The Spanish government's note to Germany regarding German's submarine campaign contains a paragraph stating that if Germany continues in its determination to sink all vessels in order to defend its life, Spain must take a like step to defend her life. This portion of the note says:

"If the imperial German government persists in declaring that it adhered to its determination in order to defend its life, it must not be astonished if Spain, for the same reason, must emphasize her right to defend her own life.

May Modify Submarine Warfare

Christiana.—The Norges Handels Siofartstidende says that as a result of reports by German ministers and consuls in neutral countries to the German government, the latter probably will draft new regulations governing the ruthless submarine war upon neutral shipping. Spain, the newspaper adds, already has obtained concessions.

Copenhagen.—The National Tidende says it learns that the German ministers in neutral states, including Count von Brookdorff-Ratnzau, minister to Denmark, have gone to Berlin to participate in conference of the bundeserat on questions connected with Germany's submarine warfare.

BRITONS ARE STRONG FOR ARMY CONSCRIPTION

General Bridges, Member Of Balfour Party, Tells What Volunteer System Cost England

Washington. — Lieutenant General Bridges, a member of the British commission, declares that the British democracy had become "almost fanatical" over universal military service.

The volunteer system under which the empire entered the war, General Bridges says, has cost the lives of the most valuable citizens, crippled industrial mobilization and immeasurably set back England's efforts in the war.

"War," says General Bridges, "is no longer a war of expeditions, but is a case of nation against nation. Men, women and children are equally drawn into its vortex, the women and children being forced into industry and fed on half rations in order to supply the men at the front.

"War has become an immensely democratic business and needs the full effort of every member or community directed along the lines most necessary to be served."

GOD WILL HELP FURTHER, SAYS GERMAN EMPEROR

In Announcement Claiming "Fresh English Storm Has Been Broken"

Amsterdam.—A Berlin official statement says that the German emperor has sent the following message to Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, commanding the Artois army group:

"The fresh English storm on the battle field of Arras has been broken by our troops. To the heroes of Arras and their trustworthy leaders, who, in capacity, ability and success, have equaled their comrades on the Aisne and in Champagne, I send my thanks and those of the fatherland. God will help further."

Millionaire Hurries To Pay Taxes

New York.—Some patriotic American with a fortune in excess of $64,000,000 has paid his income tax six weeks in advance, thereby losing $3,750 in interest. The tax payer's name is withheld in accordance with the law, but the fact that he had handed a check for more than five hundred thousand dollars to the collector of internal revenue here has been made public. Collector Edwards believes that this man's example will give impetus to the patriotic movement started here for the payment of federal taxes ahead of time.

Many Russ Generals Have Been Fired

Petrograd.—As a result of the visit of War Minister Guchkoff to the southwestern front, twenty-three generals, including some generals of division, have been replaced. On all fronts not fewer than 114 officers have been removed.

Greece Going To War For The Allies

New York.—A cablegram quoting an Athens newspaper with the statement that Grece is on the point of entering the war as an ally of the entente powers has been received here by a Greek daily newspaper. The Greek daily newspaper, Embros, Athens, in an inspired leading article, states that Greece is about to enter the war on the side of the allies," the cablegram read. "The new prime minister will be Alexander Zaimis, who has made proposals to the entente powers which have been accepted.

French Commission Arrives In U. S.

Fortress Monroe, Va.—France's war commissioners to the United States have arrived in Washington on board the presidential yacht Mayflower. The mission, of which Rene Viviani, vice premier and minister of justice, is the official head, and Marshal Joffre, a member, brings no written instructions from the French government, the ministry having decided to give its members unlimited powers to negotiate with the United States on all subjects, military, naval and financial.

U. S. MUST SMASH U-BOAT BLOCKADE

Growing Success Of Submarine Campaign Forces Problem Of Supplying Allies With Food To The Front

QUICK ACTION IS NEEDED

More Merchant Ships To Be Put In Commission And Steps Taken To Insure Foodstuffs

Washington.—Evidence of growing success for the ruthless German submarine blockade has forced the problem of supplying the entente quickly with food and other necessities sharply into the forefront of the American government's war program.

Aroused by information brought to this country by the British and French war missions, President Wilson and his cabinet set about to launch with its full force as speedily as possible their campaign to break down the blockade, planned by the administration as the nation's first physical stroke against Germany.

The food problem occupied the cabinet meeting almost to the exclusion of all other important war questions before the government. Afterwards it was indicated that the recent German submarine ravages were considered so successful that the United States must marshal its resources immediately to put more merchant ships in commission to help devise some means of fighting submarines and to insure a greater yield of foodstuffs to offset the increasing destruction of food cargoes in the war zone.

Members of the cabinet took to the meeting a great quantity of information given by the visiting missions, including a plea by some members of the French commission that America must act quickly if the world is to be saved from famine. Recent declarations in the British parliament were reviewed as supplementing this evidence. There was no attempt to conceal the impression that the food problem had taken on an aspect making it incomparably the most pressing question facing the United States in its efforts to stem the progress of the enemy.

Although details of the steps to be taken were not revealed, there were indications that more energetic measures might be expected to speed up the work of relieving the food situation in the entente countries. These measures, it was predicted, would be the first to take form as a result of the international war conferences here.

FRANCE AND ITALY TO GET BIG LOANS

United States To Let Two Countries Have $200,000,000 To $300,000,000 To Carry On War

Washington.—President Wilson has approved requests from France and Italy for immediate financial aid and from two hundred million to three hundred million dollars will be lent by the United States.

In the case of Italy arrangements already have been made for the transfer of the money. While the amount has not been divulged, it is understood to be between fifty million and one hundred million dollars.

France will receive between one hundred and fifty million and two hundred million dollars, probably the larger amount.

With the completion of these transaction the total of the government's loans to the allies will approximate five hundred million dollars. There is every indication that at least five hundred million dollars more will be lent the allies before the end of the fiscal year, June 30, and the amount may run to one billion dollars more, bringing the grand total of America's loans during the first three months of the war up to one billion five hundred million dollars. At this rate six billion dollars a year would be put out.

German Steamers Have Been Repaired

Colon.—Repairs to the four German steamers recently seized here are virtually complete. The steamers are the Grunewald, Prinz Sigismund, Sachsenwald and Savoia.

120 Men Killed By Mine Explosion

Trinidad, Colo.—Hope that any of the 120 men thought to be entombed in the Hasting mine, near here, may be rescued has been abandoned by rescue crews. The men were caught behind a wall of fire which followed an explosion in the main stope early in the morning and cannot be reached. The first bodies of victims have been found by the rescue squads, according to Charles Dalrymple, chief inspector of the state mining bureau. He said the rescuers penetrated 2,000 feet in to the workings.

Mississippi Postpones Her Exposition

Gulfport, Miss.—The general commission of the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at a meeting here decided to postpone the opening date of the exposition, which had been set for December 10 next, until February 22, 1919. Should peace be gained by February 22, 1919, the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the commission announces there will be celebrated not only the one hundredth anniversary of Mississippi's statehood, but "the triumphs of international democracy."

AMERICANS SINK SUBMARINE

First Gun Of War Fired For United States Sinks German Under-Sea Craft

London.—Captain Rice of the American steamship Mongolia, which has arrived at a British port, says that the Mongolia fired the first gun of the war for the United States and sank a German submarine.

The submarine, Captain Rice says, was about to attack the great liner in British waters on April 19. He declares there was absolutely no doubt that the U-boat was hit and that there is every reason to believe it was destroyed.

The naval gunners on board made a clean hit at 1,000 yards. The periscope was seen to be shattered.

Even more pertinent a fact, as regards the ultimate fate of the submarine, was that the shell disappeared immediately after the hit was scored. The captain states that a shell always ricochets in the waters and can be seen again unless it finds the mark. Oil was seen on the water after the disappearance of the submarine.

The Mongolia was going at full speed and was a long distance away when the spray and foam subsided, but, from the bridge the officers observed the spot through their glasses, and they are confident the submarine was sunk.

The periscope was sighted dead ahead on the last afternoon of the voyage. The captain gave the order for full speed ahead with the intention of ramming the submarine.

The periscope disappeared and a few minutes later reappeared on the ship's broadside. The gunners fired, hitting the periscope squarely and throwing up a mountain of water.

Captain Rice outlined the incident with modesty, but could not quite conceal the pride he felt in the achievement of his ship. He paid a high tribute to the gunners and especially to the manner in which they were handled by the officer who directed the firing of the telling shot.

BRITISH AND GERMAN DESTROYERS IN BIG FIGHT

Ships Became Locked And Men Clashed Hand To Hand—British Middy In Heroic Role

London.—Two British destroyers on patrol duty in the English channel off Dover on the night of April 20 came upon a flotilla of six German destroyers and then ensued an encounter that will live long in the history of naval engagements. German destroyers were torpedoed and rammed; every gun on board the combatants was working, sweeping the decks and tearing gaps in the sides of the opposing craft. There was the locking together of a British and German destroyer and the men fought furiously in a hand-to-hand battle.

The British destroyers were the Swift and the Broke, and although they had received many wounds they returned to port.

FIFTH EPISODE

Bianca Deals.

"Red" Finn had almost forgotten the fact that nature had assigned him many parts to play. He was so good an actor that he identified himself with every part completely. For five years he had been "Red" Finn, the name of a man he killed in a Montana Gambling house. He spoke like a Western desperado, his verbs and nouns were seldom upon nodding acquaintance with each other, and he forgot all about his other roles.

When he emerged, dripping and shaken, from the river, clutching the stolen confession in his hand, he made his way hastily to his shack. He found it unharmed after the earthquake, changed his clothes, ate a meal, and hurried toward the nearest station.

In the train he shook off "Red" Finn entirely. "Red" had outplayed his part. He became Ludwig Romanoff, a role he had filled in Germany, with great success, six years before. His nouns and verbs made up; and as the rough desperado became a sleek, polished crook, the very expression of the man ceased to change.

Arriving in the East, he quickly found his level among the denizens of the underworld. He soon came to realize that Louis Lamb's confession, for which Sebastian had offered Ravengar ten thousand dollars, must still be worth at least that sum.

Sebastian, having returned with Leontine from White's Village, had resumed his old life with all the burden of his latest experiences added to it. He knew now that detection of his part in the conspiracy against Jerry Carson was imminent. He knew that Louis and Ravengar were leagued together to hunt him down. He guessed that Leontine suspected. And he did not know what to do.

It was while he was in this uncertainty that Ludwig Romanoff called with Louis' confession in his pocket.

Sebastian, who did not know that the confession had been stolen from Ravengar, started nervously, nevertheless, when the strange name was announced. He had been breakfasting with Leontine. She saw him start and looked after him in wonder as he left the room and went into his library.

Overcome with curiosity, Leontine [illegible] into the hall. The library door [illegible] not quite closed, and the two men [illegible]re standing in such a position that Leontine could see them reflected in the mirror that hung in the hall. She saw Sebastian, looking nervously at his visitor, and in the visitor she recognized, to her surprise, the man who had stolen the confession from Ravengar.

Unable to stir, she could not but hear the ensuing conversation:

"Mr. Navarre, your name is mentioned in a certain confession," said Romanoff. "I have it here." He drew it from his pocket and held it in his hand.

"I know all about that," answered Sebastian, swallowing hard. "A man in my position is naturally the victim of conspirators and blackmailers. If you have come here to blackmail me, you have mistaken your man. However, my time is valuable, and rather than waste it in having you arrested, I am willing to pay you a hundred dollars for that confession."

Leontine did not see the mocking look on Romanoff's face. She burst into the room.

"And I will pay you a thousand!" she cried.

Sebastian flushed and moved threateningly toward her. "With my money?" he sneered.

"A thousand dollars," cried Leontine again.

Romanoff smiled. "It seems to be going up in value. I think I'll keep it," he announced, pocketing the paper.

He was nearing the door when, with an oath, Sebastian whipped out a revolver from the desk beside him and leveled it.

"You'll hand that over or you'll never leave this room alive!" he shouted.

Romanoff, taken aback, could only stare into the muzzle of the weapon. He saw that Sebastian was desperate.

He put his hand into his pocket and drew out the confession.

Suddenly the revolver was dashed from Sebastian's hand. Sebastian went reeling back across the room, as if he had received a stunning blow in the face. Yet there was nobody in the room except himself, Leontine, and Romanoff.

Next instant, as Sebastian recovered himself, he was picked up and hurled to the ground. He lay there as if stunned.

And Leontine, gazing in terror at her husband, saw, at a height of nearly six feet from the ground, a pair of eyes fixed on the prostrate man. It was the mysterious defender who had championed her,

Romanoff, with an exclamation of terror, turned and bolted from the room. He hurried into the street and leaned against the wall of the house, trembling.

He held the precious paper in his hand. He tried to replace it in his pocket, but his hands shook

Suddenly his hand dropped as if the wrist were broken. The invisible antagonist was upon him, and Romanoff fought in his grasp, feeling a sensation of power opposing him.

It was a weird struggle in the sunny street. A policeman, across the road, looked in amazement at a man reproducing all the features of a battle for life—alone.

At last, leaping back, Romanoff managed to wrench his arm free and delivered a blow with all his strength at the invisible antagonist.

It was efficacious, for all at once Romanoff felt that he was free. He thrust the paper into his pocket.

* * * * * * *

Romanoff hurried away, glancing back furtively in the fear that the invisible presence was pursuing him.

Once aboard a street car, he felt safe from pursuit. He gradually recovered his nerve, until, by the time he reached his destination, he felt ready to laugh at the episode.

He jumped from the car and made his way to a private residence on the side street near by. The blinds were drawn, and there was nothing to indicate that this was other than a respectable private house whose occupants were away.

As a matter of fact, however, the house was connected with the one adjoining and was one of the most celebrated gambling establishments in the city.

The adjacent house was occupied by Bianca, the most notorious woman of the underworld that the city had known.

Romanoff tapped at the door of the gaming establishment, flung a word to the woolly-headed attendant, and entered through the grilled door. He made his way along a passage and entered the room in which, even at that hour, the gamblers were assembled. Bianca ran the place night and day.

Romanoff cast a glance about him. The players, intent upon their game, took no notice of him. But Romanoff saw one man whose presence filled him with consternation.

It was Ravengar, unknown to Romanoff by name, but the man with whom he had fought for the confession in White's Village, the man to escape whom he had made his desperate leap from the high bridge.

Romanoff stared at him in momentary terror. What was he doing here?

He stood and watched the players for a few moments, and then made his way quietly from the room. Entering a passage, he pushed back a curtain, disclosing a paneled wall. Romanoff touched a spring and one of the panels slid back, forming a little doorway into an anteroom of the next house. He closed the door behind him and passed on into a larger room, where a woman was seated upon a divan covered with Persian draperies, listening to the remarks of two men who were talking to her in low and eager tones.

As Romanoff entered the men sprang to their feet quickly; then, recognizing him, they nodded. Bianca smiled at him.

"You've been away a long time, Mr. Romanoff," she said, smiling at him.

"Yes, but I've been away for good reasons," Romanoff answered. "I've got something in view that's worth considering."

"Sit down and tell me about it," said Bianca.

About one minute after Romanoff had left the gambling room, Ravengar rose from the table. He pocketed his winnings with a yawn and strolled into the hall. Pushing back the curtain, he, too, touched the spring, and the panel opened. He entered the anteroom noiselessly and turned to close the panel behind him.

He could hear the low conversation in the next room. As he moved stealthily forward, he became conscious that his coat had caught in the panel.

He turned to free himself. The sliding panel jarred slightly. In an instant one of the men in the next room, alarmed by the sound, appeared in the doorway. Ravengar had just managed to free himself when the man was upon him, grasping him roughly by the arms.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded.

Something in Ravengar's look frightened him, for, releasing his captive, the man stepped back and drew a revolver from his pocket. Ravengar caught him by the arm. The weapon was discharged, the bullet passing into the ceiling. A chip of plaster fell to the floor.

At the sound, Romanoff, Bianca, and the third man rushed into the room. They found Ravengar struggling with the "look-out" man.

At Bianca's command the men fell back, leaving Ravengar in possession of the revolver which he had wrested from the other. Bianca and he looked at each other for a moment in silence. Then Bianca smiled.

"Put that away, please," she said quietly. "I don't allow weapons in my house."

"I Will Pay a Thousand," She Cried.

Ravengar smiled back at her, but he did not put down his weapon.

A moment afterward she reached behind the portieres and pulled a cord. A trap-door opened under Ravengar's feet, and he slid down a chute.

As he disappeared, the spring door, released of his weight, sprang up again. Bianca looked at the men with her and laughed.

"An interesting fool," she said. "What were you telling me, Mr. Romanoff?"

* * * * * * *

Could free herself from the man who was her husband in name alone? That was Leontine's thought as she sat miserably in her room alone.

Suddenly she sprang to her feet as a new idea came to her. It brought the flush to her cheeks; it seemed a shameful thing—yet it might mean her freedom from Sebastian.

No sooner had the idea come to her than it assumed mastering force. She dressed hurriedly and slipped out of the house.

She took a street car downtown. She must have sat brooding in her room for hours, for it was already late and the crowds were pouring out of the theaters. She reached the one to which her husband had gone just in time to see the first of the audience leave.

Drawing into the doorway of a little shop adjacent, she scanned the crowds keenly. Presently her attention was directed toward a black-haired woman of singularly attractive appearance, who was just getting into her motor. There was something about her that made Leontine watch her every movement.

Then, just as the woman had seated herself within the car, Leontine saw Sebastian leave the theater with a companion. At that moment the woman dropped her fan.

The act was done with a certain deliberation. Of that Leontine was sure. She knew, too, that it had been done to attract Sebastian; she knew all this as only a woman understands the motives of other women.

Sebastian picked it up, bowed, and handed the fan to the woman in the motor. She thanked him with a smile and pressed something into his hand. Leontine saw the flutter of a piece of paper.

The motor drove away, but Sebastian stood reading the note under the light. A moment afterward he bade his companion good-night and hurried away.

Leontine followed him. The chance that she had sought seemed to be at hand. Sebastian called a taxicab and, giving a brief direction to the chauffeur, entered it. Leontine summoned another vehicle.

"Follow that cab," she said.

The driver, who was used to such situations, obeyed with alacrity. Presently he stopped and came running to open the door. "The gent's just gone into that house with the barred windows," he said to her.

"Whose house is it?" asked Leontine.

"Madame Bianca's," said the man, with a grin. "They won't let you in unless they know you, missus. It's the swellest gambling place in town today."

Leontine thanked him and paid him, just in time to see the house's door close upon her husband.

As she hesitated, the grilled door opened and two men came down the steps. They passed her, staring hard at her. One of them hesitated and then came back to her.

"Anything I can do for you?" he asked, raising his hat, uncertain what sort of woman she was.

"I want to get into that house. It's Madame Bianca's, isn't it?" she asked.

"Why—yes," said the man in hesitation. "Want to try a round or two of baccarat?" he continued.

Leontine nodded. "They don't know me," she said.

He escorted Leontine into the gambling room. Sebastian was not there. Leontine realized it and turned sick with disappointment.

"Are there any more rooms where they play?" she asked her escort.

He shook his head. "But you can get a good game here," he said, and as a man rose from the table he held the chair for her.

Leontine looked at the man who had risen. He was a dissolute youth with a pasty complexion, and the air of one who was at the end of his resources.

An instant later the sound of a revolver shot was heard, followed by the thud of a falling body.

Leontine sprang to her feet in terror. The others followed suit.

Half hidden by the curtain behind which he had fallen, lay the young man.

Peering into the dead man's face was a man whom she seemed to remember. Yes, it was little Louis Lamb.

"I guess Madame Bianca won't like this sort of a job going on next door," he said with a grin.

"What do you mean by 'next door?'" asked Leontine.

"Why, through the door behind those curtains," answered Louie. "Say, you're green, ain't you?"

"You must go, you must go at once, madame!" said a negro attendant, pushing through the excited throng. "Kindly leave the house immediately."

Leontine, with two or three other women, was being jostled roughly toward the door. She was in despair, for Louie's words had given her a clue. Suddenly she saw that the curtains had been drawn. The suicide's body was being carried into Madame Bianca's house through the secret entrance.

Instantly she threw up her arms and fell to the floor in a simulated faint.

Through her half-closed eyes she saw the commotion about her. Two attendants came hastily up to where she lay.

"We'll have to run her in, too," they said. "Say, ain't them women the limit!"

Taking her by the head and feet they pushed their way back to the curtains.

A glare of lights burst on her closed eyelids. Cautiously she opened them. She saw Sebastian and the woman known as Madame Bianca, with Romanoff, standing about the body of the suicide.

She sprang to her feet and faced them. At the sight of her Sebastian winced, started, and whitened. Into Romanoff's eyes there came a look of understanding. Madame Bianca looked at her steadily and inquiringly. And suddenly Leontine realized the purpose of Sebastian's presence there. For there was a paper in the woman's hand and it was the confession of Louis Lamb.

* * * * * * *

Sebastian had certainly been attracted by Bianca's appearance in the foyer of the theater, as she had meant that he should be.

The note that she had thrust into his hand when he gave her back her fan said simply:

"Follow me if you are interested in obtaining a certain paper."

Sebastian had needed no second invitation, and when he had followed her to the door of her house he had found Bianca waiting for him.

"Won't you come in, Senor Navarre?" inquired Bianca, smiling.

In her sumptuously furnished reception room Bianca had coffee served by a Chinese servant.

"Senor Navarre," she said, "a certain paper has come into my hands in which I believe your are interested. It is a matter of business. How much is it worth to you?"

"I offered a hundred dollars for it this morning," answered Sebastian

"Suppose we say fifty thousand dollars," she said.

Sebastian shrugged his shoulders. "Madame, let us put business aside," he said. "I like to leave these matters to my lawyer."

"Come, senor, let us finish this deal," she said. "Is it fifty thousand? I do not bargain."

He saw that he was dealing with a woman of stronger character than he had imagined.

"Well, I'll give you ten thousand," he said, decisively. "That is positively my last word."

"No," answered Bianca, rising.

That was the moment when the pistol shot sent them hurrying into the anteroom. A moment afterward the attendants entered, bearing the body of the suicide.

Sebastian's eyes fell upon Romanoff. At once he realized that Romanoff and Bianca were in the deal together.

Then it was that Leontine was carried in and placed on the couch. The combination of circumstances overwhelmed him. He started back in terror as his wife sprang to her feet and stepped forward toward Bianca.

"Give me that paper," said Leontine.

Bianca stepped back and nodded imperceptibly to one of the attendants, who seized Leontine by the arm. And then a strange thing happened. Suddenly the paper was wrested from Bianca's hand by some invisible agency and transferred to Leontine's.

Bianca sprang forward to snatch it, but then she staggered and then reeled back; at the same instant the hand of the attendant was torn from Leontine's arm and he was hurled to the floor. A stream of blood poured from his cut lip.

Leontine, clutching the precious document, moved toward the door. She was half way toward it when Bianca recovered her self-possession.

"Stop her!" she cried. "Don't let her go! Get that paper from her!"

The second attendant and Romanoff leaped forward. Just as the attendant was about to pinion Leontine, he, too, went reeling back under the impact of a terrific blow which knocked him, stunned, to the ground. Romanoff seemed lifted bodily and cast upon the prostrate form of the other man.

The room was in an uproar. Two Chinese servants ran between Leontine and the doorway. The attendants, rising from the floor, at Bianca's signal, flung themselves upon Leontine again.

Then it seemed as if an invisible devil were at work in the room.

Leontine stood beside the door, untouched, the precious paper still in her hand. She alone had kept her self-possession.

Quietly she stepped toward the secret panel, pushed it open, and passed into the gambling house. Thence she made her way leisurely toward the head of the flight of steps that led down to the street.

She went down slowly, and, believing herself safe, stopped under the nearest street lamp to read the rest of the confession, in order to learn the truth.

As she did so, a man came down the steps behind her.

Louis Lamb, or "One-Lamp Louie," had made his way back to New York with his hoard after the earthquake devastated White's village.

On reaching the metropolis he immediately got in touch with the underworld; and that in itself required a certain habit of mind.

Bianca, recognizing that he had money to spend, permitted him to spend it. Romanoff, who had planned to rob him, did not recognize in the frequenter of the gambling house the hermit of White's Village.

And Louie had not the slightest recollection of the confession of forgery which he had committed in company with Sebastian,

When he spoke to Leontine at the side of the suicide he had not the least idea that he had ever seen her before. He drifted back to the table and waited impatiently for the game to begin again.

After hovering round for some time, however, he accepted the assurances that the game was ended for the night.

At the bottom of the steps he saw a strikingly beautiful woman and recognized in her the woman who had addressed him a little earlier in the evening beside the body of the dead man.

Halting at the top of the steps, Louie looked right and left cautiously. The woman was plainly alone, for she moved quietly along the street and, standing under a street light, began to read a paper that she held in her hand.

Softly he stole up behind Leontine as she stood under the light. There was no need for this, however; Leontine was wholly absorbed in the nature of the document.

She learned for the first time how Sebastian and his brother had conspired to convict Jerry.

With the aid of Louie, a forgery had been effected, being a transfer of certain property held by Jerry in America to Sebastian, in return for ready money to finance his treasure-finding expedition. Of course, Jerry had never executed such a paper.

Sebastian and his brother Diego had then accused Jerry to Leontine, alleging that instead of transferring the property, he had sold it and pocketed the proceeds. It was Jerry's unexpected return and his discovery of the paper that had led to the quarrel that ended in Diego's death.

"You'll Hand That Over, or You'll Never Leave This Room Alive!"

Jerry, although innocent of the death of Sebastian's brother, had been placed in compromising circumstances. He had been tried before an Argentine court of law, found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment. Soon afterward she had learned that he had died.

As she read the whole story, Leontine felt a deep and rebellious rage against her husband fill her heart.

She stood like a statue underneath the lamp, incapable for the time of movement; she knew nothing, but lived again in the past. She saw Jerry starting on his wonderful voyage, which was to bring them fortune, and she heard again her own parting pledge of loyalty to him. The paper fluttered loosely in her hand.

That was the moment when the magpie, Louie, stealing up behind Leontine, saw his own signature at the bottom of the paper. With a swift, deft movement, he snatched it out of her hand.

"I know that name," said Louie, rubbing his hand across his forehead. "Why—why, it's my own!"

Leontine, recognizing Louie, looked at him in wonder.

"Give me that paper," she said quietly. "Yes, it is your own confession, Mr. Lamb. And I thank you a thousand times."

"Don't mention it," said Louie, making an ironical bow.

Louie, holding the confession high in the air, took his station beneath the light, and began reading it. He read on in profound astonishment. Leontine waited. She knew the situation was a difficult one, but she knew that she was more likely to get back the paper by diplomacy than by force.

Louie's brows wrinkled as he continued to read. He had not the faintest recollection of having ever written such a thing. What had been the matter with him? Well, it was a lie, anyway, and probably a forgery.

"Let me have it now," pleaded Leontine, as Louie came to the end.

Louie, still holding the paper above her head, grinned mischievously.

"What's the game?" he demanded. "Going to send me to the penitentiary, eh? What's the game? Who put you up to it?"

"Mr. Lamb, please listen to me. You wrote that confession and it's very valuable to me. Jerry Carson, whom you wronged, meant a good deal to me. I want that paper now. You won't go back on your word?"

Louie grinned, and suddenly lowering the paper, tore it in two.

With a scream Leontine flung herself upon him, trying to wrest the paper out of his hand. So unexpected was her movement that at first Louie was quite taken aback. Her fingers closed on his clenched fist which held the two halves of the document. She was trying with all her might to force his hand open. And all the while she pleaded.

"Give it back to me, please—please!" she implored. "It is worth everything to me. It is worth a thousand dollars—all that I have. Listen, then! Bring it to my house tonight, and I will give you a thousand in cash tonight."

"A thousand dollars!" grinned Louie contemptuously. "Say, I reckon to drop as much as that any night in Madame Bianca's."

He flung her off and deliberately tore the two halves across, and again and again. He hurled the fragments of paper into the roadway. The breeze caught them and sent them flying in all directions. They rose into the air like a minature snowstorm, fluttered and drifted away.

So Jerry's honor was scattered to the winds again; and Leontine's hopes were dissipated into the night air.

"Think I'm a fool?" sneered Louie. "Think I'm going to put myself in the penitentiary for a thousand dollars? It's a fake, anyway, I never wrote it."

And, raising his hat with magpie malice, the little crook took his nonchalant departure.

Leontine sank down upon the steps and sobbed her heart out.

ENFORCING LAWS.

The most important thing about a law is the execution of it.

A law that might not be regarded as very good in some ways possibly, would, if rigidly enforced, be worth more than a very good law poorly carried into effect.

In the new road laws that are being framed for Chilton county, we sincerely hope that both good qualities may be found.

Having read the text of the document as proposed for adoption, we are already convinced that it is a splendid embodiment of the principles of proper local handling of the road question. We regard it as completely covering the problems of public road construction and maintenance in every detail.

But we must remember that all its good qualities are hinged upon its full and proper enforcement after it is adopted. It matters not how complete and explicit its provisions are, it will not make us good roads nor maintain them after they are secured, if the law is merely written on the records and printed in a few pamphlets to be scattered around the court house to finally land in the trash pile. The things which the law sets out must be made real and active forces toward the ends purposed.

The enforcement of the law lies in the hands of two groups of persons, viz: The county executive officials and the county citizens. One group cannot bring about enforcement without the aid and vigorous concurrence of the other.

We hope the people will meet the officials on half-way ground and all do their proper share toward the best solution of the great question of roads.

Under the relief that is going to come out of the bond issue some time soon the commissioners are going to be able to go far toward their part of the duties in an official way, and they will do their part as best that lies in their power. Likewise, citizens, overseers, apportioners and all, should prepare to go their full length, and leave no duty undone in giving our county the very best roads at the expense of the most reasonable means.

HOES AND RIFLES

The agitation for an enlarged crop of staple foods which is being carried on so energetically—and we hope successfully—in all parts of the country, has a basis in sound theory. Napier, the great military commentator, has graphically compared an army to a snake in that it moves upon its belly. The provisioning of the armies which we must raise as our just contribution to the fighting side of the war, is of prime consideration. In addition we must continue our stream of supplies to the armies of our allies already in the field. And at the same time we must provide for our own population at home when so many hundreds of thousands of workmen are taken from productive pursuits and put into the ranks. Just now the man with the hoe is of equal importance with the man with the rifle.

PENDING QUESTION IS UNIVERSAL SERVICE

There is a good deal of apparent confusion in many minds between universal training and universal service. If we had universal training, we would have universal service, of course. But the question which has been agitating Congress and over which the President and his party split was that of universal service in a limited sense—for selective conscription is merely a recognition of the principles of universal liability to service, and not a direct application of it. Universal training has not yet been debated, though it is contained in the measures now before Congress. This means the accustoming of every boy to the use of firearms, to the military manual, to camp duty, to manoeuvering, to all that goes to make up the life of a soldier. This means that when another call comes for men there will be no wasting of months in training the men who will be ready to respond under the call of universal service which has been made ready by universal training.

The suggestion that Col. Roosevelt could duplicate in this country what Lord Derby did for England in filling up the ranks of the army is one worth considering and applying. Roosevelt as chief recruiting officer would put pep into the whole situation.

REPUBLICANS SUPPORT VIGOROUS WAR POLICY

Honest criticism of the administration in the conduct of the war will not be productive of evil. It should be followed by suggestions offered in good faith and with a view of improving the situation. Had not the earlier war policies af Great Britain been subjected to a criticism that was merciless, John Bull would never have been kicked into the efficiency which he has developed in two sanguinary years. Cowed as they have always been by the leader of their party, it is impossible that the democrats will have the hardihood to criticise anything which he may do in directing the course of war with Germany. It will remain for others to point out defects and weakness. It is a thankless role, but not an unpatriotic one, nor should it be shirked because it is painful. So long as Mr. Wilson shows the capacity for national leadership he will have the unqualified support of the Republicans. Should we waver, they will endeavor to sustain him. Should he retreat, they will push forward. This fight is to finish.

LIME REQUIREMENTS OF SOME ALABAMA SOILS

By M. J. Funchess, Professor of Agriculture.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

In the writer's laboratory during the past year, quantitative soil acidity determinations were made on eighty soil samples, collected at random from fifty-four counties in Alabama. Out of this number, sixty-eight samples were found to be sour, and twelve not sour, of the twelve samples not sour, six came from the limestone region of Central Alabama. Fifty-one percent of the sour samples had a lime requirement ranging between a few hundred and twenty-five hundred pounds per acre; while the remainder, or forty-nine percent, had a lime requirement ranging between twenty-five hundred and fifty-five hundred pounds per acre.

It is very likely that clovers would make a very poor growth on at least half of the soils represented in this study, unless the land be liberally limed before planting to clover; it is also very probable that liming would pay good profits on most of the other half of the soils studied, especially where the lime requirement was above fifteen hundred pounds per acre.

At the same time that the above study was in progress, another investigation was made on the soils of Baldwin County, Alabama. In this latter case ninety samples from various parts of the county were tested, with the following results: only one or two of the ninety soils were found to be not sour; and the average lime requirement of all samples was found to be well over one ton per acre, calculated on a depth of six inches of soil.

If these two lines of investigation give a reliable indication of the need for lime in Alabama, then certainly at least half of the common cultivated soils of the State should be greatly benefitted by the application of lime, if clovers are to be successfully grown. And it is very possible that lime will prove profitable on seventy-five or eighty percent of the soils usually classed as upland soils. What is true for Alabama should hold true for most of the Cotton Belt soil east of the Mississippi River, since most of the soils of this area have the same geological origin. However, it is not intended here to convey the impression that clovers cannot be grown at all, unless lime be used; on many fields in Alabama, good crops of bur and crimson clover have been grown without the use of lime. But it is hoped that we may come to understand that it is only through the use of lime that maximum crops may be obtained, and obtained very profitably.

Usually, crushed lime will be found the cheapest and most desirable form of lime to use. The price f. o. b. the crusher usually ranges between seventy-five cents and $1.25 per ton, in bulk. Add to this the freight, and it will be seen that lime can be delivered at most points in the State at a cost not to exceed $2.50 per ton. An increased yield of five hundred pounds of dry clover per acre will about pay for a ton of lime at $2.00 per ton, if we value only the nitrogen at present commercial values. Doubtless there are but few acres in the eastern half of the Cotton Belt from which several times the above increase would not be realized if at least one ton of lime were applied.

If, in the South, we are to produce our main crops cheaper; if we are going to improve our soils; if we are going to grow more livestock; if we are to do these much needed things, then we must grow more clovers, etc. And if we are to get the maximum crops of these clovers, we cannot afford to leave off the use of lime.

BUSINESS MEN ARE URGED TO GIVE FARMERS ASSISTANCE.

Chief Knapp Asserts that Farmers Are Patriotic, and Exhorts Merchants, Bankers and Business Men to Come Across with their Loyalty.

Just a final word before we get to the end of the planting season in the South. The Southern farmer is fully aroused; there is now no necessity for TALKING to him about the growing of food crops. The only thing to be done now is to help with financial credit. Action, not words, will count now. The farmer has not had an easy time and in some sections unless there is help instead of mere talk, acres will remain unplanted which otherwise would grow some food crop for this season. The farmer is willing to run some risks for his country's sake; are merchants and bankers any less patriotic?

In my letter of April 5 I attempted to impress upon the business men the necessity of loking after seed. Now there are three things you can do:

1. Take hold and act. Find out the farmers' needs in the way of seed by making careful canvass of the situation, as many counties are doing, then go out and buy the seed and furnish it to the farmer on credit at cost.

2. A good many acres are remaining unplanted because of lack of team power and implements. You can finance the farmer so he can purchase needed implements and team power; you can assist by purchasing plows and other machinery and renting them to the farmers at reasonable rates, or you can purchase tractors and plows, as some are doing, put a crew on them and plow the land for the farmers at so much an acre. You can also see that every available plow and team is being used, and then if there is a shortage take some action.

3. You can look up the idle labor about town and see that it gets out into the country to help the farmer who is ready to put in crops and needs the finances pointed out above and the labor to do the job. Get all unnecessary road work and improvement to stop until the needs of the farms are supplied.

The season has been late and much may yet be done. This is no time for the holding of meetings to which the farmers must be called out of the field. You must go out and look this situatioin over yourselves and furnish the credit, the finances and the power of your business organization for the service of the farmers. The President appealed to all. He said, "This is your opportunity for signal service, efficient and disinterested."

Many sections in the South are taking hold of the problems mentioned in this letter. ARE YOU DOING YOUR PART?

Yours very truly,
BRADFORD KNAPP,
Chief.

EARLY VARIETIES OF COWPEAS

By J. F. Duggar, Director Alabama Experiment Station and Extension Service.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

Unfortunately, cowpeas for planting are scarce and high priced. Yet even more than the full acreage of this legume is needed this year, largely for human food.

For this year, with high priced meat and meal, we need a large increase in the supply of human food grown on the farm. We need these substitutes at the earliest practicable date.

Early cowpeas is one of the crops that should be grown for this purpose. Moreover, early varieties have special advantages in a year when seed are expensive. This is because two crops of early cowpeas can be grown in a single season in the central and southern parts of the Gulf States. That is, a bushel of some early variety planted in drills on 2 acres or more late in April should ripen a part of its crop by the middle of July, at which time, with fair yields, the mature half of the crop should amount to about 16 bushels. This in turn would be sufficient to plant about 30 additional acres in drills for seed production, or half that amount broadcast for hay.

The Experiment Station at Auburn has repeatedly picked mature New Era cowpeas about the middle of July, has sunnned them for about a week, and then planted on other land in time to obtain mature peas before a late fall frost, or a hay crop before an early frost.

Another early variety is the California Blackeye, also called Six-weeks and Ramshorn, which is less productive than New Era, but which, being white, sells at a higher price for table use.

Let us not forget that green cowpeas constitute one of the most nutritious vegetables, and at less expense for seed than either English peas or snap beans.

BULLETIN ON SPRAYS FOR FRUIT TREES

The Extension Service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Alabama, has recently published its circular No. 7, which gives not only spray directions in detail, but describes how to make all the spray solutions used and gives the life history of each of the principal insects and fungous diseases which attack our fruit crops. This bulletin should be in the hands of every farmer in Alabama who has as many as a half-dozen fruit trees, because this number of trees, well cared for, will provide enough fruit for the average Alabama family, and an acre of fruit trees, well cared for, may almost supply and entire family.

The Shielding Shadow

FIRST EPISODE

Treasure-Trove

Porto Delgado slept in the burning afternoon. The white house fronts, which reflected the sun's intolerable rays, looked down on the empty street that wound from the brown grasses of the Argentine pampas into the pampas again. The green jalousies were drawn fast. Nobody stirred, except a few fishermen upon the wharf, where lay a trim, Yankee-built schooner, the Portland Girl.

Upon her deck, a patch of white against the blue of the sky, a girl was standing. Beside her was a young man, eagerly watching her face.

It was a great moment for each of them. Leontine Walcott, the only daughter of an American business man settled in the little Argentine port, had come to bid farewell to her lover, who was about to sail on one of the strangest cruises that man has ever made.

Jerry Carson, who had chartered the schooner, was a successful American writer. He had met Leontine in the United States two years before, when her father had taken her there on one of his infrequent business trips. He had always been interested in marine exploration. A few months earlier he had made a discovery while gathering material for a novel in the Bahamas. On the strength of it he had chartered the schooner and gone to Porto Delgado, which was not only the starting point for his strange quest, but also the home of the woman whom he had come to love more than anything in the world.

"I shall look across the sea every day in the hope of seeing your ship come sailing home, laden with treasure," said the girl softly.

Jerry Carson hung upon her words eagerly. He took Leontine's hands in his.

"You believe in me," he said half wistfully. "Do you know you are the only human being who does? All the rest have called me a fool. Even my captain thinks I am a fool. And your father—"

He looked at her questioningly. Leontine laughed happily.

"My father is a man of business," she answered. "It is natural that he should put no faith in your idea."

"I suppose it does sound impossible," he admitted. "But that bottle with the message in it, which I picked up on the shores of the Bahamas, was unquestionably genuine. It was signed by Joseph Dexter—the message, I mean. You have heard of him?"

"No, Jerry," said Leontine frankly.

"Dexter was a big man in his day. His ideas were often derided as erratic; nevertheless, they sometimes proved practical, and he was recognized as the master of synthetic chemistry. Even his worst enemies granted that he knew more than the lot of them put together. What they sneered at was his lack of practicality. Well, perhaps they were right. Anyway, he disappeared."

"When?"

"Nine or ten years ago. You were a mere child, but it made a sensation at the time. He had left port in a ship—like myself—to explore the South Atlantic. The ship was wrecked. He was never heard of again. His will was probated, and—that was the end until I picked up his message."

"Jerry, many people have sailed to find Sir Henry Morgan's treasure," said Leontine.

"And failed to find it. But it is found, dear. Dexter wrote that it was found—found on the deserted South Atlantic rock known as Ravengar's Ledge. Not to be found, but found."

Leontine laid her hand impulsively on Jerry's arm.

"Never mind what father thinks or what the others think, Jerry," she said. "I believe in you absolutely. I know that you will find the treasure, and that you will bring it back to me. And that you will come home with all the untold millions of the old buccaneer and—and marry me," she added softly, with downcast eyes.

"How about Sebastian Navarre?" he asked.

"He is nothing to me," answered Leontine.

"Au revoir, Leontine, then," he said, "till I come back to marry you."

"I shall always watch till the day when your ship comes sailing in," said the girl. "I shall watch for you and hold you in my heart always."

* * * * * * *

"Fire!"

Jerry heard the words through his dreams and thought they were part of them.

He heard the shouts more faintly, the running of feet upon the decks; then he was out of his berth and pulling on his clothes.

He dashed out of the little cabin, to meet a wall of smoke that coiled about him, the thick, acrid smoke of a burning ship, composed of particles of all the chemicals that have impregnated the timbers during the course of years of many cargoes.

He staggered back, but now the little cabin itself was filled with the fumes. He grabbed a blanket from the bed, moistened it in water, and wound it about his head. Thus protected, he dashed again into the smoke-clouds.

He tore the blanket from his face and drew in a gulp of air. Then he saw that already the entire after part of the vessel was wreathed in flames. There was no hope of saving her.

In the far distance rose the rugged slopes of upper Patagonia, an inhospitable shore, abandoned to the elements and the wandering savages who inhabited it. Toward this he saw a boat making its way through a turbulent and rising sea.

He realized then that he was alone. The cowardly Levantine crew, which had replaced the New England seamen of former days, had hastily let down the boats and fled in them.

A little boat still hung from the davits.

Hand over hand he swung down the davit ropes. He gained the rocking boat and, with his clasp-knife, cut the ropes that held it.

Suddenly, with a roaring detonation, the burning ship seemed to split into halves. There was a last flicker of red and gold on the surface of the water; then nothing but the level top of the sea, split by the undulating waves.

Jerry pulled with all his might.

Late in the afternoon, with his last ounce of strength, he drove his boat ashore upon a rocky beach, pulled out the cask, and, flinging himself down above the tide level, slept.

At the same hour Leontine, seated upon the cliff, was looking seaward and breathing out a prayer for his safe return.

She breathed a prayer that filled her soul with yearning for her absent lover. Jerry had been gone five months, and her position in Porto Delgado had become increasingly difficult.

So long as her father's business affairs prospered, Sebastian Navarre, the young planter, about whom Jerry had questioned her, had hardly troubled her life.

Two unlucky shipments, which had gone to the bottom uninsured, had almost ruined the once wealthy export merchant. Day by day John Walcott looked into the eyes of a future increasingly grim. Day by day the thoughts of maturing notes perplexed him. For a long time he had been living on a gamble. He had extended his operation with borrowed capital, never doubting their success. Now he saw himself encircled by the creditors who, already surmising his distress, looked dubiously at him as he walked down the sunlit street between his house and his office.

John Walcott had weathered many a storm as a young man. But the future of Leontine was an increasing concern to him. He had never liked Jerry, he did not believe that a professional man's income could be a stable one; again, he was practically denationalized, and liked the people of the Argentine and their ways. Above them all he liked Sebastian Navarre.

Sebastian lived with his brother Diego on a huge ranch ten miles away in the pampas. It covered possibly as large a territory as Wales. It was one of the largest in the country, a hacienda of the old time, where the vaqueros wore silver spurs and herded cattle by the hundred thousand.

He knew, too, that as Sebastian's father-in-law he would have access to capital sufficient to renew his hold on ent he had not dared broach a subject of which Sebastian was perfectly aware. John Walcott argued himself into the conviction that Leontine's interests, not his, were his chief care.

"Rich Man and a Decent Man Wants You to Be His Wife."

He had laughed Jerry Carson to scorn. He could hardly bear to be civil with him when he brought his schooner into Porto Delgado upon his foolish quest.

The only thing that made it bearable, having the American in his house, seeing him engrossed with his daughter, was the thought that Jerry would return a discredited bankrupt.

Daily, after Jerry's departure, her father praised Sebastian and disparaged her absent lover. Leontine grew to hate Sebastian, who did not fail to avail himself of his opportunity to press his suit.

Then came the day when she returned to find a sailor standing in her father's hall, and her father listening eagerly to his story. Sebastian was present as well; he was generally there nowadays. As Leontine entered she saw an inscrutable look upon her father's face.

"You must prepare to hear bad news, dear," he said.

"What is it?" she cried.

"I'm sorry, ma'am," said the sailor. "I thought it was my duty to come here. The Portland Girl is lost, with all hands."

"It's false!" cried Leontine instinctively.

"No, ma'am, it can't be false," the sailor answered.

"Jerry is safe," said Leontine gravely. "If he were dead my heart would tell me so."

John Walcott, who felt sorry for his daughter, made no answer. It was not for two or three days that he spoke to her. Meanwhile, by preconcerted agreement, Sebastian had remained away.

"Leontine," said her father, "you know that my affairs are not in the best shape just now?"

"Yes," she replied listlessly.

"I am very sorry about Jerry Carson's death, but don't you think it is as well to consider it in its proper light?"

"What do you call its 'proper light?'" she asked.

"A happy dispensation," answered John Walcott. "Leontine, you are old enough to stop dreaming and to face the facts of life. You are past twenty. A rich man and a decent man wants you to be his wife. My future is precarious. I will not urge the fact that a marriage with Sebastian would restore my business affairs. I only ask that you will accept this chance."

"Never!" she cried, flushing angrily.

"Why not?"

"Because I love Jerry. And I have promised to be true to him."

"Jerry is dead. There is not one chance in a million of his having survived. Both the ship's boats were found, one destroyed, one empty."

"I will never give up believing in him," said Leontine.

"In his survival?"

"In that and in him. I do not love Sebastian."

John Walcott looked at her in his aggrieved way. He did not pretend to understand the obstinacy of his daughter's nature. But he understood human nature well enough to realize that she was not at present to be overcome.

He told Sebastian, who set himself out to be as sympathetic as his nature would permit. With the exercise of a good deal of self-control he discarded the lover and spoke of his acceptance of her decision, and his wish that they should be friends. Weeks rolled on, turned into months, and vanished. It was nearly a year after Jerry's departure that Sebastian lifted—not threw off—the mask.

He told her that, if he could never win her love, he wanted her companionship. Would she not marry him as a formality and nothing more? She should be free, merely the gracious mistress of his hacienda. He would lay everything at her feet.

Leontine refused, but she was touched by the man's offer. His seeming devotion had affected a heart softened by the death of Jerry.

That night her father told her that unless she married Sebastian he was a ruined man. Otherwise he could not bring himself to ask the loan which would convert failure into success.

Leontine was shaken. What did it matter, so long as she took only Sebastian's name, now that Jerry was dead?

On the next day Sebastian renewed his suit. This time he got a tentative acceptance. Leontine was weakening; she said that she would consider and tell him later.

* * * * * * *

Jerry Carson, picked up by a passing tramp ship from the rock on which he had lived so long, landed at the nearest port to Porto Delgado and made his way afoot to the place which held all his heart's aspirations.

The villagers stared in amazement at the man who had seemingly returned from death. They crowded round him.

"In truth, Sebastian will not be pleased, now that he will find himself in rivalry again with this Gringo," said an old crone to her neighbor.

Jerry heard and demanded an explanation. Soon he had it. Reluctantly—for the Spaniard hates to retail unpleasant news—they confessed that Sebastian was a daily visitor at the house of the merchant, and that his engagement to Leontine was an article of faith in the village.

Burning with anger, which he strove to keep down because of his faith in his beloved, Jerry made his way up the street. The villagers watched him and shrugged their shoulders. "A woman is fickle," they murmured to one another.

Meanwhile the last act of the conspiracy was being performed in the merchant's house. Diego Navarre, Sebastian's brother, was pleading Sebastian's cause. He had tried to disparage Jerry before, but had repented quickly. Now he hoped to overturn the last scruple in the girl's mind.

"This Mr. Carson," said Diego, in his soft, well-modulated voice, "in order to defray the expenses of his schooner trip, he sold some property which had come to him from his late father, did he not?"

"Really, senor, why should you ask me about Mr. Carson's affairs?" inquired the girl.

"Nevertheless, it is true, senorita?"

"Well, what if it is?"

"Well, senorita, you know my brother is an honorable man, and would never have taken an unfair advantage. Let the blame of what may happen to your opinion fall on my devoted head," he added, patting his sleek curls.

"I do not understand you," said Leontine, looking Diego straight in the face.

Faced Diego With the Upraised Iron Ornament.

"Simply, senorita, that when a man gives a note, or an I. O. U., or receipt for moneys advanced, on the strength of the existence of a piece of property, how does one describe his actions in afterward pocketing the proceeds instead of paying his debt?"

"Are you insinuating anything against Mr. Carson?" Leontine asked.

"Yes, senorita," answered Diego boldly. "You are aware that when my brother was in New York last year he took with him an introduction from Senor Walcott to Mr. Carson?"

"No, I did not know it," said Leontine. "Well?"

"My brother knew Mr. Carson well. Mr. Carson, in fact, borrowed a considerable sum of money from him in order to defray the expenses of this journey. And then—well, when the property was sold the money went into the schooner instead of going back to my brother."

Leontine could not help laughing at the flimsy trick.

"If you understood Mr. Carson," she said, "you would know that such a thing is impossible."

Diego Navarre put his hand into his pocket and pulled out a document.

"Do me the honor to look at that senorita," he said.

It was a receipt for a large sum of money, advanced by Sebastian to Jerry Carson on the security of the property which he had inherited from his father. Of course, the signature was a fraud. Sebastian had never seen Jerry in America, but John Walcott, who did not understand the ramifications of the plot, had agreed to say that he had given a letter of introduction in case Leontine questioned him.

The signature was a clumsy fraud, too clumsy for Leontine, who had half a hundred of her lover's letters.

"It is fraudulent," she said calmly, handing it back to the man. "Mr. Carson is not a thief."

At that moment Jerry, in burning anger, entered the room. Hot, dusty, travel-stained, his skin burned to a deep bronze, he confronted the pair.

But whatever doubts may have been in his mind were speedily dissolved. For, with a cry of thankfulness, Leontine tottered toward him and fell into his arms.

His kisses were on her lips, and Diego, standing baffled at this unexpected turn of affairs, was completely helpless. He did not know what to do.

Jerry released the girl and turned upon Diego. He had mistaken him for his brother, whom he somewhat resembled; now, seeing his mistake, he was for the moment equally at a loss. But he saw Diego trying to conceal the piece of paper, and he remembered Leontine's words which he had heard as he entered.

"I think you made the suggestion that I was a thief?" he inquired.

Diego did not answer; he tried to pocket the paper, but his hand shook so from fear that he was unable even to fold it. His eyes sought the door. Leontine interposed.

"Jerry, he says you gave a receipt for a loan of money to his brother, Sebastian," she cried. "He says you borrowed from his brother in America, and that you pledged your father's property, and put the money for its sale into your ship instead of repaying him. That is your receipt."

Jerry, stung to the quick, stepped quickly before the door just in time to intercept Diego.

"Let me see that receipt," he said.

"It doesn't matter," answered Diego.

"If that is my signature I claim the right to look at it. Perhaps I shall honor it."

The Argentine, suddenly realizing that Jerry meant business, stepped back quickly. He ran into a desk which had been used by the merchant formerly for the transaction of domestic affairs, and, stumbling, saw and caught hold of a heavy iron ornament which John Walcott had kept there. He raised it threateningly in his hand and stood confronting Jerry, a sneer on his face, which was, nevertheless, pale from fear.

Jerry turned toward the girl.

"Dearest, will you leave us for a moment?" he asked.

Suddenly he saw Leontine's eyes dilate with fear. She stared over his shoulder.

"Jerry!" she shouted.

Jerry turned just in time to see Diego with the upraised iron ornament standing behind him.

Jerry leaped upon Diego and snatched the implement from his hand. He turned to Leontine.

"Go, dear," he said.

The girl came uncertainly toward her lover. "Jerry, you won't hurt him?" she asked.

"Not if he hands over that forgery," he answered grimly. "I am just going to talk to him, my dear."

She left the room. At the door she caught a last glimpse of Jerry, standing with the iron ornament in his hand, and Diego, with a panther's snarling face, leaning against the desk.

When the door closed behind her Jerry turned to the Argentine.

"I want that receipt," he said. "I want to see it. You came here to lie to my fiancee and intimidate her. What action I shall take upon that shall be decided later. For the present, I want that receipt."

With a curse and a snarl Diego flung himself upon the American. So wild was the fury of his impulse that at first he drove Jerry before him. His hands, with the sinewy strength of the Latin American, twined themselves about Jerry's throat. Jerry felt himself choking.

Jerry let the iron ornament slip from his hand and dashed both his fists into his opponent's face. But Diego's hands still caught at his throat. The room was turning black. The world swam round him. His face, covered with blood from Jerry's blows, Diego fought like the panther he was.

Round and round the room they wrestled. Leontine, who had not gone very far from the door, heard the sounds and flew back in terror to the library, where her father was chatting with Sebastian.

John Walcott, although not privy to the plot, suspected that something was in the wind. When Sebastian sent Diego into the room across the hallway to talk with Leontine, he was sure of his suspicions. He read them, also, in Sebastian's nervous manner and his shaking hands.

Nobody had seen Jerry enter. The big door of the house was always open by day, and communicated directly with the hall.

The two rose to their feet as Leontine entered. She sprang to her father's side, her face white with fear.

"Come and help! Come and help!" she cried. "He is fighting him; he tried to murder him."

Now, for the first time, Walcott and Sebastian could hear the sounds of the fight.

"Who is trying to murder whom?" he asked.

"Diego is murdering Jerry."

"What! You are talking nonsense!" shouted John Walcott.

"I tell you Jerry has come back—back from the dead. Come! Come!"

She pulled her father toward the door, while Sebastian, who was of much more courageous make-up than his brother, and alarmed for his safety, took the initiative. At the door were the house servants, white, terrified, and shaken, jabbering in excitement.

The rumor of Jerry Carson's return had already reached them.

Inside the room Jerry had, by a supreme effort, contrived to shake Diego's hands from his face. The Argentine was badly battered. Jerry released him and stooped to pick up the forged receipt, which had fallen to the ground. As he did so, Diego, misinterpreting the action, and thinking that Jerry was about to attack him again, stumbled as he tried to escape, slipped and fell backward, striking his head upon the heavy ornament which Jerry had thrown down.

His head crashed on the knobbed metal. He threw up his hands and struggled to rise. A singular change passed over his face; he opened his lips, muttered, and then fell back and lay still.

Jerry stooped over the prostrate man. Diego was dead.

Horrified, Jerry rose to his feet and stood staring down at the dead man.

He picked up the iron ornament, now stained and splotched with blood.

"I Tell You Jerry Has Come Back."

Holding it in his hand, he became aware that the door had opened and that a crowd of men and women was with him.

He turned dully. There stood Leontine and her father, side by side with the crying, gesticulating house-servants. Sebastian darted from the group and ran toward his brother's side.

Disregarding Jerry, he raised the dead man's head upon his knee and raised the eyelids. They fell again. He tried once more, and they remained open. Sebastian burst into uncontrollable weeping.

He got up. He approached Jerry. "Murderer!" he cried, shaking his fist in his face. "You have killed him. The law and God shall avenge him."

At the words Leontine darted between them. She flung her arm's about her lover's neck and stood there, facing Sebastian in hot defiance.

"You lie!" she cried. "It was you who planned your brother's coming to me with that forged document in order to trick me. It was he who tried to kill Jerry, coming upon him from behind with the paperweight. If he is dead, he was the would-be murderer."

"I did not kill him," said Jerry. "He had forged my name to a receipt. I demanded the paper. He refused it. I tried to take it from him and he attacked me and nearly strangled me. In falling he struck his head upon the paperweight."

"You lie!" screamed Sebastian, leaping forward and shaking his first again, while the tears streamed down his cheeks. "It was no forgery. It was true. It was your receipt for the money which I lent you in New York last year, to be repaid out of your father's property. And you embezzled the money and invested it in the crazy ship in which you sailed upon your madman's error. Here it is!"

He snatched the paper from the ground, where it had fallen, and held it out before the merchant. Jerry saw John Walcott read the signature and nod his head slowly; and suddenly it dawned upon him that he stood on treacherous ground, that everything was being misinterpreted.

"There is his reason for the murder! Is it not good? Is it not sound?" shouted Sebastian, still beside himself with passion.

"I tell you he fell and struck his head on the paperweight," shouted Jerry. "Look at the back of his head where he bruised it."

"Look at his face!" screamed Sebastian, "where you struck him again and again. No fist could strike a face and leave such scars as those."

He stopped suddenly and cast his eyes toward the middle of Jerry's breast. A malignant smile crept across his features."

"Where is the paperweight?" he shouted.

And suddenly Jerry understood why all had turned against him, why John Walcott had heeded Sebastian's impassioned words and his own not at all.

He was holding in his own hand the blood-stained paperweight.

In the dreadful silence that followed the servant who had gone out returned. Behind him walked two policemen. They looked at John Walcott, who nodded toward Jerry once more. They strode toward him and ranged themselves, one upon either side.

Jerry saw the averted or menacing faces; he turned to Leontine. He said nothing, but looked into her face in question.

And he saw there the old love still, but, mingled with it, wonder, and doubt and fear. Her eyes flinched before his and sought the paperweight beside him.

Jerry squared his shoulders and held out his hands to the policemen.

SECOND EPISODE

Into the Depths.

"The sentence of this court is that the prisoner be confined in penal servitude for the duration of his life!"

Leontine rose from her place among the spectators. Her tall, slender figure, robed in black, attracted the instant attention of the assemblage.

"He is not guilty! He is not guilty!" she cried, in tones that rang through the packed court.

There was a sympathetic stir among those who were present. Although the supposed murder of Diego Navarre, brother of the richest man in the district, had aroused violent antagonism toward Jerry, Leontine's championship of her lover had somewhat changed public sentiment.

"Leontine, There's Got to Be an End of This."

"Put that woman out!" thundered the judge who had pronounced the sentence.

But the command was superfluous. Leontine reeled and fell unconscious into her father's arms.

Jerry's first thought when he heard the verdict was of pity for Leontine. His second was that somehow he would escape to her.

She went to see him the following day before he was removed to the penal institution.

"Jerry—Jerry, darling, I shall devote my life to setting you free," she said. "You were not spared in the wreck to be lost to me in this way."

He urged her to forget him, to be happy with another, but he knew that the words signified nothing to either of them. Their lips met through the lattice. Then she was gone, and Jerry looked into the blackness of a death in life.

A few weeks after the trial, when Jerry had already been removed to the up-country prison, John Walcott approached his daughter again upon the subject of Sebastian.

"It means the difference between wealth and ruin," he told her bluntly. "If you become his wife, he will advance me enough money to retrieve my affairs. If you refuse, we shall be penniless beggars."

Leontine consented. Before the month was out Sebastian had again asked her to be his wife. He had been very patient, very gentle with her for a long time past. Leontine felt trapped and helpless. She promised him his answer soon.

* * * * * * *

"As well rot there as here!"

The speaker, an old convict who had served the greater part of his life in the penitentiary, looked at Jerry hopelessly as he spoke.

Orders had come that all life prisoners were to be removed from the mainland and transported to a lonely island in the Atlantic.

Jerry ground his teeth with helpless rage when he heard it. He had never abandoned the hope of effecting his escape.

A week later the prisoners were manacled and marched down to the wharf, where the convict ship lay ready to transport them. They were marched aboard and taken into the hold.

Only for a brief half-hour each day were the prisoners allowed on deck in batches, for exercise.

They were chained in couples. By good luck Jerry's chain companion was the old convict who had expressed indifference as to their destination.

Jerry and the old man often discussed the possibilities of escape. The elder convict ridiculed these. Jerry felt sure that escape was feasible anywhere.

"If we could lower that boat, for instance," he suggested, indicating a little craft swung out near the stern.

"If you could escape the bullets of the guards, you'd die of thirst," said the other.

"There's a water cask inside," said Jerry.

"How about food?" sneered his companion.

During succeeding days Jerry saved scraps of the coarse food that was flung to the prisoners. During the course of their walks on deck he managed to slip these scraps inside the craft.

On the third morning after Jerry had spoken about the boat the old man, attempting to rise, fell back with a groan. Jerry laid his hand upon his forehead and found that he was in a burning fever.

Half a dozen similar cases had developed among the convicts. The ship's doctor knew at once what the trouble was. It was the dreaded prison fever, or typhus.

The epidemic ran riot. Weakened by their hardships and privations, the sick men were unable to resist the ravages of the disease.

Two more men died that day. Toward nightfall it was evident to Jerry that his friend was sinking fast. The old man called him to his side.

"Bend over me, lad," he said. "I'm gone. Thanks be to God, I'm going to a better place than the world has been."

"Thirty years ago," whispered the old man, "I—I killed a man. That's what I have suffered for. A man who insulted my daughter. If he hadn't been a government employee I'd have gone free. Curse him!

"Lad, I don't know what you've done, but it can't have been worse than me. The time will come when you'll grow resigned, too, as I did. The time will come when it'll have seared your heart numb like mine. I'm going now. You'll stay by me till it's over."

Jerry promised. And suddenly there came into his brain a hope, so weird and so grotesque, that at first he flung it from him as the dream of a madman.

It returned with renewed force. It was the most desperate scheme that had ever entered a human brain.

Toward midnight the old man, who had been muttering in his delirium ceaselessly since sunset, sat up suddenly, shouted, and pointed into the darkness.

"Maria Angela!" he cried exultantly.

Next moment he fell back dead into Jerry's arms.

The body would be buried at night, after it had been placed in the rough-hewn coffin.

All Jerry's schemes depended on whether the coffin was flung from the bow or from the stern. The former event meant life; the latter death.

He raised the hardly yet cold body of the old man in his arms and laid it on the bench where the dead were placed. None of the guards would penetrate more than a few feet beyond the door, and then they drove back the prisoners with whips and curses.

About half an hour later the door was opened, and two men appeared, carrying the coffin, a mere shell of wood. They took the old man's body and thrust it within, afterward fastening down the lid with nails.

It was fortunate for Jerry's scheme that some interval occurred between the nailing down of the coffin and the burial. This was due to the fact that the two functions were performed by different men; the first by the guards, the second by the seamen, who had refused to enter the plague-hole.

As soon as the guards had withdrawn Jerry set to work to remove the lid with a flat piece of wood which he had found in the hold. It was not a difficult task, for the nailing had been a task hurriedly performed, and the wood was flimsy. Within a short space of time, working in the dark, he had managed to open the coffin.

Gently he took out the body of his friend and deposited it in a corner of the hold. Then he entered the coffin and pulled on the lid again.

To fasten it in any way was a difficult task, but by inserting his fingers into the rough edges of the under part of the lid, he contrived, after much effort, to secure it in some degree. And he lay there, choking in the narrow space, with his mouth against a crack between the lid and the casket.

Then he saw the glimmer of a lantern near him and heard the voices of the guards.

"Get hold of your end!"

"Say, this lid ain't on. Where's the hammer?"

"Hurry up! Do you want us to die of the plague?" yelled one of the two sailors at the door.

The guards raised the coffin and, panting under their efforts, carried it to the seamen, who, taking it in turn, bore it along the passage to the stairs, and began to ascend them.

Jerry was dimly aware that the coffin had been set down. He wondered, without very much interest, whether it was at the bow or at the stern end.

"Let her go!"

He had a horrible sense of falling; he heard the splash of the coffin against the waves, felt the stream about him, and, with the thought of Leontine in his mind, roused himself with a mighty effort and burst off the lid.

* * * * * * *

The falling coffin spilled him into the depths of the ocean. He felt himself falling as the plummet falls. Down, down he went; then his progress was arrested, and he struck madly upward, to seek the air of night, and to die under the stars if need be.

With a leap like that of the mullet he gained the surface of the water. He drew in a breath of air till his lungs seemed to crack. The great bulk of the convict craft was just ahead of him.

The whole incident had occupied no longer than was required for the slow-going vessel to traverse her own length of distance. The coffin had been swung clear from the bow.

It was, in fact, a jest of the coarse-minded sailors to heave the coffin in the track the ship was to make, in the hope that her own bow would catch it and cleave it in the descent.

Jerry had been swung from the bow, but the ship's stern was passing him. Hand over hand he tried to catch her—the most hopeless task ever essayed by any man.

But he caught sight of a rope that hung from the stern, trailing in the water. It was, in fact, the log rope. Jerry seized it and clung, exhausted, while the ship dragged him through the water.

He looked up in despair. It might be possible to gain the deck, but how could he lower the little boat he had prepared and make his escape?

As if in answer to his question, he saw that the east was lighting. The last chance of darkness had abandoned him. There was no hope. At best, he could return to that life which he had escaped.

Then, as he watched, he saw the dawn mist begin to creep across the waters. It would shroud everything until the sun came up. And instantly he began to swarm up the log rope. Battered by waves that flung him against the side of the ship, bruised and aching, at last he stood upon the deck.

The fog was closing in; the sea was invisible, but the deck was clear from end to end.

He rushed to the davits and hauled alternately on both ropes. The little boat began to descend, first by the stern, then by the bow. The creaking sound was heard upon the bridge. Jerry heard the man at the wheel shout, and then another. He worked wildly. At last he got the bow into the water. The boat swung through the waves grotesquely. He got the stern down. The boat began to fill.

He had no knife, and there was no way to cut the ropes, no means except to let them run out, which meant untying the knots. There was no time for this.

No time, for a seaman was already rushing toward him, and, seeing the convict clothes, he doubled his fists and dashed at him with curses on his lips.

Jerry's fist shot out and floored him. As the seaman toppled Jerry stooped down and, seizing his clasp-knife from his pocket, cut the ropes.

Half a dozen seaman were upon him now. One, the first mate, was flourishing a revolver. He fired, and the bullet sung past Jerry's head.

Jerry did not hesitate to fight, but plunged toward the boat, already a good distance away. As he plunged he heard a second shot strike the water.

Then he was mercifully hidden in the shrouding fog and the ship glided like a phantom thing into the distance.

He struck out in the direction of the boat, and, by a miracle, he found it. It was floating upon its keel, and, though a little heavy with water, in no danger of sinking.

Jerry Battles With the Sailor Who Tries to Prevent His Escape.

He clambered in, and, to his delight, found that the oars and water cask, as well as the scraps of food, had rolled beneath a thwart. He took the oars and pulled.

And he laughed as he reflected that it made no difference in which direction he pulled. Death confronted him every way upon the breast of the South Atlantic, with no land within four hundred miles in any direction.

Jerry set his course in a southerly direction.

All through the day he drove the craft forward. All day he searched the horizon to find some trace of a passing ship, but always in vain. He was far out of the course of ocean travel. And night fell, and the scraps of food were gone.

Dawn found him half delirious from want of sleep and fatigue. The sea was running heavier, and he had to bail ceaselessly. The third day he pulled like an automaton. The heaving waves, across which he had to set his course to keep the boat from foundering, the gray sky that never admitted sunlight, seemed like an eternity in monotone engulfing him. Often he lost consciousness of his whereabouts, and in fancy was back in Porto Delgado with Leontine again, and the man who had endured his privations was another.

What awakened him from a lethargy which would have been ended by drowning was the sudden discovery that his water supply was gone.

He had drunk without knowing that he was drinking; mechanically his hands and lips and throat had gone through the acts necessary to retain life within the body. But suddenly he realized that he was crouching in a choppy sea above the empty cask. And with this realization the dreams faded. Clear-headed, but weak, Jerry looked death in the face as he thought before the monster's final spring.

Then, with a cry of joy, he realized that not five miles distant, to port, and disappearing behind him, was a spit of land, hardly elevated above the surface at that distance.

He had been passing it; in another half hour he would have missed it.

With eager hands he pulled the boat around, and, putting about, began to pull with all his might toward the ledge.

Suddenly, with a crash, the boat went hard and fast upon a rock. A needle fang pierced her. She began to fill. Jerry sprang out, clung to the rock, felt bottom, and began to wade through the icy water until he emerged, high, but not dry, upon the shelving sand.

A little cave in the base of the low cliff gaped at his side. He crept into it and never knew he fell asleep.

* * * * * * *

When he opened his eyes the sun, appearing for the first time in many days, was high in the sky. The warm sunshine flooded the island and a beam, entering the cave, danced on the jagged rock.

Jerry did not at first remember what had happened. It took some minutes before the recollection of that nightmare in the boat had filtered through the gates of his mind.

He was apparently upon a tiny uncharted island in the Atlantic, pounded incessantly by the great waves that spent their fury on the shelving sands. What he had thought a line of cliffs was merely groups of rocks, divided by rillets of fresh water that bounded down from the acclivity above. Upon the other side of the islet the beating of the breakers could be heard plainly.

He ascended the low slope, and saw the Atlantic lashing at the strip of shore beyond. The isle was barely a quarter of a mile in breadth, and perhaps a mile long. It was the summit of a submerged mountain, bare, treeless, thinly covered with sparse grasses, and absolutely uninhabited.

Stumbling down toward his cave, Jerry had his wits almost shaken by an amazing discovery. Upon the hard sand, in a wind-sheltered nook between two rocks, he saw the imprint of a naked foot.

Jerry went back to the cave, and here his second surprise waited him. It sent the blood coursing tumultuously through his veins. It made him want to shout in ecstasy.

No savage, but a white man, or, at least, a civilized man, had tenanted those shores. Within the cave were packing cases, containing a supply of food which must be sufficient for two years! He saw canned beef, biscuit of the army kind, piled from the sandy floor to the rocky roof; jams, dainties, rations, which must have been carried there for a party of scientific explorers rather than ships' crews or settlers.

He gaped in amazement at the condensed milk, the sugar, the flour, tea, coffee, matches. Near by were scattered some rusty instruments resembling theodolites.

He thought he understood. This island was not unknown, then. A party from some observatory had come here, probably to watch a solar eclipse.

But there was food enough to last a whole party six months and more. And there was a pile of empty cans behind him, where the cave narrowed to a fox-hole.

He could not understand. He left the cave and paced the sands, trying to solve the problem. Who had been here, and why had they brought food in such quantity?

It was then that the third surprise afforded him an answer to his questions.

Stretched out upon the sand was a whitened skeleton—a man's, Jerry thought, and an old man's, for the spine was curved at the region of the shoulders, and the teeth, which had not all gone from the jaws, were worn and crooked.

Yet still he did not understand.

He sat there, puzzling. He paced the strip of sand once more, until, feeling the pangs of hunger rise as his strength returned, he went back into the cave to procure food.

In a large packing case which had been opened he found some rusty implements of aluminum—a saucepan, a teakettle, a frying pan. Searching about he came on some stores of compressed peat, used for fuel. It was nearly all gone, evidently the dead man had lived a long time on the island.

He made a meal and ate as sparingly as his ravenous appetite would permit. Afterward he stretched himself in the sun to sleep. His hands groped idly in the sand.

The left hand closed upon a bottle, buried there by the wind-drifts. Idly he picked it up. Within it was a manuscript.

Jerry was wide awake in an instant. He knew that this was the clue, the answer to his perplexities.

As he drew out the roll his eyes fell upon the name written at the bottom. It was Joseph Dexter! And now everything was made clear.

Fate had brought him to Ravengar ledge, the almost unknown islet in the South Atlantic, to find which he had fitted out the schooner, the place where Morgan, the buccaneer, had hidden his treasure hoard. The skeleton was that of Dexter.

Feverishly he unrolled the manuscript and began to read:

"To Whom It May Concern: Be it known that here, on the Ledge of Ravengar, there are two treasures—one of gold, the other of far more value. The first I have found—it is that of Sir Henry Morgan, buccaneer; the other I have made. Here in my dead hand you will find it—three black pellets. To the finder they mean power beyond all dreams of men—"

Jerry laid down the manuscript and hastened to the skeleton. There, clutched in the bony fingers, he found the pellets which old Dexter had held grasped tightly, even in death.

Jerry picked them up and started back to the cave. Suddenly, out of the rising tide, a snakelike arm protruded, sought him, and grasped him about the leg.

Another and another followed. Struggling, shouting, Jerry felt himself being dragged into the water. And now, held fast in the fleshy, clinging tenacles, he looked, waist-deep in the sea, into the cruel eyes and parrotlike beak of a huge octopus.

Unnerved but desperate, he thrust his fists into the creature's face. He fought with all the fury of his despair. It was the irony of fate that at this moment, when life, which had taken all away, had restored more than she took, death in such hideous form should have beset him.

But the creature, squirming on the sandy bottom, moved toward the deep water. The ocean level reached Jerry's shoulders, the little shore waves lapped his neck, they closed over his mouth. For an instant he fought free and filled his lungs with air; then the waves closed silently above him.

Leontine did not give Sebastian his answer soon, and he, coming to realize that if he demanded one it would be adverse, ceased to press her. He aided John Walcott in his business with a substantial loan, in return for the merchant's promise to assist him in his suit to the best of his ability. Sebastian settled down for a long siege.

About six months after the verdict a letter came to Leontine from the prison authorities. Having satisfied themselves that Jerry had escaped from the ship, and being certain of his death, these gave out the information that he had died in the epidemic, in order to cover their own negligence.

Jerry was dead! That was the one fact that burned itself into Leontine's brain. He was dead, and now life itself was worthless. The best that she could do was to be of use to others. That was her resolution in the days that followed the numbing shock of the intelligence.

Thus the day came when, at her father's pleading, she placed her hand in that of Sebastian Navarre.

"I consent, upon our understanding," she said to the Argentine.

John Walcott had continued to represent to his daughter that his finances were in a critical state. He had said nothing of Sebastian's loan, which had actually so far improved his position that he saw prospects of repaying it and resuming his old status. To save her father Leontine had consented.

Her consent was coupled with the restriction that the marriage was to be one in name only, until Sebastian had won her love. That, she knew, would never happen. But Sebastian, infatuated with the girl, believed that, once he had her as his wife, the path to happiness would be a smooth one.

They were married at the American consulate in Porto Delgado, and sailed for New York, where Sebastian was establishing a branch of his business. They secured a splendid apartment on Riverside drive, and Leontine found herself with all that money could command.

Sebastian was very patient for the first month after her arrival. Leontine, though she knew that she could never love him, felt her heart softening.

Then came what she had long dreaded. Sebastian resolved to use other means than those he had adopted, which seemed impossible of success.

Leontine was amazed and terrified at the transformation in his appearance as he entered the apartment that evening. He seemed a different man. Sebastian had always appeared a gentleman at least in externals. Now he came in violently, his hat on the back of his head, his steps uncertain. To her horror, Leontine saw that he had been drinking.

"Leontine, there's got to be an end of this," he said thickly.

She rose and stood before him in dumb terror, staring into his flushed face.

"I've married you, I've given you everything you want, and I've tried to make you happy. What's your game? What are you holding out for, eh?"

"Sebastian, you—you know your promise," faltered the girl.

He caught her fiercely by the wrist and thrust his face into hers. The smell of brandy on his breath nauseated her.

"A ruse, my dear," he mumbled. "See here, Leontine, you might as well give in. You know you haven't any legal rights in the matter. What's enough, isn't it? If you know how I love you, Leontine—"

A maudlin fit overcame him. He burst into tears, while the girl looked at him in ever-increasing disgust.

"I love you, Leontine," he babbled. "What have I done to deserve this treatment? I'll be your slave and do anything you ask me if only you'll try to love me a little. Promise me you'll try, Leontine."

He grasped her in his arms and pressed his kisses upon her lips and throat and brow. Leontine, writhing helplessly in his clutch, felt herself impotent.

Sebastian, dragging her across the room suddenly released her. An inarticulate cry broke from his lips. Leontine opened her eyes, reeling as she strove to keep her foothold. She saw upon Sebastian's face stupefaction, and fear, frantic fear.

He was pointing across the room and muttering. His gestures were those of a madman.

Leontine's gaze followed his. In a far corner, at the height of the head of a man, she saw two burning eyes, and, close beneath them, two white hands, one of which clutched a dagger.

That was all. There was no body, nothing but the two eyes and the white hands that clutched the steel.

But the Thing was alive. The eyes glowed with hatred that made them orbs of fire. Leontine saw one of the hands raise the dagger and move toward the Argentine.

Sebastian saw that too. His first shock of terror had sent him staggering back against the wall, numbed, dazed and palsied. Now he screamed in mortal fear, turned, and dashed from the room. Leontine heard him running down the hall. The hall door opened and slammed. Sebastian was gone.

FOURTH EPISODE

The Earthquake.

Since the luminous hands and eyes had appeared in the corner of Leontine's room for the second time, Sebastian had ceased to persecute her. Ostensibly they lived amicably together, yet Sebastian's heart was forever filled with gnawing jealousy of the dead Jerry, who still, as he well knew, possessed the soul of the woman who was his wife in name alone.

He had expected that the deadlock of this difficult situation would be broken long before. But the phenomenon of the burning eyes, which Sebastian attributed to the supernatural, had shocked and stunned him. Then he had been terrified by the sudden apearance of One Lamp Louie, alias Louis Lamb, his confederate in crime.

Another thing that had frightened him was the appearance of the mysterious stranger, Ravengar. Sebastian felt instinctively that Ravengar's entrance into his life boded evil for him.

Finally, there was Louie's strange disappearance. Sebastian knew that the fellow had not perished in the fire.

It was nearly four months after Louie's disappearance when Sebastian, passing behind his wife's chair as Leontine sat reading the newspaper, found himself staring into a photographic reproduction of Louie's face. Underneath the photograph was a title referring to Louis Lamb, the hermit of White's Village, Western Canada, who had been made a millionaire in a day by the discovery of gold on a claim which he had staked out on a mountain side.

The article went on to say that a recent earthquake had disrupted a considerable part of the mountainside, uncovering a rich alluvial deposit, drained, doubtless, from a mother lode of incalculable richness somewhere in the heart of the mountain.

Sebastian stared at the photograph in silence.

Leontine looked up at her husband, instinctively drawing away from him. Sebastian noted the movement.

"We're going west tomorrow," he said curtly.

"West? Where?" asked Leontine.

"White's Village. The place you're reading about. Did you ever see that man before?"

"Yes. He looks like that queer friend of yours whom we saw in the cabaret on the night of the fire, but I have forgotten his name."

"Well, that's he, and I staked him to his claim," answered Sebastian.

He left her abruptly, and, returning to his own room, began to pace to and fro restlessly, planning for the future.

He would end Louie's reputation. He would terrify the little man, if not into sharing his wealth, at any rate into a promise never to see him again.

With the fear of Lamb gone, he could concentrate his mind upon the winning of Leontine's love.

And suddenly he stiffened where he stood, and his eyes fixed themselves upon a corner of the room. There was the strange apparition which had haunted him, no hallucination now, he could swear. He had never expected to see it again. It burned itself upon his eyeballs, that vision of the flaming eyes and the two dead-white hands beneath them.

One of the hands raised itself and traced the letters of a word upon the air in luminous letters that flickered, wavered and disappeared.

"Confess!" was written there.

With a groan Sebastian dropped into a chair and put his hands across his face.

When at last he looked up, the vision had vanished.

* * * * * * * *

There were quite a few things that Mr. Louis Lamb knew. He knew his name, and also his nickname, "One Lamp Louie," which had followed him to White's Village, Western Canada, in the way that nicknames do. He knew that he was prospecting for gold, and that he was one of an assorted mining population drawn to that place by the uncovering of gold deposits following upon an earthquake. He knew that he had properly staked out a claim, and that he lived in a little shack near by, remote from the village.

He knew that a scar ran along the top of his head, and he surmised that he must have got it in some accident or brawl. But beyond these elementary facts his mind was extremely hazy about his past.

The simple cause of his forgetfulness was not absence of mind, in its ordinary aspect, but the fact that he had been struck across the head by a falling beam in the cabaret fire.

How Mr. Lamb had made his way to Western Canada and engaged in the prospecting profession, how he had managed to build up some sort of coherent personality out of the remnants that were left uninjured is a matter for neurologists to explain. Suffice it that at a certain moment he found himself staring with unusual interest into the debris of a pan of earth and pebbles, which he had washed with water from a mountain stream.

In the bottom of this, in place of the few canary-colored flakes that he had expected to find, were three nuggets the size of lima beans, lying in a little mound of gold dust.

Louis Lamb emptied them into the little bag of dust which he wore about his body. Then he scooped up another panful of debris and started to wash it too. But no washing was needed. Nuggets of several shapes and sizes were lying in it. And nuggets of various shapes and sizes lay in the gravel at his feet.

There was no possibility of mistaking what had happened. The recent seismic disturbances had uncovered an alluvial deposit washed down through the course of ages by the streams from the great lode somewhere in the mountain side.

Louie had staked off this angle of the river bed, just where the torrent, sweeping past, had deposited its wealth, the heavier gold, leaving the pebbles to strew themselves anywhere along the river's further course.

After the first shock of the discovery had passed, he looked cautiously about him. Nobody was near. Nobody wanted to spy upon his claim, which was supposed to be worthless.

He worked with intense secrecy for weeks, always increasing his store of gold, which he concealed in a hole dug in the ground beneath the plank floor of his cabin. Then, somehow, the secret became common property.

It was impossible for Louie to keep it in such a place as White's Village. Besides, other strikes had been made. The whole side of the disrupted mountain teemed with gold.

"Red" Finn was interested in the hermit's mysterious journeys to and fro between his hut and his claim. "Red" had "felt" the presence of money in White's Village. He had gone to investigate, and, after satisfying himself that the bees were gathering in a store for him, he summoned two or three of his colleagues at present hiding in various remote villages from the inquisitiveness of the Northwest mounted police.

When they arrived, "Red" pointed out Louie's shack and indicated that there was probably a fortune inside it.

The hoard had increased to a veritable fortune when one evening Louie decided to go downtown. He had his provisions to purchase; but the instinct which had sent him there took him to the railroad depot instead of to the store. On the platform, waiting for the train to come in, stood a tall, well-dressed, athletic man, with grayish hair and a strange look of mystery upon his face.

"Well, Mr. Lamb, this is a pleasure," said Ravengar.

Louie looked at him. "I don't know you; I never saw you before," he growled suspiciously, his mind reverting to his store.

"No?" laughed Ravengar. "Perhaps we may get better acquainted with each other later."

Louie snarled at him and slouched away. He was turning back into the village when the train was heard, and the same instinct that had taken him to the platform now caused him to wait for the passengers.

Sebastian and Leontine, descending from their carriage, were amazed to see Ravengar waiting for them. Leontine looked on him with fear; Sebastian with frantic terror.

"Welcome to White's Village," said Ravengar, raising his hat.

"What are you doing here?" demanded Sebastian uneasily.

"Seeking my fortune—the same as yourself, my dear Navarre," Ravengar answered.

Before Sebastian could think of a reply his eyes lit on Louis Lamb, who, standing behind a post, watched the party with a dour grimace. He staggered an instant; then, associating the presence of the two men with some conspiracy, he blazed into anger. He strode toward Louie.

"How do you do!" he said curtly, offering him his hand.

Louie's eyes blazed. "I don't know you, I tell you," he shouted. "I never saw you in my life before—none of you."

As Sebastian stood staring at him helplessly, One Lamp Louie slouched off in the direction of his shack; and, realizing that he had left it for nearly an hour he broke into a terrified amble.

Sebastian, looking back, saw Ravengar helping Leontine into the carriage.

* * * * * * * *

Once within his shack, Louie rushed to the place where he hid his gold and pulled up the board. He breathed a sigh of relief. It was untouched.

But the memory of the two strangers who had greeted him terrified him.

He stared out of his little window. The sweat dripped from his face. In his arms he hugged the loaded shotgun, and he fancied that he saw an enemy beneath each bush, and in every quivering shadow.

As he crossed the floor his sharp ears seemed to tell him that somebody was near. He almost thought he heard a sound within the shack. He clutched his shotgun tighter and peered about him. But nobody was there.

Then suddenly, out of the shadows of the far corner of the room, two luminous eyes and two dead-white hands seemed to materialize themselves. Louie's eyes widened. He stared at the fiery eyes which fixed themselves on his.

The eyes burned themselves into his brain. Louie began to stiffen like a cataleptic.

And in his half-dead brain the following words were registered:

"Write out the statement you have to make concerning your forgery, on behalf of Sebastian Navarre, which sent Jerry Carson to the penitentiary for a murder which he never committed."

Louie's hand went out automatically toward a pencil and a pad of paper upon the pine table in the shack. Louie had not placed them there. They were there now, and it did not surprise him, because he was living upon a plane where nothing is surprising.

"I wish to confess my part in the forgery which ruined Jerry Carson," wrote Louie's hand, in obedience to his docile, subconscious mind. Louis himself sat rigidly at the table, motionless and stiff, except for the pliant right forearm and fingers. Or perhaps it was the real Louie who wrote, and only the shell, with its history of crime and weakness, that sat stiff in the chair.

The door of the shack opened. Sebastian appeared. But Louie sat stiff and motionless, and his fingers slowly formed the words with the pencil.

Sebastian, driven to desperation by Ravengar's appearance and Louie's strange behavior, had resolved to have it out with his partner that night.

Peering over Louie's shoulder, to his horror Sebastian saw the complete confession of the crime.

"So that's your game, is it?" he demanded through his teeth. "I guessed something was wrong. You pitiful fool, why didn't you come to me? Who's backing you? Don't you know that if that gets out it will mean punishment to you as well as to me?"

Louie stared into the man's face wonderingly. He had gone to sleep, as he thought, and now had awakened in the clutches of this stranger.

"Who are you?" he snarled, dodging out of Sebastian's grasp. "What do you want? My gold, that's what you want!"

With a spring he had reached the loaded shotgun, and he clasped it in his arms as a child clutches a doll.

Sebastian leaped forward and tried to snatch the gun out of his hands.

"Whom are you confessing to?" he shouted. "What do you want to confess for? Aren't you in this game as deep as I am?"

He grasped the barrel with both hands, but little Louie seemed possessed by a demon. The fear of losing his hoard gave him preternatural strength.

"Get out or I'll shoot!" he screamed, wresting the gun from Sebastian.

"I'll have that fake confession of yours first," Sebastian shouted.

He darted to the table. The pad was there, and the pencil, but the confession was gone. Sebastian, forgetful of his danger in the terror that came over him, went down on hands and knees, and began hunting upon the floor.

"Get out!" screamed Louie, hammering him with the butt of his weapon.

"Give up that confession!" screamed Sebastian, attempting to close with him again.

For answer Louie stepped back and aimed the gun at the intruder's head. Sebastian dodged, sought the shack door, opened it, and ran outside.

Louie was mad. That was the only possible explanation.

* * * * * * *

By the time Sebastian had reached the hotel he was outwardly calm again.

Passing beneath the window of the room in which Leontine sat, he saw that Ravengar was still there. The two were seated together in front of a table, on which a lamp was burning. Upon the table was an envelope.

As he halted uncertainly beneath the window, he saw Leontine look at the table. Her glance fell upon the envelope. Half in wonder, she turned it over. Nothing was written on it, and the flap was unsealed.

She offered it to Ravengar, who shook his head. It was not his.

"I wonder whether it is meant for me," Sebastian heard Leontine say.

She drew a folded sheet of paper from within. Sebastian, creeping close beneath the window, could see that it was a closely written page.

Leontine slightly raised the shade of the lamp to read it. The light fell full on the page.

"I wish to confess my part in the conspiracy which ruined Jerry Carson," Sebastian read.

For the moment his knees shook under him. So the plan had advanced thus far already! A copy had already been made and left with Leontine!

He clung to the window sill and trembled like a man in an ague. Everything seemed lost. Then came the reaction of fury. He ran into the hotel, dashed open the door of the room, and entered.

"Give me that paper!" he shouted to Leontine.

Leontine, startled by his sudden appearance, hesitated. Then she put the hand which held the paper behind her.

"It is not yours, Sebastian," she answered.

Sebastian sprang at her and caught at her arm, but Leontine was too quick for him. She held the paper out to Ravengar.

"Keep this for me," she said.

Ravengar took the paper, and Sebastian, gnawing his lip, looked from one to the other alternately.

"Give me that paper," he demanded of Ravengar.

"I received it from Mrs. Navarre. I shall return it to her when she requests it from me," said Ravengar calmly.

He moved toward the door, bowed to Leontine, and went along the passage in the direction of his room. Sebastian flung himself out of the room and strode along the passage.

A party of men in shirt sleeves were gambling in one of the rooms. They were drinking, and their voices rose angrily as they quarreled and slammed down the cards. Sebastian strode past them. In the next room he saw Ravengar, standing, the paper in his hand. He entered without knocking.

"Give me that paper, damn you!" he shouted.

Ravengar only looked at him fixedly. Sebastian hesitated. He could not decide what to do.

"You see, Mr. Ravengar, that is an important business paper," he continued, in a quieter voice. "It is the confession of a former partner of mine who cheated me out of some property. I have promised not to prosecute him provided he returns the money. It is worth ten thousand dollars to me, and since it has come into your hands I am willing to pay you that much for it."

"You must apply to Mrs. Navarre," answered Ravengar.

Sebastian hesitated an instant.

The Flaming Eyes and the Two Dead White Hands Beneath.

"Get Out or I'll Shoot You!" He Screamed.

Then he sprang at him like a tiger and locked his arms about him, the hands reaching toward the throat.

The suddenness of his leap surprised Ravengar, who reeled and went staggering back against the table.

In the flash of an interval before they closed Ravengar freed his right hand and sent the fist crashing into Sebastian's face. As Sebastian released him and staggered back Ravengar followed with a second blow from his left, which caught the Argentine beneath the chin. Sebastian dropped with a moan and crumpled up on the floor.

As Ravengar stood over him a picture fell from the wall beside him. A moment later the water bottle upon the table went crashing down in splinters of broken glass.

Ravengar looked about him in wonder.

Shrieks and cries resounded through the hotel. Through the darkness outside a sudden stream of light shot up.

* * * * * * *

The volcanic eruption had blown the top off the mountain, had rent the ground into deep fissures from which the subterranean fumes, ascending, sent up a cloud of inky smoke that, added to the darkness of a moonless night, made the panic universal.

Leontine was standing in her room when the catastrophe occurred.

Suddenly she was flung off her feet by the force of the earthquake. Stunned, she mercifully escaped knowledge of its first horrors. When she recovered she found herself unhurt, but pinned between two scantlings that had fallen one on either side of her.

Cries and groans came to her ears from all sides.

Then through the darkness she heard a man's voice calling. "Leontine! Leontine!" he was saying.

And a thrill of joy leaped into her heart and set it to beating fast. It was Ravengar.

She answered faintly, and presently, guided by her voice, he found her.

"You are not hurt?" he inquired anxiously. She could not see his face, even though he stood beside her.

"No," she replied. "And you?"

"I think not," he answered, placing one arm around her to support her.

"You had better let me carry you," he continued. "You will fall over the beams. I know the way out—at least, I found the way in. There has been an earthquake." He raised her into his arms, and she lay there, one arm about his neck, her hair drifting across his face.

Carefully he picked his way toward the door. Then he set her down.

"I am going back for your husband," he said. "Stay there till I return."

Leontine looked about her. Several people lay half-buried in the debris of the hotel. A voice was calling pitifully from what had been the dining room. A man came stealthily across the fallen beams, guided by the sound of the voice.

It was "Red" Finn, who had been gambling with his companions in the next room to Ravengar's. He had heard the sounds of the quarrel, and Sebastian's offer of ten thousand dollars for a certain paper. Then, as the fight began, he had peered cautiously into the room and had seen Ravengar slip the paper into his pocket.

Now he was prowling among the ruins of the hotel, having almost miraculously escaped injury in the catastrophe.

At length his watch was rewarded. He saw Ravengar come staggering along the ruined wall, bearing Sebastian in his arms. He carried him to the porch and set him down beside Leontine. Sebastian groaned and opened his eyes. He tried to rise, Ravengar bent over him.

"Red" Finn crept cautiously nearer. Then something happened which convinced him that this was his lucky day.

The paper which he contemplated snatching from Ravengar's pocket dropped out as he bent over Sebastian. In an instant "Red" had leaped upon it and possessed himself of it and taken flight.

Only Leontine saw the action. She placed her hand on Ravengar's arm. "The paper!" she cried.

Ravengar started and felt in his pocket. It was not there.

"He has stolen it!" cried Leontine frantically, pointing to the disappearing figure of the fugitive.

Instantly Ravengar understood. He left Sebastian lying on the ruined porch and raced after the fleeing crook.

It was much lighter. The rising moon illuminated the land. Ravengar saw his quarry distinctly, racing along the wagon road that led toward the mining ground.

Ravengar felt that he was gaining.

In front of them the railroad line ran at a right angle to the wagon road. Just where they intersected was the brawling mountain stream, which now raged, a torrent, under the high bridge that lay before them. Beneath the bridge the railroad ran along the embankment cut beside the river.

It was a leap of forty feet to the raging torrent below. "Red," looking back, saw that his pursuer was close upon him.

He thrust the paper into his pocket and turned at bay. The two men closed. Ravengar sent the crook reeling.

"Red" dodged and recovered himself. He sprang at Ravengar like a panther. A chance blow caught Ravengar under the ear. Ravengar stumbled and fell.

Before he had recovered his footing "Red," spurred to frenzy, had sprung to the parapet of the bridge and leaped into the stream.

As he struck the icy water he was all but unconscious. He felt it close over his head. The shock revived him. He flung his hands upward, choking, until he reached the surface.

The bridge already lay in the distance behind him. The force of the current was carrying him swiftly away. He could not battle with it. He was drifting helplessly in the boiling eddies.

Suddenly he felt the ground beneath his feet.

In a moment he was scrambling up the bank and he flung himself, exhausted and shaking with cold, among the rushes.

Presently, feeling the return of circulation, he got up and thrust his dripping, palsied hand into his pocket. He drew out the envelope and, opening it, took the paper from it. In the rays of the moon he read:

"I wish to confess my part in the conspiracy which ruined Jerry Carson . . ."

He read it to the end, as best he could. A spasm of disgust crossed his face.

He crumpled it and made to throw it away. On second thought, however, he changed his mind and thrust it into his pocket. Then he started doggedly along the road.

When "Red" leaped, Ravengar followed him without hesitation.

He swam with all his strength, reached the bank, and pulled himself ashore. Then he looked up and down along the river. "Red" had disappeared.

He was, as a matter of fact, hidden by a little rise of ground, too slight to be perceptible from where Ravengar stood. Ravengar strode furiously up and down the bank.

The fellow must have perished instantly in the water, he concluded. Feeling that his search was hopeless, he crossed the bridge and returned to the village.

By this time the stunning effects of the earthquake had begun to subside. The inhabitants were running hither and thither, helping the injured. As Ravengar reached the hotel he saw that nearly all the inmates had already been rescued. Leontine still stood on the broken porch, where he had left her.

"He leaped into the stream," he said. "I plunged after him, but the current had already swept him under. I am afraid there is no chance of recovering your paper, unless the body is cast ashore."

"It doesn't matter," answered Leontine.

"You intrusted it to me. I have proved faithless."

"No, you have done your best."

THIRD EPISODE

The Mystic Defender.

Leontine staggered back against the couch, and fell, shrinking from the Thing in the corner, which still remained, the hands upraised, although they held the dagger now as if to hide it from her sight. Whatever the apparition meant, it was a friendly one. It had come to save her.

Then it spoke. The low voice thrilled her, and it reminded her of Jerry's own accents.

"Be true to your love and courageous, and all will be well," it said.

And it seemed to her as if this were indeed the soul of her lover, returned from the haunts of death, to save her honor at the critical moment.

Then, as the last tones of the voice died away, the Thing was gone—gone with the clatter of the falling blade.

Leontine managed to rise shakily to her feet, and cross the room.

Upon the rug lay the dagger. She picked it up. It was no ghostly mechanism, but a very substantial blade of steel set into a handle of bone. It was, moreover, a dagger such as she had seen wielded by Argentine vaqueros frequently.

And a wild, hopeless hope entered her heart that Jerry was still alive.

Jimmy Mason, a sallow, unhealthy-looking lad, stepped out of the elevator in a rather sumptuous apartment house and with unsteady fingers inserted a key in the lock of one of the doors. As he entered the hall a pretty, attractive young woman came hurriedly out of the living room.

"Jimmy!" she cried, and flung her arms round his neck.

Jimmy Mason released himself from this bond of sisterly affection and went into his den. There, taking his seat at a desk, he immersed himself in what looked like intricate mathematical complications.

"All right at the office, Jimmy?" inquired his sister, putting her head in at the door.

"As right as ever it will be," growled her brother.

"Then I'm off for the cabaret," answered the girl, pinning a becoming hat upon her pretty dark hair.

The second, who was evidently a stranger to the first man, was a little, wizened man, in an ill-fitted tuxedo, and was watching her every movement with hungry attention.

"You seem interested in Miss Mason, my friend," remarked the tall man to the other.

"Well, she ain't bad," answered the second. Then peering curiously at his companion, he remarked:

"Haven't I seen you before, Mr. ——"

"Ravengar is my name," answered the first man.

"Mine's Louis Lamb," said the second, letting his hand lie passive in that of his companion. "You ain't an American, though?"

"I come from anywhere," Ravengar answered.

"I asked, because I almost thought I'd seen you."

"In your dreams, your bad ones, perhaps," returned Ravengar lightly. "But since the dancer seems to interest you, how would you like to meet her?"

Louis Lamb turned his startled eyes on the other's face. At that moment he could imagine nothing that he would like better. Ravengar saw the look and smiled.

"Come along, then," he said, as Muriel, her number ended, left the stage.

They hurried through the swinging doors in time to intercept Miss Muriel on her way to her dressing room. Ravengar bowed.

"Miss Mason," he said, "I want you to meet Mr. Lamb, who is a warm admirer of yours."

Muriel took Mr. Lamb's hand without very much enthusiasm. "I'm pleased to meet him," she said. "But you've surely got a nerve to introduce us, when I've never seen you before."

And, nettled by Ravengar's easy, tolerant smile, the girl upbraided him angrily.

At the door of the cabaret Ravengar left his companion with a curt "good-night." Mr. Lamb, a little dazed by the suddenness of his adventure, stood uncertainly in the crowded street, looking about him.

As he stood there he saw a man leave the cabaret, at the sight of whom he emitted a low whistle. Then he began to hurry after him. He caught him at the corner of the block.

"Ah, Senor Navarre!" he exclaimed to Sebastian, with a mock bow.

Sebastian turned, saw and recognized the other, and uttered an oath.

"Well, haven't you a word for an old pal?" asked Lamb, with an unamiable grin.

"What now? What do you want, and what are you doing in New York?" Sebastian demanded.

"I'm making the grand tour, as our friends the French would say," returned Mr. Lamb. "Come, Senor Navarre, haven't you a friendly word for your old friend, One-Lamp Louie?"

"Yes, you can go to—" Sebastian began. Then he checked himself. "See here, now, what do you want?" he asked. "Money?"

"Oh, I can get that from you at any time," answered the other. "I did think of looking you up; funds running a little low. But I want more than that."

"Well, out with it," growled the other.

"Company," said Louie, grinning again. "I'm lonesome. I'm a little stranger in this wicked city. I want to meet your amiable wife."

"Do you think I'll admit you into my home?" shouted Sebastian.

"Now, partner," remonstrated the other, "don't take it so hard. Maybe you'll have a check for me in a day or two, and I can wait till I'm more presentable. Besides, of course, you'll get to know me at your club first."

"And then?" queried Sebastian, with ominous calmness.

"I guess we don't need to cross bridges till we come to them," replied the other. Suddenly he dropped his sneer. "Say, now, I'll talk straight to you," he said. "You're going to do the right thing by me, and you ain't going to forget who I am, or who put that name to a certain receipt in Porto Delgado. See?"

Muriel Mason lived with only her younger brother, Jimmy.

The boy had a small position in a wholesale house, which promised ultimately to become satisfactory. He had been playing the races of late, and losing steadily. Then he had taken the fatal step: He had "borrowed" money, as he called it, intending to pay it back when the favorite won.

Needless to say, the favorite did not win. And now, after weeks of agony, Jimmy Mason saw that discovery was inevitable.

It was all hopeless. He had read the suspicion in the manager's face that afternoon.

Since he had come home that night Jimmy had been making desperate calculations concerning the possibility of raising the amount of the deficit. But it had been hopeless from the beginning.

Presently, hearing a ring at the hall bell, and thinking that Muriel had forgotten her key, Jimmy went to open the door. He recoiled with a smothered shriek from the two men who stood confronting him. One of them displayed his detective badge.

At the first words of inquiry he stammered out a full confession. The two men heard him in silence.

"I've got it all," he wept. "Only give me time. I'll get it by the day after tomorrow."

"You can have till the day after tomorrow to make good," they informed him. "Else it's Sing Sing. Don't leave the house or you'll be arrested."

They left him, passing Muriel in the hall of the apartment house. The girl had hurried home, quite ignorant that she was being followed.

As a matter of fact, Ravengar had only stepped a few yards away from Mr. Lamb, and, hidden in a secluded niche, had waited for the singer to leave the cabaret. Then he had followed her. Whatever had been his motives, however, he made no attempt to speak to her. At the door of the apartment house Ravengar—vanished.

The moment the detectives had left, Jimmy went to the decanter and helped himself to a long drink of whisky. He had just swallowed it when his sister entered. She saw at once that something was wrong.

"Jimmy! What is it, boy?" she asked.

And then, bit by bit, the pitiful story came out.

"But you have the money, Jimmy, and will return it."

"I've spent a thousand dollars of it," answered the boy.

She clasped her hands in despair. A thousand dollars to be raised within two days! Muriel had perhaps twenty dollars in the world. She was being pressed with bills. She had never had a bank account in her life; she drew her pay on Saturday night and brought it home, where it was promptly pounced upon by the waiting creditors of the week.

"We'll find a way, we'll find a way," she kept repeating.

Muriel went into her room. The triumphs of the evening were forgotten now. She sank down listlessly in a chair and, leaning her face upon her hands, gave herself up to desperate imaginings. How could the money be raised? She must raise it.

Suddenly she started up with a low cry. Something was in the room, something appearing out of the corner in which her desk was placed. It was a hand—nothing but a hand.

Out of the hand there dropped a roll of bills. At the same time a pencil materialized in the fingers and began to write on the pad.

Then the hand vanished, and Muriel rushed to the pad and read:

"Lure the confession of a certain forgery from Louis Lamb tomorrow night and the thousand dollars necessary to save your brother shall be yours. Here are five hundred in advance, as evidence of good faith."

Muriel picked up the roll of bills. They totaled five hundred dollars.

Since her dramatic protection from Sebastian's advances a few nights before Leontine had lived in terror of the man whose nominal wife she was.

Sebastian, with the superstition of the Spaniard, firmly believed that Leontine had been saved by some supernatural protector.

Meanwhile he had assumed again his attitude of civility toward her. They went about together; and Leontine was glad to have him take her from the apartment into public places, where at least she was safe from him.

On the evening after Muriel's discovery of the apparition, Sebastian had suggested that she accompany him to see the dancer, who had become the talk of the town.

Louie Lamb had decided to play a waiting game with Sebastian. Meanwhile he had gone to the cabaret to see the beautiful dancer.

At the same table he saw the same man who had been there the night before—Ravengar. The two men nodded. Louie, finding that Ravengar was not disposed to be communicative, watched him curiously.

Why had Ravengar come back to the cabaret, and what was the meaning of his watchful investigation of Muriel's face?

He looked from Ravengar to Muriel, and, to his astonishment and joy, realized that Muriel was looking at him. Moreover, there was an invitation in her glance. She seemed, in fact, to have eyes for him alone.

Louie licked his lips. He knew. He was not mistaken.

The thought that this beautiful dancer was interested in him almost overcame him. He was so absorbed in his reflections that he hardly noticed the man and woman who came to the table and sat down until the dancer had disappeared.

She was to dance again later that evening. Afterward Louie would go to her.

When he looked at the newcomers he discovered that they were Sebastian and Leontine.

The recognition between Louie and the Argentine was simultaneous.

"Won't you introduce me to madam?" inquired the little crook blandly.

"Leontine, let me introduce Mr. Lamb, an old acquaintance of mine," muttered Sebastian.

"A business acquaintance," said Louie, smiling. "Let me, in turn, introduce my friend, Mr. Ravengar."

Sebastian, introduced, in turn, looked dubiously at Louie's distinguished companion.

In the dressing room Muriel Mason waited for her final turn. The thought of her project filled her with very mixed emotions.

The second turn came, and Muriel, dismissing her troubles, hurried onto the stage.

When the dance was over Muriel waited in the hall.

A cluster of chorus girls, each carrying a lighted brazier, came out of the dressing room and stood chattering together, waiting for their turn. Muriel drew back a little from them. She wished her meeting with Louis to appear as accidental as possible.

A moment later she saw Louie come quickly through the swinging doors and glance about him. He saw her. The dancer drew back toward one of the lounges and stood there, apparently absorbed in thought.

Louie hurried up to her and took her by the hand, urging her to sit down beside him.

Bill Bang, who had no eyes but for her, saw the look of involuntary disgust cross her face.

That was enough for him. With a growl he started toward them, stopped, reached down deliberately, took Louie by the collar, and flung him several yards away.

As Louie sprawled to the floor, one of the chorus girls, who had been late, came hurrying out of the dressing room, her lit brazier in her hand. Louie's fall sent it spinning. The coals lay strewn along the floor and upon the silken hangings before the swinging doors. Instantly a flame shot up.

Muriel leaped from the couch in fury. All her shame, all her plans had come to nothing. The act of the big fool had ruined Jimmy.

"Fire! Fire!" someone was yelling.

The whole cabaret was afire. The flames were streaming from the windows, and the air was filled with smoke.

Muriel, panic-stricken, had instinctively run for the emergency exit. She gained it and stood in the street, uncertain what to do. She wanted to help, yet she could not go back into that inferno.

Then she was aware of Bill Bang at her side.

"They don't know this way out," he yelled above the crowd. "Go home, Miss Muriel. I'm going back for the others, to tell them—"

He had plunged back into the smoke again, and, filled with remorse for her words to him, Muriel looked after him in an agony of fear.

Firemen, dashing through the smoke, were carrying out those injured in the melee. Bill Bang saw a man lying half pinned under a fallen beam.

Bang raised the fallen man in his arms and began to stagger out with him toward the emergency exit. But the man struggled free and stood upon his feet. Then only did Bang realize that it was Louie Lamb.

Side by side they made their way to where Muriel was standing. At the sight of Louie Muriel shuddered; then, controlling herself, she said, gently:

"I'm glad you are not hurt, Mr. Lamb." She took a step forward.

Louis Lamb looked at her vacantly.

"I don't know you. I don't know you," he muttered.

And in his empty glance Muriel read the extent of the disaster that had befallen him. Louie Lamb stared out at Broadway.

"This isn't Buenos Aires," he cried. "Where am I? What has happened to me?"

He looked vacantly about him and began stumbling through the coiling smoke into the heart of the district. Muriel knew that her plan had gone awry; that whatever the secret might be which Louie had once possessed, it had gone from him forever.

Terrified, she hurried out of the place, caught a street car and made her way homeward. There was no way of saving Jimmy now!

She found the boy lying back in his chair in the living room, sunk into a dull apathy. She ran to him, kneeled at his side, and placed her arm about him.

"Oh, Jimmy!" she wept.

Then Muriel screamed and stared into the corner of the room where stood her brother's desk. His eyes followed her own; his teeth began to chatter.

The pencil which lay on Jimmy's desk had begun to poise itself in the air, as if held by invisible fingers. Then an invisible hand picked up the pad that had lain beside it and scribbled on it.

Out of the air a second roll of bills dropped. It fluttered to the desk. The hand laid down the pencil and the pad. The vision vanished. Muriel ran to the desk, picked up the pad and read:

"You tried your best. Better luck next time. Here is the balance of the thousand dollars."

Muriel snatched up the bills. There were five hundred more. She thrust them into her brother's hands, and brother and sister clung to each other fearfully, wondering, fearing, but happy in this mystic intervention.

Ravengar, left alone with Sebastian and Leontine, dropped his attitude of absorption and became communicative. His manners were fascinating, and soon the three were engaged in an animated conversation. Suddenly the cry of "Fire!" rang through the cabaret.

They started up with the crowd, which stood uncertainly, looking toward the entrance, through which a thin wisp of smoke was curling. The manager ran upon the stage.

"Keep your seats, ladies and gentlemen. It is only a brazier that has been overturned," he said.

But as the audience was resettling itself doubtfully, while ladies grasped their cloaks and men felt for their hat checks, screams rang out, and the coil of smoke suddenly became a whirling cloud that drifted in and filled the cabaret.

Instantly confusion reigned. There was a wild rush for the door. The band struck up a lively march in vain; then suddenly the members threw down their pieces and ran for safety.

The fearful crush in the hall was repeated inside the cabaret. Ravengar and Sebastian, linking hands, harried Leontine along between them. They had nearly reached the door, where the crush was thickest, when Leontine stumbled and fell. At the same moment Ravengar, torn away by the crowd, was almost hurled through the doors.

He strove with all his might to return to her, but he might as well have struggled against an avalanche. With difficulty he managed to retain himself in an upright position, instead of falling among the writhing bodies; and thus he was forced bodily out of the hall into the street.

When Leontine stumbled, Sebastian stooped to pick her up, but a man staggered, cursing, into him. Sebastian hesitated. If he bent down for his wife, he saw that it would be impossible to regain his footing. He let her go with a curse and sought safety in flight.

Leontine had fallen before a window near the elevator shaft. Somewhat protected by the bodies that were piled about her, she lay there, half conscious, gasping in the acrid fumes of the burning woodwork that coiled about her.

Suddenly, out of the fog of unconsciousness, she heard her name called. There was a shattering of glass. A breath of wind dispersed the smoke. She opened her eyes, to see Ravengar at the window.

He scrambled through, pulled her from under the fallen and, lifting her in his arms, helped her to safety. His hands were bleeding from the broken glass and his face stained with smoke. He set her down, gasping, upon the sidewalk and bent over her.

"Thank God you are alive!" he exclaimed fervently.

The devotion in his manner was evident to the girl even then. She staggered to her feet and stood facing him, incapable of speech. The tears came into her eyes. She thought of Jerry and the old days in Porto Delgado, and the tenderness upon her face might have been for Ravengar.

An interested spectator of this episode was Sebastian, who, having recovered from his fright, was slinking in front of the burning building when he came upon his wife and her rescuer. For a full minute he stood watching them, his features distorted into an ugly scowl.

Then he saw Leontine extend Ravengar her hand, and Ravengar raise it to his lips, and, lifting his hat, turn away.

Sebastian hurried up. "Thank heaven your are safe, Leontine!" he exclaimed.

"No thanks to you," answered Leontine curtly.

Sebastian bit his lip, but did not answer, and, side by side, they made their way to a taxicab. They did not speak during the drive homeward. But Sebastian's brain was burning.

He realized that a critical point in their relationship had been reached. And he brooded over the memory of what he considered his wrongs. He thought of the long years he had loved her in Porto Delgado.

She had loved Jerry Carson, the young American author, with his crazy device for discovering buried treasure, and Jerry had sailed away, and Sebastian had waited patiently and not pressed his suit too hard. Then Jerry had returned, to discover Sebastian's brother Diego in the act of showing Leontine that forged receipt with Jerry's name attached to it. That had been a trick, justified by all the rules of war.

Jerry had killed Diego, as Sebastian firmly believed, and had afterward died on the convict ship. At last Leontine had consented to become Sebastian's wife, to save her father from bankruptcy.

What if there had been an agreement that their relationship should be one in name only? Sebastian felt that he had been gulled. He had squandered thousands on the girl, and never had she shown a particle of affection toward him.

Now the sight of Leontine and Ravengar was the touch of flame to tow. He would never permit the man to win her from him. He made that resolution before the taxicab stopped at their apartment house.

He followed Leontine into the reception room, where she took off her wraps. When she turned, she saw by the look on the man's face that she would again have to fight for the observance of his pledge.

"Leontine!" began Sebastian, taking her by the arms.

"Sebastian, you—you—"

"I have had enough of this," Sebastian answered. "You are my wife, and you treat me like a dog. You pretend to be incapable of love, that your love is bound up with that dead convict—"

"You shall not call him that! Jerry was innocent!" cried Leontine, with flaming eyes.

"Well, he's dead now," sneered Sebastian. "And you have married me."

He seized her in his arms, but she broke away from him and ran into a corner of the room. "Sebastian, I trusted to your honor!" she cried. "Sebastian, perhaps I can learn to love you if you will give me time—"

She did not know what she said in her terror of him. He caught her in his arms again.

Then, once again, there came the mystic intervention. Nearer now than before, at the height of a man's head, and this time in the center of the room, the two eyes glared at Sebastian. And underneath the eyes were the two white hands clutching the dagger.

Leontine screamed, and again Sebastian, looking up, saw the fearful apparition. As he looked the dagger flashed toward him.

Thoroughly cowed, he screamed and bolted for his room, in which he locked himself. Leontine stood in no further danger from him. He knew now that his wife was guarded by this messenger from the supernatural.

Again Leontine heard the voice speak.

"Be true to your love of Jerry and be brave. All will be well," it said.

Her heart leaped up with thankfulness. This time the name of her lover had been spoken, whereas before the phrase had been ambiguous.

As she gazed at the apparition she prayed: "Let me look at your face! Are you indeed Jerry, come back from the dead to save me from that man?"

But there was no answer. Slowly the apparition faded, only it seemed to the girl that the look of burning hate in the eyes had been succeeded by one of love.

And somehow she seemed to see in them the glance that Ravengar had given her that evening, when they stood side by side outside the burning cabaret. And she felt as if she loved Jerry the more because of Ravengar.

100 per cent. Roughage

BUCKEYE HULLS are real roughage in every particle. They are free of everything that has no value as forage. They are free of lint. They are free of trash. They are free of dirt and dust. When you buy you are paying for nothing but roughage, and you are feeding your stock nothing that is worthless or injurious. Buckeye Hulls look like a real feed and are a real feed. Their very appearance will convince you that you should use them.

Even if Buckeye Hulls cost as much as old style hulls it would still be to your advantage to use them. Selling at several dollars per ton less, they put old style hulls beyond consideration.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls allow better assimilation of other food.
They are sacked—easy to handle.
They take half the space for storage.
They mix well with other forage.
Every pound goes farther.
2000 pounds of real roughage to the ton—not 1500.

Mr. S. L. Jones, Jackson, La., says:

"I have been feeding my dairy cows Buckeye Hulls and find that they do as well on Buckeye Hulls as on old style and that they like the Buckeye Hulls better than the old style."

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

URGENT NEED FOR THE GROWING OF FOOD CROPS

By J. F. Duggar, Director of Alabama Experiment Station and Extension Service.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

Faced as this nation is by present foreign problems and by the world-wide scarcity of food crops, there was probably never before a greater need for the planting of every crop suitable for human food that will mature promptly. Every farm should grow more than enough vegetables for the maximum use of the dwellers on that farm. The surplus is usually good hog food.

While caution is needed in the growing of perishable truck crops for market by those unaccustomed to such ventures, yet no such risk is involved in growing a larger acreage than usual of the staple farm products. Among these we should rank corn, sweet potatoes, and cowpeas, as possibly the most generally practicable summer crops suitable for human food, as well as being suitable for feeding livestock.

To these should be added peanuts and the usual garden vegetables.

As necessary for increasing the supply of meat, especially of pork, the South needs this year a larger acreage than ever before, not only of corn but also of velvet beans, soy beans, sorghum, and all the other well known forage crops.

INCREASING PRODUCTION OF FOOD CROPS IN ALABAMA

By J. F. Duggar, Director Experiment Station and Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.)

Community Organization for Immediate Needs.

The Extension Service most heartily upports the plans for increased food production which were set in motion under the leadership of the United States Department of Agriculture through the Atlanta and St. Louis conferences. These plans provide for the appointment, by the Governor of each State, of committees or committee chairmen in every county. The Governor of Alabama has already issued a proclamation urging increased agricultural production.

To this end the Alabama Extension service suggests to county and community chairmen that they appoint committees on such subjects as the following.

Production of Staple Crops and Livestock.
Gardening and Canning.
Seed Supply.
Women's Work.
Health and Sanitation.
Employment and Distribution of Labor.
Rural Police.
Markets.
Work Among Negroes.
Education and Social Welfare.
Boys and Girls' Clubs, etc.

It is also vitally necessary that all committees or agencies for increased food production, of whatever source or authority, should either merge with or cooperate fully with the contemplated state and county organizations.

To aid in furthering these plans the staff of the Extension Service at Auburn and its local representatives, the farm and home demonstration agents in the several counties, are at the call of any community needing assistance in perfecting its organizations and in working out its own peculiar problems.

The Seed Supply

In the meantime, the need in certain sections for planting seed is so pressing as to demand immediate attention. If the maximum of food production is to be attained all farmers, whether landowners or tenants, must be enabled to secure at once an ample supply of seed for crops that now most need to be grown.

Furthermore, in the Black Belt especially, there is no surer means of arresting the migration of farm labor than to place in the hands of the negro tenant sufficient seed to enable him to feed himself and family by planting a garden and the necessary food crops.

As the men who lack the seed are not likely to have either the foresight or the confidence to make their needs widely known, they must therefore, be sought and provided for by others. In communities not already organized, a few public-spirited men, say three to five, without waiting for appointment should constitute themselves a seed committee and proceed at once to meet the emergency.

Such committees should first ascertain by systematic inquiry and visitation the amount and the kinds of seed needed by all persons in their respective communities. Immediate steps should then be taken to purchase and distribute the seed as needed.

In this connection the local seed merchant and all farmers of the community having surplus seed should be asked to cooperate by selling to needy farmers on convenient terms of payment. Where this is not sufficient, a fund should be raised by popular subscription, or the committee may be able to make other arrangements for providing the means necessary to purchase an ample supply, or for securing an option on the necessary seed.

In all cases where the farmers are unable to pay cash, it will be wiser to sell seed on time rather than to give them away. The risk, in such cases, may be greatly reduced by requiring as security the joint note of at least two or three purchasers of seed. Wherever a tenant is the purchaser his note should be endorsed by his landlord. The committee should urge upon all landowners the necessity of cooperating in this worthy endeavor.

On application, the Extension Service at Auburn, or the county farm demonstration agent, will attempt to furnish to committees the addresses of parties having a surplus of the kinds of seed desired.

An Agricultural Program For the Next Few Months.

It is too late for any outline of a complete cropping system for 1917 to be worth much. Hence the following are intended merely as suggestions to supplement steps already taken.

I. CORN. The acreage in corn should be increased at least 50 per cent on an average. This means more than the doubling on many farms of last year's acreage. As a means to this end, let us continue this year to plant corn throughout the month of May on upland as well as on bottoms, and even to plant in corn some rich bottoms early in June, if it cannot be done before.

II. VELVET BEANS. Every acre of upland corn and most of the poorer acres of bottom land should have velvet beans (Early Speckled variety, also called 90-day and 100-day bean) between the corn hills or in the corn middles. Cowpeas, peanuts, or other legume, may be substituted. The velvet bean is the most practicable legume for general planting, because it requires the least investment for seed (25 to 40 cents per acre), it will grow on even the poorest land, and will afford not only returns in seed but also in winter pasturage, and in fertility for next year's crop.

III. SORGHUM or "SUGAR MILLET." The man who is most likely to need seed this year is the man who most needs a patch of sorghum. It is one of the quickest feed crops for work stock and hogs, and a dollar invested in sorghum seed will afford more syrup than any similar investment in sugar cane. As minimum amounts of this seed, now high priced, plant, for syrup, a peck to two acres; for forage, a peck to one acre. The cost, if bought at once, is about one dollar per peck.

IV. PEANUTS. There is practical certainty that whoever grows peanuts this year will find them in demand next fall at profitable prices. The oil is needed not only for human food and for many industrial purposes, but also for making high explosives used in modern warfare. Throughout the war, therefore, and probably for a considerable time afterwards, we may expect all oils or fats and the agricultural products from which they are manufactured to continue high in price.

V. SWEET POTATOES. The need for growing sweet potatoes for home use is so universal that if any sweet potatoes are still being used for feed this late in the season such use should be discontinued, and every obtainable bushel of sweet potatoes bedded.

Fortunately the use of sweet potato vine cuttings makes it possible for each neighborhood to provide for a considerable increase in the sweet potato acreage. This can be done as follows: Let each person who has bedded sweet potatoes set out a patch of slips at the earliest possible date, fertilize them well, and cultivate them frequently, all with a view to getting vine growth in the shortest possible time; then give or sell the vine cuttings to neighbors who have bedded no potatoes. This year the vine cuttings should be as short as practicable in order to increase the acreage. The setting of vine cuttings may proceed even up to the middle of July in the central and southern parts of the State.

VI. GARDENS. Continue the planting of the usual garden vegetables suitable for growth during the hot season, and make preparation for the planting of rutabagas and turnips in July; and also for planting in August of most of the vegetables suitable for use in the fall. The latter list is longer than many suppose. On this point address inquiries to Horticultural Department, Erperiment Station, Auburn, Alabama.

VII. BREEDING STOCK. Keep on the farm or in the neighborhood every cow or heifer suitable for breeding purposes, and sell no desirable stock of this character to butchers or shippers without first offering them to neighbors or advertising them, so that farmers needing breeding cattle may be supplied. The greatest hindrance to the rapid growth of the cattle industry throughout Alabama is the inadequate supply of cows and heifers.

VIII. AVOIDING DISEASES OF ANIMALS. As a part of the program of conserving and increasing the State's supply of livestock, every possible step should be taken to reduce the losses by disease, consulting, when necessary, a local veterinarian or a county agent. Especially should cattle be protected against tick fever, by the extermination of ticks. In regions where blackleg is a common cause for the death of cattle under two years of age, vaccination twice a year, under proper direction, should be a part of the regular farm operations.

Most important of all in avoiding losses of livestock should be care to promptly prevent the spread of cholera which is so generally spread by leaving dead hogs unburned, by permitting hogs to run at large, by allowing buzzards to come to the hog lots and pastures for water or for carcasses of poultry and larger animals, and by the passage of men and animals from farms having cholera to those free from it. Of course prompt examination by a competent party (veterinarian, county agent, or instructed farmer), should be made of every hog that dies, with a view to burning those attacked by cholera, and the immediate inoculation of all remaining hogs in the herd. For further information on this and other diseases of livestock address State Veterinarian, Auburn, Alabama.

IX. SURPLUS VEGETABLES. Waste of vegetables may be avoided by putting them up in cans or glass, or by drying them, or by selling or giving away the surplus, or by feeding them to hogs and other livestock.

X. INSECT AND PLANT DISEASE PESTS. Endeavor to prevent or reduce such losses due to insect enemies, as weevils in corn and cowpeas, bugs on the Irish potato plant, boll weevils on cotton, etc.; prevent or reduce, by spraying or otherwise, those plant diseases injurying food crops, especially such diseases as the late and early blight in Irish potatoes, the various rots of apples, etc. Address questions about insect pests to Entomologist, Experiment Station, Auburn, Alabama, and about plant diseases to Plant Pathologist, Experiment Station, Auburn, Alabama.

The Experiment Station and the Extension Service stand ready, on application, to furnish literature regarding the treatment of each of these and many other pests, and to answer inquiries along these lines.

XI. WINTER CROPS. Plan well in advance for next year's crops, especially for a liberal acreage in oats, to be sown in the fall, and for other winter crops suitable to the conditions of each farmer. Doubtless before fall the Alabama Experiment Station or the Extension Service at Auburn will issue other publications calling attention to the crops most important for planting throughout the fall.

TAKE GERMAN VESSELS

Senate Passes Bill Taking Over Ships Seized From Germany.

Washington.—The Senate by a unanimous vote passed a resolution providing for the transfer of title and possession of enemy ships in American ports and their use in commerce under direction of the shipping board.

There are about 100 German and many Austrian ships in American ports and all are under repair, though the Austrian ships are not included in the resolution, as the United States and Austria are not at war.

The resolution was debated in the Senate for more than four hours behind closed doors. The discussion centered on questions of damages for the seized vessels after the war, but all efforts to provide a method by which the owners of the property would be given a right to sue in courts of the United States were defeated. Legislation of this kind will be left to a later date.

TELLS COURT WIFE WON'T KISS HIM

Denver Judge Grants Man's Plea After Listening to Tale of Domestic Woe.

Denver, Colo.—"My wife refuses to kiss me or recognize me as her husband," Frank I. Gillings, contractor, told the Denver district court in appealing for an annulment of his marriage to Clara A. Gillings.

"Why?" queried Judge Mullins.

"Because her mother, who holds similar views," replied the plaintiff, "has made her believe that it is wrong for a husband to even kiss his wife."

The court was interested to the extent of allowing Gillings to introduce a portion of a letter written to him by his wife shortly after their marriage and after their separation. In this letter Mrs. Gillings made the following statements:

Refuses to Kiss Him.

"We are not living in the age of slaves or heathen, nor 100 years ago, nor even 50 years ago. Women are waking up. They are no longer considered a 'white slave of man.' You will receive no sympathy from any well read man or woman of today."

Another passage read:

"Not only I refuse on religious or conscientious grounds, but my own personal feelings and the welfare of the future generation of my children. You are to be pitied, surely—you, with your century-ago ideas of the duty of wife to man, usual 'marital relations,' etc."

Mrs. Gillings had written this letter in response to his appeals that she live with him and make a home for him.

"And she was a June bride, too," exclaimed Gillings. The court granted the annulment.

Texas Land Taken for Puny Debt Has Proved to Be Rich in Quicksilver.

Chicago.—F. H. Perry, of this city, is receiving a revenue of nearly $50,000 a month from his quicksilver mine in the Big Bend country of Texas, which he was forced to take over several years ago to satisfy a debt of $200. In fact when Mr. Perry came into possession of this 1,280 acres of land he regarded it as worthless. He did not even take the trouble to go to see it, knowing the region to be barren and almost uninhabitable. However, fate had decreed that fortune should smile on Mr. Perry.

Since the price of quicksilver mounted from $45 to $80 per flask of 75 pounds because of the war in Europe, Mr. Perry's mine has produced $3,000,000 worth of the material. What the mine is worth today no one ventures to estimate, but, figuring on its revenue producing basis, it ought to have a value of not less than $5,000,000.

They wear the same size shoe and "split" their footgear between them as ordinary men would split a bottle of beer.

JAIL NOT A CURE SAYS HENDERSON

WOULD DISCOURAGE PRACTICE OF JAILING MEN FOR PETIT OFFENSES.

AT THE STATE'S CAPITAL

Interesting News Budget of Happenings in Various Departments of State.

—Montgomery.

When urged to instruct peace officers to wage a campaign against vagrants as is being done in some of the other states, Governor Henderson said he did not believe this was the remedy. "Putting men in jail will not increase production, nor will it increase enlistment in the army," said the governor. He expressed the opinion that the men who get fees for it do not need encouragement to put people in jail. He has discouraged the practice of jailing men for petit offenses.

Compiling Data to Raise Army.

The drector of the census has requested John Purifoy, secretary of state, to give him the number of voting precincts in Alabama and the number of wards in Birmingham, Mobile and Montgomery. This means tht plnsa are lready being made by the census bureau to take the military census which will be necessary before nay men are conscripted into the new army. Under the plan of conscription a census will be taken of all men betw een the ages of draft in order that the war department may call them out by ages when needed. Secretary Purifoy replied that this state, according to the returns of the November election, had 1351 precincts.

State to Help Market Crops.

The state intends to be active in seeing that foodstuffs grown in Alabama will have markets. Governor Henderson wrote Clarence Lloyd, secretary of the Birmingham Commission, that he, with representative citizens, contemplated "organizing the state and making a complete survey of the situation. This organization that is being projected means the organization of each precinct, and I am urging upon the central county committees where there is a shortage of seed to raise funds to procure them for those who are unable to procure them for themselves. It is our expectation to assist in the distribution of these products when grown, because that is just as important as the planting and growing of the same," he writes.

Railroads Lose in Franchise Cases.

The circuit court of Montgomery county decided against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company in the additional franchise tax case. Between $30,000 and $35,000 per year revenue was added for the state by Judge Gunter's decision. Attorney General Martin acting for the state equalization boar, brought suit to increase the assessed value of the L. and N. in Alabama $43,000,000 in addition to what it had been previously assessed; the N. C. and St. L., $2,000,000; Central of Georgia, $8,000,000; the Seaboard, $3,000,000; the Southern $17,000,000, and the A., B. and A. $2,000,0000. All of these were determined by the case decided. The railroads involved will appeal to the supreme court. The franchise tax levied by the state board of equalization is 40 cents per $1,000 on the capital employed in Alabama by foreign corporations. If the state wins before the supreme court this case will determine the status of values for future payment of franchise taxes of railroads under the Alabama revenue laws.

Asked to Pretermit Court Terms.

A movement was started here to have the summer terms of circuit court pretermitted for the farmers all over the state to have more time for their crops. Emmet Jones, secretary of the Alabama Chamber of Commerce, called upon Chief Justice John C. Anderson with these suggestions. The Chief Justice took it under advisement.

MANY PEOPLE REPORT BIG GAINS IN WEIGHT

THOUSANDS OF THIN, FRAIL PEOPLE ARE RESTORED TO HEALTH BY TAKING TANLAC.

FIGURES ARE ASTONISHING

People of Prominence and Unquestioned Integrity Tell What Celebrated Medicine Has Done for Them.

ONE of the most noteworthy features in connection with Tanlac and the one that stands out more prominently than any other, perhaps, is the very large number of well-known men and women from all parts of the South who have recently reported astonishing and rapid increases in weight as a result of its use.

When so many well-known people of unquestioned integrity make statement after statement, each corroborating the other, the truth of such statements can no longer be doubted.

Thousands have testified that this famous medicine has completely restored them to health and strength, after every other medicine and the most skilled medical treatment have failed.

One of the most remarkable cases on record is that if Mrs. Viola Ives, of 315 Cross Street, Little Rock, Ark., whose statement appears below.

"In May of 1913," said Mrs. Ives, "I suffered a complete breakdown of my nerves and my entire system gave way. About six weeks afterwards I was carried to the hospital. I became perfectly helpless—couldn't move any part of my body and just lay there in bed for five months, not knowing anything or anybody. I was brought home in October, 1913, and tried all kinds of medicine and everything I was told about.

"I read about so many people getting relief by taking Tanlac and my husband got me a bottle. After taking three bottles I began to feel better. I have taken several bottles of Tanlac now and I can walk anywhere and sleep like a child. When I took my first dose of Tanlac I weighed only one hundred and twenty-two pounds. I now weigh one hundred and sixty-two—an actual gain of forty pounds since I started on Tanlac."

Texas Man Testifies.

Another remarkable case was that of John M. Crabtree, a general merchant at Five Mile Station A, Dallas, Tex.

"I have actually gained thirty-four pounds on three bottles of Tanlac and I now know what it is to enjoy good health after suffering for twenty years," said Mr. Crabtree.

"I suffered with catarrh of the stomach and indigestion for twenty years and for eighteen months, before I started taking Tanlac, I had to live almost entirely on cereals. I spent nearly all of one whole year in bed and was unable to do anything at all and I fell off in weight to 118 pounds.

"After using my third bottle of Tanlac I found I had increased in weight from 118 pounds to 152 pounds, making an actual gain of thirty-four pounds—all my troubles were gone, and I was feeling like another man."

Captain Jeff D. Riggs, popular Y. & M. V. engineer, running between Vicksburg and New Orleans and residing at 920 Pearl Street, Vicksburg, in speaking of his experience with Tanlac, said: "Yes, sir, it's an actual fact, I have gained twenty-five pounds on Tanlac."

"When I began taking the medicine," continued Captain Riggs, "I was simply a nervous and physical wreck and had dropped down in weight from one hundred and forty to one hundred and ten pounds.

"I have just finished my second bottle of Tanlac, have gained twenty-five pounds and I feel like a new man."

Old Engineer Talks.

Engineer Chas. J. Weeks, who runs the Seaboard Air Line fast train "Fox" between Jacksonville and Tampa, bears the distinction of being the second oldest engineer in point of service with this road, having been with the company for thirty-three years.

"I've gained twenty pounds on seven bottles of Tanlac and feel as well and happy as I did when a boy," said Mr. Weeks.

"For twenty years I suffered with nervous indigestion of the worst sort," he continued, "and at times during the past fifteen years I didn't think I would last much longer. To tell you the truth, I finally reached the point where I didn't much care whether I lived or died.

There is a Tanlac dealer in your town.—Adv.

MRS. CHAS. PEDEN GAINS 27 POUNDS

WAS TWICE EXAMINED AND TOLD OPERATION WOULD BE HER ONLY HOPE.

"I HAVE just finished my third bottle of Tanlac and have gained twenty-seven pounds," was the truly remarkable statement made by Mrs. Charles Peden, residing at 55 Mill street, Huntsville, Ala.

"When I commenced taking the medicine," she continued, "I only weighed ninety-eight (98) pounds; now I weigh 125 pounds, and never felt better in my life. For years I have suffered with a bad form of stomach trouble, constipation and pains in my side and back. At times the pains took the form of torture, and I was twice examined and each time I was told that I had appendicitis and that an operation would be my only hope.

"I had made all preparations for the operation and called in my sister to tell her good-by, as I did not know whether I would live to see her again or not. My sister begged and pleaded with me not to allow them to cut on me and told me to wait and try a good tonic for awhile. The next day, as I returned from the consultation room, I thought of what she said, and as I had heard so much about Tanlac, I decided to try it and got a bottle.

"I never returned for the operation, but just kept taking the Tanlac. Right from the start I began to feel better. The medicine seemed to take hold right at once.

"I was so happy over the wonderful improvement in my condition that I sent for my neighbors to tell them how much better I felt. I sent and got another bottle of Tanlac, and have just finished taking my third bottle and feel as if I have been made all over again into a new woman.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Don't Neglect Kidneys

Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Prescription, Overcomes Kidney Trouble

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention as they control the other organs to a remarkable degree and do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

The kidneys should receive some assistance when needed. We take less exercise, drink less water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, annoying bladder troubles, smarting or burning, brick-dust or sediment, sallow complexion, rheumatism, maybe weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. There is nothing else like it. It is Dr. Kilmer's prescription used in private practice and it is sure to benefit you. Get a bottle from your druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 6

JESUS THE SERVANT OF ALL.

LESSON TEXT—John 13:1-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.—Mk. 10:44.

This lesson is really a continuation of the latter part of the lesson of last week, for the glory of Jesus is his unselfishness whereby he wrought out redemption for mankind.

I. Selfishness Amid Holy Surroundings (vv. 1-11). The world does not appreciate Jesus. It never has. "His own," the Jews, did not appreciate him. We are considering him today as he was about to depart from the world that had despised and rejected him to one that appreciated him (Heb. 1-6). The development. Verse 2 tells of the Satanic suggestion that came to the heart of Judas. In it was personal desire, and, connected with it, human conspiracy. The coming to this upper room has been pointed out by a man bearing a pitcher (Mk. 14:12-16), the pitcher being suggestive of the Holy Spirit which was about to come in the place of the visible Christ, and it is in the midst of such sacred surroundings as this that Satan enters the hearts of students. This is a suggestion as to the power of environment. Environment is an aid, but it does not produce effective safety. No moment is too holy for Satanic suggestion. Jesus knew that the hour was come when he was to depart out of the world. "Having loved his own, he loved them to the end." Even though the Father had given all things into his hands, still it was necessary for him to teach the disciples once more, and finally, the lesson of humility. He knew and remembered the strife among the disciples (Luke 22:24-28). Doctor Bonard's famous dream, analyzing zeal as being made up of ambition, pride and elements other than the love of God is worthy of consideration in this connection. We need to realize the danger of selfishness even in our service for God. Have we examined our motives? If the consequences of our superiority, either of rank or ability, tempts us to shirk the lowliest of services, it is time for God's children to recall this scene, and remember that "the servant is not greater than his Lord." Peter's strong protest (v. 8) brings out the fact that the washing by Christ of the disciples' feet was deeper than merely the outward application of water (See Rom. 8:9).

II. Service, the Evidence of Divine Humility (vv. 12-15). (1) This service was tender. Jesus had all things (v. 3), yet he became the servant of all. (2) It was for all. All needed a washing. All the disciples needed to learn, and all servants must learn, to obey. (3) It signified sanctification. We are saved once for all, but we are constantly being stained by our contact with sin in the world; hence the need of renewed cleansing. New light reveals new need of cleansing. (4) It signified deity. Jesus read the thoughts of his disciples. He became their servant that in years to come they might know the meaning of service. He became their example, and in years to come they remembered his knowledge and service. (6) It was for "his own." The disciples did not know what it was he had done to them. Little do we understand oftentimes what it is the Lord has done to us. Jesus set them an example whereby he would remove the dirt of crime, self-seeking and every manifestation of selfishness from their sin-stained souls. We may call Jesus Lord and Master, and it is well that we do so, for Master and Lord he is indeed, but, if we call him so, let us not do aught than make him in our lives what we call him with our lips. The idea here emphasized has given rise to much religious literature. "The Imitation of Christ" by Thomas a'Kempis, is the most popular book in the world next to the Bible.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you" (v. 16). This introduction shows how important Christ considered his teaching at this point. "The servant is not greater than his Lord" (See Matt. 10:24; Luke 6:40; 22-27). If the Lord bent to this lowly service, certainly they, the servants, should not think it beneath them to do likewise, nor should the one that is sent (an apostle) consider himself greater than he that sent him. John, who wrote this epistle, was one of the apostles guilty of an unholy strife for power and position, and desirous of bringing fire down upon those who did not acknowledge and follow Jesus, but he became a marvel of love and tenderness.

Knowing and doing are the twin pillars of the Christian faith upon which the house of happiness is built. Such service is not egotistical.

It is this that has proved the superiority of Christianity over all the religions of the world.

If we seek to do service for others, then we have the right to call Jesus Master and Lord, but if we seek honor rather than to be humbly useful, we shall have no right to call him thus.

This instance made a deep impression upon Peter, as can be seen from the striking illusion in his first epistle (I Pet. 5:5 R. V.).

TAKES THE PLACE OF DANGEROUS CALOMEL

New Discovery! Dodson's Liver Tone Acts Like Calomel But Doesn't Gripe, Salivate or Make You Sick—Don't Lose a Day's Work—Harmless Liver Medicine for Men, Women, Children—Read Guarantee!

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated, or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable. therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.—Adv.

Kidney & Co.

(BY DR. J. H. WATSON)

The kidneys and the skin work in harmony. They're companions, the skin being the second partner. If we are anxious to keep well and preserve the vitality of the kidneys and, also, free the blood from noxious elements, we must pay special attention to a good action of the skin and to see that the kidneys are flushed so as to eliminate the poisons from the blood.

Sweating, by hard work or in a bath, at least once a week, helps to keep the skin and kidneys in good condition. Flush the kidneys by drinking plenty of pure water with meals and between meals. Occasionally obtain at the drug store Anuric, double strength, which will help flush the kidneys and the intestines. You will find that Anuric is many times more active than lithia and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Most people say that love affairs interfere with school work, but Otto Jones says that his school work "slightly interferes with his love affairs."

The other afternoon Kate and Eula Mae were in the cloak room. Eula Mae turned on the light.

Kate—"Oh! did you see that lightning?

"I am very glad Flem," said Miss Durrett, "to see that you are polite enough to offer the oranges first to your sister, Inez."

"Yes'm," responded Flem, "cause then she's got to be polite, too, and take the little one."

"Aren't you ashamed, Dixie," exclaimed Miss Key, "to hit a boy smaller than yourself"?

"Well I don't know," said Dick, who was a bit of a philosopher. "I guess I'd rather be ashamed to hit a smaller boy than to be sorry I hit a bigger one,"

Thomas Jones and Conradine Lane were walking down the street the other day, and just as they passed by a peanut stand Conradine said, "Oh, don't those peanuts smell good!"

Tom said, "Yes, lets walk back and smell them again."

"I'm very much afraind that Harold isn't trying enough," wrote an anxious person to Miss Durrett.

"You are quite wrong," wrote back the tired teacher, "for I assure you that Harold is the most trying boy in the class."

All of the classes are regretting the loss of the students that are leaving school to go to work on the farms. That is the ones that are going out to try and produce something to help out in the crisis that is now upon the entire country.

The soldier boys that visited the High School Monday attracted very much attention. Well so much that a bunch of Juniors purchased themselves ten demerits apiece for leaving their seats to talk to them.

We are glad to say that the "Cantrolla" staff can at last say that the work has all been turned over to the printing Company, and that the Annuals will be ready for sale in a course of two weeks.

The public is invited to hear Rev. Bevis and especially are the members of the church urged to be present to participate in the election of the pastor.

Any miscreant who is so disrespectful of our country as to haul down the stars and stripes and bring reproach on its fair name can and should be dealt with rigidly by the laws of the land.

THORSBY ITEMS

Prin. S. H. Herbert returned last Thursday from a short visit to points in Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. He reports that the spring is very backward in these localities and that the green trees and grass of Alabama look very good to him.

Saturday night, April 28th, the students of Thorsby Institute and a number of the townspeople gathered at Bates Hall for a Patriotic Rally. The room was prettily decorated with U. S. flags and the thought of the evening was the flag and its significance in the present situation. Patriotic songs were sung, and brief speeches were made by several of the students and by Mr. P. K. Toksvig and Rev. J. M. Graham. All present felt that the occasion had enabled them to understand more clearly the present situation and to appreciate more highly the U. S. Flag. During the evening a collection was taken for the purpose of purchasing a flag for the Institute. The total of the offering including what the students had made earlier in the day was $20.00.

The Boy Scouts of Thorsby entertained their lady friends at a party held last Friday night at the rooms of Assistant Scout Master, John W. Ford. A pleasant time was enjoyed by all. Scout Master, S. H. Herbert, Miss Rice and Miss Akard were chaperons for the occasion.

CLANTON HARDWARE COMPANY SHOWS GOOD HOME SPIRIT

In their dealings in fruit cans this season, the Clanton Hardware Company have shown a very highly commendable spirit of loyalty to the people of Chilton county in preference to foreign trade, and in fact have made a sacrifice of many dollars to the firm itself in order that the people of the county might be saved some dollars. This one firm has virtually given to the people of the county who will use fruit cans this season, over a thousand dollars in cash, which they could have had now in their own coffers but for the splendid spirit of loyalty to the home people, and the local policy outlined by Mr. C. F. Jones, the President of the Company. Here's how they have done it:

Last season the Clanton Hardware Company bought and stored away about 75,000 fruit cans, about 60,000 of which were carried over to this season. In the meantime, the price of cans on the market increased enormously. When the season this year opened up and the cans began to come into demand, the firm announced that they would not sell the cans at the present prices of the season, but would still hold the price to the consumer down to the basis upon which they bought last season.

Thus the saving to the people who use the cans can be easily estimated to go above a thousand dollars.

On different occasions merchants in Birmingham and other cities have sought to buy the cans here from Mr. Jones, but he refused to sell them out of the county, always holding to his policy that our local people should have the cans at the lowest prices possible. He deserves commendation for his loyalty to the home people of the county.

THE ALIEN AND THE FLAG

At a recent meeting held under the auspices of Thorsby Institute, having for its object stimulation of the knowledge about the respect for our flag, and incidentally to raise funds to secure a suitable flag for the Institute, one of the principal speakers was Mr. P. K. Toksvig who emigrated to this country from Denmark in 1915 and has for many years been a resident of Thorsby. Mr. Toksvig spoke substantially as follows:

A flag is a symbol! If a flag is not a symbol, what is it? It is only a piece of cloth! but a flag is more than that. It is the sign of all those things that bind a nation together! If the ties are broken, the nation itself disappears. Probably that is the reason why there is punishment for discretion of the flag. No man with any degree of tact will desecrate the flag of the land wherein he dwells, where he is protected and where he makes his living. Only people with low moral standards can do a thing like that, but when we judge them we must remember that there are many who do not understand the nature of a symbol. In spite of the fact that symbols have been used in all ages, both in the Pagan and in the Christian world. One of the earliest symbols of Jesus as a savior was a fish of the church, a ship of immortality, the peacock, of the resurrection of the phoenix, of satan and the dragon or the serpent of the soul thirsting for baptism the stag. But we do not need to go to history or mythology to find symbols. We can find many of them in our daily life—the wedding ring for example.

There is yet a further reason for the lack of understanding about the flag. Many people have an incomplete comprehension of what a nation is and consequently they have little or no use for the symbol of the nation. Their intellectual life is bounded by their own personal interests and often reaches no further than their immediate environment. They have no understanding at all that their own welfare is concerned in any degree with the welfare of the nation, yes is even dependent upon it. We must not judge such people harshly. Maybe their lack of understanding is not their fault. This incomplete comprehension of the meaning of the flag prevails in all countries, both among natives and foreigners. Many of the foreigners in the United States are well acquainted with the national symbols of other lands, hence it is easy for them to appreciate the value of the American flag. The symbol of the flag is to them something concerning their daily bread. In general it can be said that any man who knows the language of his own flag will soon appreciate what the American flag means to him. It did not take long for LaFayette to understand the meaning of the American revolution, as revealed by the inscription on the pedestral of the LaFayette Statue in New York City. "When I heard of the American Revolution, my heart was enlisted." And when a man's heart is enlisted the man usually goes with it. LaFayette fought for America and its cause as bravely as many Americans, and far better than some in that day. He did more, He borrowed money on his own accord to provide necessities for his soldiers. It is not so important where a man was born as WHAT there is born in him. It is not the accent of a native language that makes him a genuine American, so much as it is the willingness and the zeal of the man to express in deeds what he understands to be his moral obligations.

The American who lets the accent of a man's speech be the line of separation between the genuine and the false American, thereby shows that he is on the wrong side of the line himself. I have been asked as a foreigner, "What do you think the American flag stands for?" It is a difficult question to answer. It may be reasonable to say that it stands for what the American President stands for, and that he stands for what the Congress stands for, and that the Congress stands for what the Nation stands for. If the President, the Congress and the nation were of one mind, it would be easy to answer. But that is not the case. We need but to look at the many different views of the members of Congress and to the varity of opinions expressed by the people all over the nation. The president seems to look further and have a broader vision than many of the people.

Let me ask one or two questions that may be helpful to an understanding of what I am talking about. Were the American colonies aware of what they were getting into by opposing the Stamp Act and other simialr measures of the British Crown? Did they see what the new Revolutionary spirit of the American Colonies would bring about as to their independence, their possibilities and their relation to the rest of the world?

To both these questions we can say "By no means."

If the American Colonies had possessed a common flag, and they had been asked what the flag stood for, there would certainly have been given many different answers, but very few of them would likely indicate the final great outcome of the American Revolution.

Are we more able today to answer a similar question as to the world drama in which we expect to play our part. I do not think so! The American flag stands for what you and I stand for when we offer the nation our best service, our best efforts, our best thought, our best feelings. The meaning of the flag cannot be expressed in words. The spirit and the life itself must express its meaning. In the light of the past, we have reason to expect that the stars and stripes stand for equal opportunity to get an honest living, a good education, human liberty and universal democracy, both political and industrial. That it stands for humanits, and for free and unrestricted development of the will of the people. And last but not least, I believe the American flag stands for laying a foundation for lasting peace.

SINGING CONVENTION

The Chilton County Singing Convention convened at Bethel Church last Saturday and Sunday. Audiance was large. Much interest was manifested. It was one of the most impressive session ever attended.

The singing was enthusiastic and nicely rendered.

A goodly number of diectors were present among them, one of the U.S. volunteers.

The young ladies rendered valuable assistance in the music. The skilled J. H. Williams did fine work.

Messrs Conway and J. N. Scott were there and did their part well. We noted with interest the impressive directing of Profs. T. C. Jackson and J. H. Scott and other young men present. The convention was royally entertained by the Bethel people. Their hospitality was unstinted. The memorial service just before noon Sunday was interesting. It was a really good session.

FARMERS ARE URGED TO PLANT MORE POTATOES

Cost less to Plant, Produce more food Per acre than Irish Potatoes.

Washington, D. C.—Seed to plant an acre of Irish potatoes cost about $40 this spring. Seed sweet potatoes will not cost more than $4 per acre when vine cuttings are taken from early set plants and used. The yield of sweet potatoes per acre is usually greater than that of Irish potatoes and as a fod they are as nutritious. Sweet potatoes may be grown throughout the South, and of course, in certain other sections. Specialists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture are urging an increased acreage of this crop wherever it can be easily grown.

Sweet potatoes, it is pointed out, are the South's chief instrument for a quick and effective increase of the food supplies. Seed is plentiful; last years crop was the second largest ever produced. By means of a vine cutting it is possible to plant almost unlimited acrets of this crop, and at the same time conserve the present supply. That is, a farmer who wishes to plant 10 acres will bed enough seed—say eight or ten bushels— to get slips for one acre. Vine cuttings from this acre would plant many more acres, plantings being possible until the first of August in the lower South. This system, now widely used in the South, enables the utilization of land from which early potatoes, cabbage, and other truck crops have been taken.

Sweet potatoes are not expensive to grow. The main limiting factor to the production of vast quantities by this plan is labor. Yields from fields set with vine cuttings are as large as from plants grown from slips. The method has the further advantage of preventing the transfer of diseases which are carried on the tubers.

The South doesn't need to learn how to grow sweet potatoes, the specialists point out. Farmers know how to produce large yields of this crop. But the farmer must be impressed with the necessity of increasing his acreage of this crop, and then, when harvest comes, to prevent the enormous loss from improper handling and storing. The best way to keep sweet potatoes is to store them in well ventilated storage houses, not "dug outs." Storage houses should be made ready as soon as possible. In farmers bulletin 548, "Storing and Marketing Sweet potatoes," instruction for building such houses and for converting old and unoccupied buildings are given.

THE CHILTON COUNTY SINGING CONVENTION

The Chilton County Singing Convention will meet in special session on the Third Sunday in May (20) at Pleasant Grove Church, five miles west of Jemison.

RELATIVE TO COUNTY HOME DEMONSTRATION AGENT

Editor Union-Banner:

Dear Sir:—Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words in regard to our home demonstration agent, Mrs. Lida Jones.

Now, in the first place, let me say that owing to the financial condition of the county, I have no kick coming at the Commissioners Court, but I do say that if they are going to dispose of the one and retain the other of the two agents in the county, let's have Mrs. Jones, or someone in her stead. I make the above statement with all due regard to Mr. Conway and his field of work. But still I think Mrs. Jones' branch of the work is more needed in this county at the present than Mr. Conway's.

As was shown by the ballot last Saturday at the Court House, about 85 per cent. of those present had plenty of corn and meat to do them till fall, and when we have corn, meat hay, oats and so on for the market we can get the highest market price for it, without someone to show or tell us which end of the ear of corn to put in the sheller first to make it shell easily. But when it comes to canning fruits and vegetables for the market, we have not had much experience in this line we must have someone who is experienced to show us and teach us and if it be necessary help us do the initial work, so that we may be properly trained in this work and make our products salable and bring the highest price on the market. Some will say that they can can as good as Mrs. Jones or any one else. No doubt in my mind as but they can, but then if what they do put up is not thoroughly sterilized and decomposed, then the person who canned this stuff has not only lost the vegetables but has lost their time in fooling with it also, and if it by mere accident does not spoil, will it be as delicious, as pretty a pack and bring as high a price on the market as that goods which complies with the standard of perfection? I say it will not. You must have your goods standardized or else you will be left wanting when the time comes to sell.

There are lots of people who think the "good old-fashioned way" of doing things is just as good as any. But, friends, if you always stick to that "good old-fashioned way" you will never rise above the level till Gabriel blows his trumphet. "The good old-fashioned way was all right in its time, but its time has gone and we must find something to take the place of it.

The Editor said in last week,s Union that the people ought to be at home pinching the daylight out of those potato bugs. Well, I am in favor of getting the daylights out of the potato bug but I do not care to pinch them out. Give Mr. "Tater Bug" some of the best delicious Paris Green which you can buy at the drug store and Mr. "Tater Bug" will fix himself.

I, like Mr. Wyatt, think that the club members should stop running after the Commissioners and get out and make up the money we need for the retention of Mrs. Jones. I heard Judge Reynolds tell my father that ift he people would get up the money and turn it over to the Commissioners Court, that they would see that Mrs. Jones got it. Now, I think there are some few in the county who thought that if the bond issue were carried, it would give us money for everything that we wanted to spend it for, but according to my idea that is a mistake that they have gotten into their cranium, for as I see it, the bond issue can't be used for anything but road and bridge purposes, therefore everything else must wait till the fall taxes come in. Now, the county has already gone beyond its limit on county warrants and it therefore cannot make a legal debt till some of the ones they already owe are paid off. My understanding is that the majority of the court is not opposed to the work of Mrs. Jones, but they can't make a legal debt, and therefore have nothing whatever to pay with but county warrants which are not legal, and she couldn't get more than 60 cents on the dollar if they did keep her. Now, as most of us know, the state will not let her stay here without the approval of the Commissioners Court, but if we will make up the required amount and donate it to the county with the understanding that they are to use this money to supplement Mrs. Jones' solary, it will be perfectly legal and Mrs. Jones will still be with us.

J.F. DUGGAR ENDORSES VELVET BEANS AS CROP FOR THE SOUTH

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

SOIL AND CLIMATE—They grow on practically any soil, but are most helpful to poor s[illegible] especially suited to sandy [illegible] Speckled, the Osceola, and the Yokohama may be grown to maturity at least as far north in Alabama as the Tennessee line.

Circuit Clerk 1 Jan 16

VARIETIES—The Early Speckled, also called 100-Day Velvet Bean and even 90-Day Velvet Bean, is the one generally grown, and the one that should be chiefly relied upon in 1917. It makes a rather luxuriant growth of vine, or sufficient to pull down corn if planted too thickly, too early, or on very rich land. It has a short round pod densely covered with fuzz; the bean keeps well even if not harvested until consumed by stock in winter.

The Yokohama is the earliest velvet bean tested, and hence may be planted somewhat later than the Early Speckled, or even immediately after oat harvest in central and south Alabama. The Yokohama has flattish, grayish-white seed, and a flattish pod. These pods, when exposed in the early part of winter to alternate sunshine and moisture, pop and shatter the beans, which is also true of other flat-pod beans, such as the Osceola, making this flat-podded class less useful to leave on the field for winter consumption, but quite satisfactory for hand gathering of the clusters for winter feeding in the barn.

The Osceola is a flat-pod bean with large clusters, and about the same maturity as the Early Speckled. Its chief advantage over the latter is the lack of a stinging effect on the hands during the harvesting of mature clusters

The Chinese is a variety with luxuriant growth of vines, matusity later than the Early Speckled, and has large flat pods.

CULTURE—A variety of methods of planting the Early Speckled and similar velvet beans has given satisfaction. Among them are the following:

(1) Planting of velvet beans, one to the hill, along the line of every corn row where the rows are wide and the land poor;

(2) Planting of velvet beans in every middle where the rows are wide and land poor;

(3) Planting of velvet beans along the line of every other corn row where the corn rows are narrow to medium in width;

(4) Planting of velvet beans, more thickly, in every third row where the rows are narrow and the land rather fertile.

TIME OF PLANTING—In order that the corn may not be pulled down any more than is necessary to the production of a good crop of mature beans, the writer prefers to plant velvet beans at least a month after the corn has been planted, provided this gets the velvet beans into the ground by or before May 15 in the southern half of Alabama, and by May 1 in the northern half. However, for convenience, some farmers, especially those accustomed to the Late Speckled variety, prefer to plant velvet beans at the same time as corn.

FERTILIZATION—In the corn fields velvet beans are not separately fertilized, but utilize some of the fertilizer applied to the corn. It may be profitable to make a separate application of 200 pounds of acid phosphate per acre to velvet beans when planted on rows to themselves, or not along the line of the corn rows.

Joe Littleton of Cane Creek was here Monday attending county court.

We are glad to call the attention of the people to the fact that Dr. A. B. Baxley has located in Clanton, and that he is prepared to do everything of merit in the optical line. See his card in this paper.

I would suggest that the club members get busy and raise this money at once and show Mrs. Jones that we appreciate what she has done for the county. Let everyone of you carry a sobscription list like this:

To the Commissioners Court of Chilton County: We, the undersigned members of the Home demonstration clubs of Chilton County, and the non-members of the county, donate to your honorable body for the supplementing of Mrs. Jones' salary—— We donate this money to your honorable body with the understanding that you are to approve of her and her work here.

We club members can almost pay the $250 that is needed if we only give fifty cents each, and I am most sure that there are some who will pay more, and lots of outsiders will help us I am sure. All right now, everybody ready and lets go. Hurrah for Mrs. Jones, I am with best wishes,

Yours for success,
GUY H. DeSHAZO.

FIERCE FIGHTING ON WEST FRONT

Over Six Thousand Prisoners Taken By The French Forces In Two Days' Fighting In France

GUNS TAKE HEAVY TOLL

General Nivelle's Men Have Advanced On An 18-Mile Front Northeast Of Soissons—Holding Gains

New York.—The Germans have hurled counter attacks against the French forces in their newly-acquired positions northeast of Soissons, taken in their advance toward Laon and eastward along the Chemin-des-Dames, but their efforts were useless. General Nivelle's men clung tenaciously to them, and inflicted heavy casualties on the Germans.

The greater portion of the 18-mile front has been consolidated and, as a result of two days' fighting, 6,100 Germans were taken prisoner. Not content with the gains northeast of Soissons, the French enlarged their holdings by capturing isolated operations, important German points of support to the north of the Moulin de Laffaux and north of Braye-en-Laonnois.

The Berlin official communication, in referring to the battle, declares that the French attempt to break through the German line was unavailing, and that the gigantic thrust was entirely repulsed. It admits, however, that the intense fire of the French guns destroyed completely the German positions on the Winterburg and that this eminence and several adjacent sectors were occupied by the French. It is asserted by the Berlin war office that the French, "after their sanguinary defeat" did not repeat their attack later.

To the east of Bullecourt, which lies midway between Arras and Cambrai, where the British and Germans engaged in sanguinary encounters, with the advantage lying with Field Marshal Haig's forces.

CUBAN NEGRO REBELS BURN AND PILLAGE PROPERTY

Americans And Other Foreigners Being Driven From Several Districts In Oriente Province

New York.—Charges that Cuban negro rebels are burning and pillaging the homes and properties of Americans and other foreigners in the districts of Palmarito, Bayate and Miranda, Oriente province, were made by twenty-four American and British refugees who arrived here. They predicted that there will be a massacre of the white residents remaining unless the United States intervenes and asserted that the Cuban government is powerless to cope with the situation. Most of the refugees escaped with only the clothes they wore.

The accusations were substantiated by an appeal for aid signed by 116 Americans remaining in the territory occupied by the rebels. The appeal, the refugees said, will be forwarded to the state department at Washington.

H. J. Spanell Is Convicted Of Murder

Coleman, Texas.—A verdict of guilty of murder was returned by the jury in the case of Harry J. Spanell, charged with the killing of Lieut. Col. M. C. Butler. Punishment was fixed at five years' imprisonment. Spanell all but collapsed when the verdict was read. Counsel for the defense announces that a motion for a new trial will be filed immediately, and if it is not granted an appeal will be taken. The plea for reversal, they say, will be based specifically upon the refusal of the court to sustain defense's plea of "former acquittal."

Reforms Demanded By Hungarians

Copenhagen.—The ferment among the Hungarian working classes caused by Premier Count Tisza's refusal of an effective reform of the franchise is far more serious than appeared in the censored telegraphic account of the demonstration strike. All the Buda Pest factories, it now is learned, were then closed. A resolution was presented by the workmen after the closing which demanded in the firmest of language a liberal electoral reform.

Swedish Food Rioters Are Suppressed

Stockholm.—Women who stood in line to buy potatoes in the southern part of Stockholm became unruly when informed that the stock was exhausted and began a demonstration which assumed proportions that kept the police busy until after midnight. Several policemen were injured by stones thrown, and a number of the rioters received scalp wounds from the police sabers. Sixteen arrests were made. Serious rioting also occurred in Guthenburg.

American Troops Wanted At Front

Washington.—Great Britain has formally joined France in expressing the hope that an American expeditionary force soon would take its place on the western front in Europe. Foreign Secretary Balfour told the council of national defense that the British would be overjoyed to welcome an American force in France and that its early dispatch could not but have an enormous psychological effect both on the allies and on their enemies.

TO SEND ARMY TO FRANCE

Americn Soldiers To Be Put On The Firing Line On The Western Front Very Soon

Washington. — The United States stands ready to send an army to Europe whenever the allies deem it wise to divert the necessary shipping from transporting food to transporting men.

It became definitely known here that the government has offered the allies troops, but has suggested that the alarming shortage of world shipping may make it impractical to send them at once. In spite of objections of the general staff to putting any American force on the firing line before the great army has been raised and trained, the administration has determined that the small contingent earnestly desired by France for moral effect shall be sent as soon as possible.

Whether the force first to carry the Stars and Stripes into battle in France shall be made up of regulars or National Guardsmen, or both, has not been worked out.

Little doubt exists that the French will gladly put up with any sacrifice necessary to have American troops in France, as the great plea of their mission has been for troops with the American flag. They have pointed out that this is needed to convince the Germans beyond doubt that all America's resources have been thrown into the battle.

The British also are known to be anxious to have American troops in France as a final earnest of American participation, but there is reason to believe that they have taken a somewhat more detached view than the French. Overcome by the whole-heartedness of American co-operation in the war, they believe that the one essential is to marshall the common resources to the greatest advantage. With their responsibility for tonnage, their decision about the advisability of sending an expeditionary force is uncertain.

ENSIGN VANKIRK FALLS TO DEATH IN AN AIRPLANE

Navy Officer Drops One Thousand Feet Into Pensacola Bay And Caught In Wreckage And Drowned

Pensacola, Fla.—Ensign D. P. Vankirk, U. S. N., fell a thousand feet in an airplane into Pensacola bay here and was drowned before he could be extricated from the floating wreckage of the machine.

Ensign Vankirk's fall, which occurred off the naval aviation training station here, was seen by Lieutenant Stone of the coast guard, who also was in an airplane. Lieutenant Stone brought his machine above the point where Vankirk's wrecked flyer floated and, dropping into the water, swam to aid his comrade. It was forty minutes before Vankirk's body could be released from the wreckage. All effort to resuscitate him proved futile.

RIOTS IN PETROGRAD; BOMBS ARE THROWN

Outbreak Caused By Enemies Of Liberty, But Was Soon Quelled—May Day Marked With Parades

New York.—The possibility of peace terms being advanced by Germany; the internal political situation in that country arising from dissatisfaction of the workmen over present conditions, and a recrudescence of rioting in Petrograd, in which bombs were thrown and the disturbers were fired upon, are features in the news of the world war, which for the moment take precedence over the military operations on the fighting fronts.

Press Censorship Greatly Modified

Washington.—The espionage bill was passed by the house with a modified censorship provision after administration leaders had lost an insistent fight for retention of the original section aimed at the publication of news of value to the enemy. The final vote was 260 to 105. Consideration of a similar measure continued in the senate during the day, and there, too, the administration suffered a defeat. An export embargo amendment, about which the fight in the senate has centered, was modified so as to substitute for the general authority proposed in a provision to empower the president to restrict exports in specific cases where American goods are reaching the enemy.

Gigantic Meteor Passes Over Georgia

Atlanta.—A meteor, which lit up the heavens almost as bright as day, those who saw it reported, shot over Atlanta at 11:20 o'clock Tuesday night, May 1. It was witnessed by hundreds of people in and around Atlanta, who described it as one of the most splendid spectacles ever seen in the heavens. It came from a southwesterly direction, being first seen at Macon. Reports from that town say it lit up the entire city. The telegraph operator at Bolingbroke, Ga., stated that a terrific roaring accompanied the meteor.

Germans Plotted Against J. P. Morgan

New York.—Confesison was made in court by Wolf Hirsch, arrested with George Merringer, both Germans, that they were on their way to blow up the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co. Hirsch told the court that the explosion of a bomb at the Morgan office was a part of a scheme to create a stock market reversal from which he and Merringer could profit. He told the court he had made the bomb under the direction of Merringer and another man in a laboratory at the Roosevelt hospital.

NATION POURING OUT ITS WEALTH

Response To Offering Of $2,000,000,000 Loan Indicates Greatest Subscription In History Of World

OFFER IS OVER-SUBSCRIBED

Less Than 2 Per Cent Of Banks Alone Took $138,674,000 Of Loan The First Day

Washington.—Subscriptions to the liberty loan poured into the treasury department at the rate of nearly $20,000,000 an hour. The greatest outpouring of national wealth in the history of the world was foreshadowed by the first day's response to the offering of the loan.

The sheaf of telegrams from every section of the country grew larger as the day progressed. Five hundred telegrams, less than two per cent of the total number of banks from which replies are expected, had been classified by states and tabulated when the office closed the first day. These 500 responses carried offers of subscriptions to the amount of $138,674,000.

The greatest flood of responses came between 4 and 6 p. m., after the offices had closed. It was estimated that 500 more banks were heard from within the two hours.

The $138,674,000 of subscription tabulated representing less than two per cent of the banks alone, indicated that the $2,000,000,000 offer will be oversubscribed at least 100 per cent. Should the ratio of the first responses be maintained in replies from the other banks, the banks and their customers alone would offer subscriptions totalling approximately $7,000,000,000.

One subscription of $20,000,000 was received from a bank in New York. Another was for $5,000,000. The smallest subscription was $5,000. New York led the list of statese with subscriptions aggregating approximately $72,000,000, more than half the total amount.

18,538 OFFICERS AND 528,659 MEN WILL BE STRENGTH

Of First Army Organized Under The Draft Plan, For Which All Details Have Been Worked Out

Washington.—The full strength of the first war army organized under the selective draft bill will be 18,538 officers and 528,659 enlisted men, making up eighteen war strength divisions complete in every arm and supplemented by sixteen regiments of heavy field artillery, equipped with large caliber howitzers.

A revised list of officers' training camp districts issued by the department indicates that the divisions of the first half million new fighting men will be formed as follows:

First Division—Troops from all New England states.

Second—New York congressional districts 1 to 26 (including Long Island, New York City and a strip north of the city).

Third—Remainder of New York state and Pennsylvania congressional districts 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 21, 25 and 28.

Fourth—Remainder of Pennsylvania state, including Philadelphia and Pittsburg.

Fifth—New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

Sixth—North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

Seventh—Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Eighth—Ohio and West Virginia.

Ninth—Indiana and Kentucky.

Tenth—Illinois.

Eleventh—Michigan and Wisconsin.

Twelfth—Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Thirteenth—Minnesota, Iowa, North and South Dakota and Nebraska.

Fourteenth—Missouri, Kansas and Colorado.

Fifteenth—Oklahoma and Texas.

Sixteenth—Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona and New Mexico.

In addition there will be two separate cavalry divisions which probably will be situated in the southwest near the Mexican border.

Haiti Joins War Against Germany

Port-au-Prince, Haiti. — President Artiguenave has sent a message to the senate and chamber of deputies of congress demanding a declaration of war against Germany and a commission has been appointed to consider the question. This action was taken in consequence of the fact that among the victims of the torpedoed French steamer Montreal were five Haitien members of the crew, and three Haitien passengers. The Montreal was plying beteween Bordeaux and Haiti.

China Prepares To Enter The War

Pekin. — The entry of China into the war at an early date seems inevitable. President Li Yung Hung and the senate are opposed to such a step, but the house of representatives, the premier and the conference of military governors are urging war. A dissolution of parliament is threatened if parliament fails to declare a state of hostilities. Owing to the great power exercised by the military party, the senate probably will yield to the war party.

U-BOATS MENACE TO WORLD

Many Thousands Of Tons Of Foodstuffs With Ships Sunk During Last Days Of April

Washington.—That Germany's submarine arm, not her military arm, is the menace which for the moment is greatest for the future welfare of the United States and the entente allies is recognized by the chancellories of all the powers which are at war with Germany.

The last days of April saw the underwater boats send to the bottom hundreds of thousands of tons of shipping, which means that huge quantities of ammunition and foodstuffs, the receipt of which would have greatly heartened Great Britain and France, have been irretrievably lost to them and made the pinch of want to those countries, their soldiers and their people more acute.

These undersea monsters of the underseas from April 20 to 27 had their share with mines in sending beneath the waves some of them unwarned and with tolls of death, thirty-eight British vessels of over 1,600 tons and thirteen others of less than 1,600 tons—the aggregate in each category being only two vessels less than the British admiralty reported the previous week, when the high point in the sinking of British merchantmen since the reports have been issued was reached.

In fair weather or foul the submarines are working mountainous seas seeming not even to impede their thrusts whenever a vessel comes within range of their guns or torpedoes.

Impetus is being given to the plans to combat the menace by all the countries at war with Germany, and hopes are expressed that shortly a check may be put to the inroads of the submarines into commerce.

TURKS ARE DRIVEN BY BRITISH TROOPS

Ottoman Forces Again Defeated In Mesopotamia—British Cavalry Pursuing And Making Captives

New York.—The military activities on all fronts in France and Belgium are still in a stage of apparent deadlock, but the big guns everywhere continue roaring in violent duels, and doubtless new phases of infantry actions are developing. On none of the other fronts have there been engagements of great importance, although the British in Mesopotamia have driven forward their lines against the Turks and made captures of men, guns and stores, while the Turks have forced out the Russians from Mush, in Turkish Armenia.

Amends To Argentina Promised

Buenos Aires.—The Argentine government has received a note from the German government expressing regret for the sinking of the Argentine ship Monte Protegido, and adding that in view of the fact that the Monte Protegido left Pernambuco on January 31 and was in consequence ignorant of the new German measures, the imperial government is disposed to give reparation. The German minister has sent to the Argentine minister a note declaring that an imperial squadron will salute at the first opportunity the Argentine flag as a mark of respect.

Trade Little Affected By State Of War

Washington.—General business conditions through the country, the federal reserve board announces in its monthly review, have not been materially affected by the entrance of the United States into the war, although in every district there is going on a process of readjustment which is reflected in many lines. In no section of the country, the board finds, has there been industrial, financial or commercial distress because of the changes incidental to placing the country on a war footing.

Pro-Germans Cause Riot In New York

New York.—When the chairman of a mass meeting, held here, in Cooper Union, by thirty-two organizations, composed of Americans of Irish birth or descent, refused to receive a resolution calling upon President Wilson and congress to intercede in behalf of Irish independence, a riot broke out which resulted in the ejection of more than thirty persons from the hall and which was not quelled until 200 policemen made free use of their clubs.

First Bond Issue For Two Billion

Washington.—Secretary McAdoo announces that the first offering of bonds authorized under the war finance law would be a two billion dollars "liberty loan" issue, open to popular subscriptions would be received till June 15 next. The bonds will be dated July 1, and will be ready for delivery on that date. Although many organizations in addition to the banks of the country will be utilized in floating the bonds the twelve federal reserve banks will be designated to receive subscriptions.

1,300,000 Germans Have Lost Lives

Amsterdam.—One million three hundred thousand Germans have perished in the war, according to a statement made by Joseph Friedrich Nauman, formerly a Conservative member of the reichstag. Herr Naumann, lecturing on the "Influence of the War on Population," said in part: "Until now the war has caused a loss of 1,300,000 dead. This, together with the decrease in birth, gives a reduction of 3,800,000. The surplus of females has increased from 800,000 to far more than 2,000,000."

OPERATION OF NEW DRAFT LAW

Official Instructions Concerning the Raising of Military Forces Determined On.

POLLING PLACES TO BE USED

All Persons Within the Age Limits Prescribed by the Law Must Present Themselves There—Governors of States at Head of Registration Work.

Washington.—With the object of stimulating publicity to the work of raising the military forces called for under the army draft law the war department has issued the following instructions, which will govern the work:

> There was a time in the country's history when military enumerators, backed by bayonets, went out among the people to take a compulsory service census. Today, under the principle of universal liability to service, the execution of the law is put into the hands of the people.

The approval of the new national army bill and the president's proclamation thereunder have been coincident. All persons within the age limits prescribed are required to present themselves for registration at the customary voting places in the voting precincts in which they have their permanent homes, on a day which the president will announce.

The governor of each state is the chief of registration therein. The machinery of registration in each county is in charge of the sheriff, the county clerk, and the county physician, acting ex officio, unless a different board shall be announced by the governor. In cities containing populations of more than 30,000, the registration will be under the control of the mayor and selected boards of registration. In order that the disignated county and city officials, and the people generally, can get a clear understanding of the census methods the following brief outline is given:

The sheriffs, or other designated officials, immediately upon receiving notice from the governor, shall appoint registrars for each voting precinct.

Apportionment of Registrars.

The proportion of registrars shall be one for each 170 persons to be registered. Each age to be registered will comprise about 1 per cent of the population.

If, for instance, all men between nineteen and twenty-five years of age, inclusive, are to be registered, the registrar would have to enroll about 7 per cent of the precinct population.

It is desirable to accept the services of competent volunteer registrars to serve without compensation. All registrars must be sworn.

The voting place in each precinct must be prepared for registration. Full printed instructions covering every detail of registration will be in the hands of sheriffs and mayors on the fifth day after the president's proclamation.

Cities of Over 30,000 Population.

The mayor of a city containing more than 30,000 inhabitants, or the officials designated by the governor therein, shall, with approval of the governor, appoint for each ward or convenient minor subdivision containing about 30,000 people one registration board, and shall designate one officer of each board to perform duties similar to those imposed on the sheriff, as heretofore outlined. If the mayor desires, he may appoint a central board to coordinate the work of minor boards.

Duties of County Clerks, and of Clerks of Cities of Over 30,000 People.

On the fifth day after the president has issued his proclamation, clerks of counties and cities of over 30,000 must secure a supply of blanks and copies of the registration regulations from the sheriff or from the mayor. Absentees and the sick will apply to such clerks to have their registration cards filled out. In no case shall such persons be given registration certificates. They are to be instructed by the clerk that the burden is on them to see to it that the cards reach the registrars of their home precincts by registration day.

Absentees and the Sick.

Persons absent from their home counties may be registered by mail. If so absent, a man should go to the clerk of the county where he may be staying, on the sixth day after the date of the president's proclamation. If he is in a city of over 30,000 population, the city clerk is the official to whom to apply. The absentee will be told how to register, but he must mail his card in time to reach his precinct by registration day.

Persons too sick to present themselves for registration must send a competent person to the county or city clerk on the sixth day after the issuing of the proclamation. The clerk will give instructions for registration.

Colleges, Universities, Homes and Other Institutions.

Officials of educational, charitable and other institutions should apply for instructions to the county or city clerk on the sixth day after the date of the proclamation for instructions as to a convenient method of registration.

The wardens of jails, penitentiaries, and reformatories should apply to the county or city clerk for instructions on the sixth day.

Five days after the date of the president's proclamation complete regulations will be in the hands of all sheriffs and of the officials of cities of over 30,000 population.

The president is authorized to call upon all public officers to assist in the execution of the law. The plan is, however, to rely on the people for the proper execution of the law. It is expected that patriotic citizens will offer their services free as registrars. Such services will be gratefully acknowledged. Volunteers for this service should communicate immediately with the proper official.

BANKS ASKED TO CO-OPERATE

Secretary Authorizes Financial Institutions to Receive Subscriptions for the Bond Offerings.

Washington.—Secretary McAdoo telegraphed the entire list of 27,513 national and state banks and trust companies in the United States, authorizing them to receive subscriptions for the $2,000,000,000 bond offering, enlisting their co-operation, and requesting them to telegraph a rough estimate of the amount of bonds each would take for itself and its patrons.

"You can render an invaluable service to your country," Mr. McAdoo told the banks, "by receiving subscriptions and co-operating with the federal reserve bank in your district."

Loan Subscriptions Pour In.

To all clearing house associations in the country Mr. McAdoo sent a telegram in which he said:

"The amount of the initial loan has been determined by the needs of the government and not arbitrarily. The enthusiastic and patriotic co-operation of the banks and bankers of the country will guarantee the success of the undertaking."

The result of the first announcement of the loan has been a deluge of subscriptions, aggregating many millions. Most of these came in by wire to the treasury. Virtually every large city and every state in the Union was represented.

Lend $100,000,000 to Italy.

Negotiations continued today with representatives of the nations to which the United States is extending credit. Count di Cellere, the Italian ambassador, received the full amount of the first $100,000,000 loan made by this government to Italy.

Subscriptions to the second offering of treasury certificates were received during the day by the federal reserve banks. Indications are that the secretary will call for the proceeds within a week, possibly a few days.

The $100,000,000 loan to France will be turned over to Ambassador Jusserand, in whole or part, within a day or so.

MAY CENTER IN WASHINGTON

Probability That One Committee Will Purchase All Supplies Needed by the Allied Countries.

Washington.—Creation of a central purchasing committee in Washington for all supplies bought in the United States for the allied governments was forecast here by Sir Hardman Lever, financial expert of the British war mission. The committee will supplant J. P. Morgan & Co.

Discussing the world financial situation, the British expert expressed the opinion that Germany will be practically bankrupt in the credit markets after the war.

"Our enemies," he said, "for all their boasted efficiency, have never had the courage to face their financial problems, with the result that when the war is over they will be hard put it."

The Teutonic governments pyramided one internal loan upon other, he explained, their interest charges would be so great that he believed they would either have to repudiate a large part of their debt or face inability to buy the enormous quantities of material they would need for reconstruction.

The allies, he added, had paid their way in the war "by the straightforward and natural means, by pouring out their gold, by selling enormous masses of American securities, by raising loans." As a result, he predicted that the end of the war would find the allies in good shape financially, despite their enormous permanent debts.

Agree on Paying Men in Training.

Washington.—Conferees on the army bill agreed on a provision to pay $100 a month to men in training camps seeking to qualify as members of the officers' reserve corps.

Although the full allotted quota of 40,000 men probably will be enrolled in the officers' training camps when they open May 15, there still is "plenty of room for men of the right qualities," the war department announced.

In a statement saying that each of the sixteen camps seemed assured of its full allotment of 2,500 applicants for commissions, the department appealed for further recruits among men of proved ability.

Chicago to Furnish Chasers.

Chicago.—This city is now mobilizing its naval resources. Acting under orders from the navy department, Capt. W. A. Moffett, commandant of the Great Lakes naval training station, began rounding up hundreds of small power boats preparatory to equipping them as submarine chasers. Captain Moffett expects to rush them "to the seaboard" as rapidly as possible.

SIXTH EPISODE

The Disappearing Prisoner.

"And he has given her the Rajah necklace!"

Romanoff ended his speech and waited for Bianca's approbation. She had listened quietly while the man discoursed, and now regarded him with an ironical smile.

"Next time you bring me information, Mr. Ranonoff, why not tell me something I did not know?" she asked.

"How?" demanded Romanoff.

"How? Why, by bringing me the necklace tonight, of course," answered Bianca sharply. "The job won't be so difficult. I have all the plan detailed, and you'll take Reddy along to act as lookout."

* * * * * * *

"For the love of Mike, look, Bill!"

Policeman Casey, who had been sleeping in the station house, while his comrades off duty played dominoes, started up in his berth, his teeth chattering.

They looked where he pointed. In a far corner of the station house, luminous against the half gloom, appeared two burning eyes and two white hands, which, as they watched, traced in fiery letters the following message:

"An attempt will be made tonight to steal the Rajah necklace from the home of the millionaire, Sebastian Navarre!"

The men started from their seats and stared at each other in consternation as the message slowly faded. Then with one accord they rushed into the corner.

There was nothing there. The room was empty, except for their presence. So vigorous was Officer Casey's rush that he ran his head full tilt into the wall. But only a bump developed.

"It's a warning," muttered Casey, rubbing his head. "Let's tell the captain."

"And get called down."

"I tell you it's a warning."

"You tell him, Casey."

"You'll back me up?"

"I guess so. I saw it sure enough."

"Say, what's eating you boys?" demanded Captain O'Shaughnessy angrily, as the policemen stood before him with their story told. "You go and lie down, Casey."

"It's true," said Officer Logan. "I saw it with my eyes."

"For the Lord's sake! You, too, Cohen?"

"Sure I saw it," said Policeman Cohen, shifting uneasily beneath his superior's glare.

"You did, hey? All of you did? Then I tell you what we'll do. You four'll go out to Mr. Navarre's house, and don't come back until you get the burglars. See?"

Four dogged but rather shamefaced men left the station house five minutes later in the police automobile. Captain O'Shaughnessy had relented at the last moment. Besides, with four men swearing to the apparition, he had begun to think that there might be something in it after all.

There certainly was something in it. At half past twelve Reddy, the lookout, saw Romanoff stand inside the bathroom and signed to him that he found the coast clear. The maid had left the window open, as had been arranged. Romanoff entered the passage and crept cautiously toward Leontine's boudoir.

The door of Leontine's room was slightly ajar. Romanoff halted, and, listening, heard her even breathing as she slept. He crept back into the bathroom and looked down. Reddy was still standing at the foot of the fire escape, up which he had come.

Coward as he was, Romanoff knew that unless he brought back the necklace his occupation would be gone, so far as Bianca was concerned. He went back softly, and, taking a skeleton key from his pocket, unlocked the door at the end of the passage leading into the other rooms of the apartment. With an escape thus assured, he entered the boudoir, took his station before the safe, and began to manipulate the handle in accordance with the formula penciled upon his shirt cuff.

It was at this juncture that Casey, Cohen and Logan, leaving their automobile round the corner in charge of the fourth policeman, came quietly upon the scene by diverse routes. A glance showed Casey the familiar form of Reddy, standing at the foot of the fire escape and looking pensively upward.

Instinct brought Reddy's attention to Casey's presence. He did not stop to pass the time of night, but bolted—into the expansive arms of Cohen, at the other corner of the block.

Cohen welcomed him with his nightstick, and promptly led his subdued and battered prisoner toward the automobile.

Romanoff had got the safe open. Inside he saw the jewel case with the necklace. He stretched his hand out longingly. As he did so the two policemen entered the hall.

Romanoff dropped the case and scrambled for the door which he had unlocked so providentially. He smashed it open—to encounter Sebastian, who, hearing the noise in the bathroom, had slipped on his dressing gown and had come to investigate.

Romanoff dodged like an eel, for Casey and Logan were hard at his heels. The two policemen tripped over his outstretched foot and tumbled upon Sebastian. Romanoff darted into Leontine's bedroom.

The girl, awakened by the sounds, sat up in alarm. She caught a hasty glimpse of the crook's face. That was all. Romanoff dashed for the window, smashed it with one blow of his elbow, and clambered upon the sill, just as Logan and Casey fired simultaneously from the doorway.

One bullet went wild, the second struck Romanoff a glancing wound across the upper part of the thigh. With a yell he leaped into the darkness.

Romanoff went through the yard, scrambled upon a projecting roof, ran up the roof like a monkey, slid down a fire escape, and reached an empty street. As he did so he heard Casey shouting from the yard.

The trail of blood he left behind him would betray him in a few moments.

Romanoff bound up his wound with his handkerchief, let down his trouser leg, and then made his way, moaning, toward the street cars.

Half an hour later, weak and frenzied with pain, he staggered into Bianca's house.

* * * * * * *

"He's the only man who knew of our plan to get the necklace. He gave it away."

"Nonsense!" said Bianca angrily. The miscarriage of this second scheme against Navarre had, in fact, exasperated her. "It was your own stupidity and Reddy's."

"That fellow Ravengar is at the bottom of it, anyway," he snarled. "Ever since we had him in the cellar things have been going wrong. He heard us, anyhow, Bianca—"

"If you don't mind your manners you'll leave this house instantly!" snapped Bianca.

"Well—madame," muttered Romanoff, abashed. "He heard us laying our plans, and even if he didn't give the tip to the police he ought to be killed."

Bianca mused for a while. Then she touched her bell, and Wong Lee came shuffling in.

"Where is Mr. Ravengar?" inquired Bianca.

"In cellar, missis. All tight. No can get out again."

"I'll take a look at him," said Bianca thoughtfully. "Do you think you are able to accompany me, Mr. Romanoff?"

Romanoff hobbled at her side, and they went downstairs, preceded by the Chinese, who ostentatiously withdrew the heavy bolts of the great oaken door one by one. Stretched full length upon a bench, his hands under his head, was Ravengar, asleep. Bianca leaned over him and touched him. Ravengar started, opened his eyes, and then sprang to his feet with a bow.

"You see, Mr. Romanoff," said Bianca.

"He's faking!" screamed the crook, thoroughly exasperated, and frightened, into the bargain, by the amused smile upon Ravengar's face. "He warned the cops about our little game."

"Get out of here!" snapped Bianca, "or you'll be thrown out by Wong Lee. Come, now, march!"

Scowling and muttering, Romanoff beat a retreat. Bianca hesitated a moment, then said to Wong Lee:

"Help him upstairs and make him comfortable—but not in my boudoir, please."

When the door of the cellar had closed behind them Bianca stood looking in silence at Ravengar. The anger had disappeared from her face. She was smiling gently. It was the Bianca whose charms had lured a score of men to their ruin, the woman who thought her power irresistible.

There was no mistaking the inviting gesture, slight as it was. Bianca had recognized in Ravengar a man unlike any of her other easy conquests. His indifference had piqued her, then he had fascinated her. The woman of a hundred conquests, she had met her match at last.

"You perhaps don't realize that I saved your life just now!" she cried. "I am half inclined to reconsider my decision."

"It is a woman's privilege to change her mind, madame," replied Ravengar suavely.

Bianca clenched her fists and glared. But the look of amusement in Ravengar's eyes was too much for her equanimity. She swung about and hurried from the cellar in fury. However, she did not forget to bolt the door behind her, shooting each one home as if it were a dart to the heart of the man who had scorned her.

Bianca's Men Capture Leontine.

Upstairs in her boudoir she flung herself down on a lounge and reviewed the situation. The humiliation stung her like fire; her face, which had been scarlet, was now ashen. She trembled. She rose and paced the floor. She threw herself into a chair and burst into hysterical sobbing. It was the most incredible thing that had ever happened to her.

Suddenly, looking up, she saw something in the farthest corner of the room that sent her faint with terror. There again were the luminous eyes, and the dead-white hands beneath them. The eyes were fixed steadily on hers.

Then, as she watched, terror-stricken, she saw letters appear in the air beneath the hands, traced as if in phosphorescent fire.

"Only in one way can you win Ravengar's love," the writing ran. "Sebastian Navarre has committed a crime of which you are well aware. The confession has been destroyed. Draw a confession from him and Ravengar's feelings will change."

The writing quivered and disappeared, leaving Bianca staring at the blank wall opposite. And through the windows crept the first pale gray of the morning.

"Leontine!"

Sebastian Navarre stood before his wife in her boudoir. She rose nervously and looked at him in uncertainty; she was afraid that he had come to renew his protestations of love, but there was only contrition upon Sebastian's face.

"Leontine, I have come to make a proposal to you," said Sebastian. "I have wronged you in the past, but the past cannot be changed. Let us be happy in the future."

Leontine looked at him steadily. "You forget one thing," she answered. "The forgery that still asperses the honor of the man whom I love."

"He is dead, Leontine."

"His name is not dead. He is under a cloud. Dead or alive, his reputation must be cleared. That confession of Louie implicated you."

Sebastian fidgeted uneasily; he could not understand Leontine's stubbornness about the matter.

"It implicated you, Sebastian, and you behaved like a guilty man. You tried to get that paper."

"It was a lie," he burst out. "Don't you see, Leontine, that every wealthy man such as myself is at the mercy of a hundred blackmailers? Throw mud, and some of it sticks. 'No smoke without a fire,' the public cries. Louis Lamb wrote that confession of forgery, which implicated me, at the behest of a gang of blackmailers."

"He was rich; he had no need to incriminate himself."

"He wrote it before he found that gold mine in White's Village. That crook Romanoff who came here that morning wanted to sell it to me. Is that not evidence enough? Perhaps if I were a stronger man I should have taken the matter to law, had the fellow arrested and fought it out. But you would have been drawn in as a witness, and no man is willing to have his wife baited by thieves' lawyers upon the witness stand. If I acted foolishly I am to blame, but I am clean of the dishonor which you impute to me, and it was for your sake that I acted as I have done."

"Very well," said Leontine, making up her mind swiftly. "You shall have your chance, Sebastian. You have a right to ask that."

And she extended her hand frankly, which Sebastian took and raised deferentially to his lips.

"And now," he said, assuming a gayety which he was far from feeling, "what do you say to a little auto trip with me? Let us go out on the Plainfield road and have dinner together at Smith's roadhouse? We'll be back by evening."

"As you wish," answered Leontine.

"We'll start in half an hour, then," said Sebastian, rising. "I'll telephone the garage to send the car around."

He left her. And all the while she was putting on her cloak and hat and veil Leontine felt intuition struggling against reason. Sebastian could be fascinating when he chose. His manners were perfect; but in her heart she knew that these fair words were only a mask for his designs.

As the auto whirled away Leontine's maid, Marian, hurried to the telephone and rang up Bianca.

At that moment Bianca was holding a session in her house with Romanoff and three other of her adherents. She took down the receiver from the telephone at her side as she sat on the lounge, listened, and then hung it up.

She turned to Romanoff. "Now's our chance," she said. "They are off for the day to Smith's roadhouse on the Plainfield road. Does anyone know it?"

"I do!" cried Romanoff. "It's near the top of the Ramapo mountains, in the midst of the woods, and miles from anywhere."

"Well, boys, then here's your chance to get Senor Navarre," said Bianca. "Get him out of the house without his wife's knowing. Tell him—let me see!—tell him that One-Lamp Louie is waiting to speak to him. That will fetch him. Hustle him into the auto and take him into the mountains. There you'll get a confession from him about the forgery. And see that it duplicates the one which we had before."

"What's the use?" demanded Romanoff. "He won't buy back a confession that we got from him by force."

"Will you do as I tell you?" demanded Bianca.

"Well, boys!" said Romanoff, rising.

"And don't come back until you have it," Bianca added.

She watched them drive away and sank back upon the lounge again in despair. What was the use? There was no money in the project, and not much chance of success, Bianca knew. She, whose well-laid schemes had failed her, had descended to this wild scheme in order to win the love of Ravengar, the first man who had possessed her heart since she entered upon her life of crime.

* * * * * * *

Sebastian could certainly be charming when he set himself out to be. Leontine was forced to acknowledge that. The personality of the man thawed the ice of her reserve, and the little point of doubt sank deeper and deeper down in the recesses of her soul.

Who was this man Ravengar? Three times he had interposed to aid her in her perplexity and distress. She had come to expect him to appear in such times. If Jerry had never entered her life. . . .

Suddenly she became aware that a stranger had entered the roadhouse garden. He was standing beside Sebastian, who looked up at him impatiently.

"Excuse me, but are you not Mr. Sebastian Navarre?" he asked.

"Well, sir?" demanded Sebastian, annoyed at the interruption.

"There is a man of this name waiting outside to speak to you."

He handed him a dirty piece of paper. Sebastian glanced at it and turned white. Then, with an energetic gesture, he tore the paper into pieces and flung them down upon the floor. Without a word to Leontine he clapped on his hat and followed the stranger.

Leontine stared after her husband in wonder. Then, moved by a sudden impulse, she stooped and picked up the scraps of paper. She pieced them together upon the table and made out the name, "One-Lamp Louie."

What Leontine saw vividly was the face of the little crook who had torn the confession from her hands and destroyed it outside the gaming house. At once her suspicions leaped into life. She ran out of the garden.

Sebastian was nowhere to be seen, but she heard a faint cry for help coming from a lonely spot some distance below the summit of the hill, among the dense bushes.

Hurrying forward along a little trail, she saw presently the automobile, standing beside a gypsy wagon. Beside this her husband was wrestling with three men. It was a distant picture; she could discern Sebastian only by his characteristic pose of anger, and again his cry came to her, sounding faint and far away.

Instantly Leontine dashed through the trees, tripping over roots, forcing her path through brambles, her mind intent on loyalty to the man she called her husband.

The kidnapers had whisked Sebastian into the auto and pushed it down the mountain path before he was well aware of what was happening to him. The trail connected, some distance down the hill, with a disused road, which, in turn, ran into the main road two miles further away. This road led into the mountains, and it was there that the crooks meant to extort Sebastian's confession.

An unexpected interruption in the shape of a fallen tree compelled the car to slow down. Instantly Sebastian seized his opportunity to leap to the ground. It was then that Leontine heard his cry for aid.

"Shut up!" yelled Romanoff, dashing his fist into Sebastian's face.

But Sebastian, whose fears were stronger than his cowardice, broke away from his pursuers, again crying for help. And it was at this juncture that Leontine, breathless and dishevelled, appeared upon the scene.

At the sight of her the men hesitated. Then Romanoff had an inspiration. Behind Leontine stood the empty gypsy van, whose owners were doubtless picking blueberries upon the mountains. He caught the girl in his arms, bundled her inside, and locked the door on her.

"Now we've got 'em, I guess," he said, baring his teeth in a grin.

And he started as his own words left his mouth, for out of the bushes broke—Ravengar, who had been left securely locked in Bianca's cellar.

With blows right and left, Ravengar felled two of the crook's companions. While Romanoff dodged the third swing of his right arm, Ravengar unlocked the door of the van.

He dashed inside. "Leontine!" he called.

Romanoff's inspiration did not desert him. Before Ravengar had caught Leontine from the interior of the van he had turned the key on him. He drew back, panting, while his companions, who had picked themselves up from the ground, stared dazedly about.

Then, turning round, he realized that Sebastian had made good his escape in the confusion. Far up the hillside he saw Sebastian running.

He ground his teeth in rage.

"I guess we'd better beat it home and think out what we are going to say," said one of the gang.

"And leave him in there with her?" grinned Romanoff, jerking his thumb toward the van, from within which came the sound of Ravengar's fruitless blows. "Not if I know it. Look."

He pointed down the hill. Some fifty yards away the steep declivity ended in one of those precipices common in that country—a sheer drop of not more than thirty feet, perhaps. But thirty feet is as good as a hundred for a heavy gypsy van.

"All we've got to do is to start her," said Romanoff with a grin.

* * * * * * *

Leontine, faint with terror, saw a man bound into the van. She looked up—to see Ravengar.

At that moment both heard the door click behind them. The light was again cut off abruptly.

The man flung himself with his full force against it. It did not yield a particle. He smashed with his fists against the heavy wood. But the door of the van was without panels, hewn from the living tree, and he might as well have attacked cast iron.

Then he was conscious that the van was moving.

In fact Romanoff and his companions had picked up the shafts and had given the vehicle the primary impetus that was to start it on its way down the mountain side. The wheels would revolve faster and faster until the edge of the precipice was reached Then . . .

The van was half way down the descent when Leontine's companion, groping about him in the darkness, felt his hand close on something that set his heart beating wildly. It was an iron crowbar, such as the gypsies carry in their tinkering and shoeing outfits.

He grasped it, snatched it up, and battered furiously upon the door. It splintered. Again and again he delivered thunderous blows with all his power.

Suddenly the whole door gave. It cracked and swung from the hinges, and toppled to the ground, falling beneath the van. It arrested one of the hind wheels. The van stopped dead for an instant and began to topple over. The forward impetus precipitated him to the ground.

He scrambled upon his feet and saw the awful precipice beneath him. Had not the van swerved at that moment, it would have precipitated him down thirty feet below, among the rocks and bowlders.

He stretched out his arms. "Leontine!" he called wildly.

And Leontine tumbled into them. For a second they swung and swayed upon the very edge of the precipice. Then, with almost superhuman strength, he pulled her backward, and they fell exhausted among the bushes.

Sick and giddy, Leontine rose to her feet and looked at her rescuer. Was this Ravengar? Or was it a phantasy of a disordered brain that seemed to see him standing at her side, one hand outstretched.

"Come, Madame Navarre," he said ceremoniously. "I will conduct you to your husband."

* * * * * * *

Bianca leaped to her feet as the auto stopped in front of her house. She had fallen asleep, dreaming of Ravengar, the man locked in the cellar beneath. She had dreamed that her emissaries had returned, bringing with them news of success, and Sebastian's written confession.

She had dreamed that the mystic prophecy had been fulfilled, and that Ravengar loved her. In this love somehow she had found herself; she had shaken free from the old Bianca; she was once more an innocent girl beside her lover.

She looked through the window. The men were descending from the auto. She read their failure in their dejected faces. And the dream was all a lie.

Romanoff and his friends received the worst rating that had ever passed Bianca's lips. For once she met them on their own level. She tonguelashed them until they were ready to sink through the floor. Bianca knew how to wield the whip.

"If you'd accepted my advice and had that Ravengar killed, this wouldn't have happened," burst out Romanoff.

"You fool!" said Bianca angrily. "You were dreaming, all of you. Some tramp came along, I suppose."

"I tell you it was that Ravengar," cried Romanoff furiously. "He busted up the show, and he got Leontine out of the van in the nick of time."

Bianca looked from one to another, speechless.

"Are you prepared to swear it was Ravengar?" she asked. "Are you ready to come to the cellar with me?"

"You won't find him there, unless he's got a double," answered Romanoff.

Bianca rang for Wong Lee. "Where is Mr. Ravengar?" she asked the Chinaman.

"All in cellar, missis."

"Lead the way, then, Wong."

They followed the servant with a consciousness of increasing tension. Wong Lee threw back the bolts. Upon the bench Ravengar lay, his head on his arm, asleep. He started up as the door opened, and, seeing Bianca, bowed.

"I tell you he was there!" screamed Romanoff, almost beside himself. "He was at Smith's roadhouse in the Ramapos this afternoon and busted up the show."

Ravengar laughed gayly.

"I wish I had been," he remarked cheerfully.

PEOPLES TELEPHONE 96.

The Clanton Press attempts to answer our charge against them for not allowing Judge Reynolds' letter in favor of the bond issue to appear in its columns, by making the fabrication that the Union-Banner was closed to discussions against the measure. When they say that the columns of this paper were closed against those who desired to express opinions against the bond issue, they state an absolute falsity as a matter of fact, and they have not even as much as a shadow of fact in which to clothe the nakedness of the misrepresentation.

We ask them to name one instance wherein anyone wrote an opinion either for or against the bond issue, and submitted it to us for publication, and failed to get the absolute free and unhampered use of our columns. Can they prove that our space was closed to those against the bond issue, without showing that we refused to allow such articles to appear, that is, that we actually rejected them?

If they can point to an article against the bond issue that we refused to publish, we will willingly submit to having our whole attitude judged by the one instance and accept the verdict that our position was a one-sided one. We will then be willing to say that we did not allow a full and unhampered discussion in fairness to both sides of the issue.

We have shown already the fact that they refused Judge Reynolds' article, and they can't justify their actions substantially by any other way than to admit that they did not offer their columns to freedom of expression on the side favoring the issue.

The whole thing shows that down in their hearts they opposed the bond issue, and desired that those in favor of it should not reach the people with their arguments. and we don't see why the Press did not have "legs" enough to come out against the thing if it were against it. Such action would have been better sustained than attempting to blow both hot and cold at one and the same time.

In the matters of the county appropriating money for this, that and the other, it seems to us that many are looking at the question too much from a personal standpoint. They seem to be arguing for appropriations just because it will be of value to them from a direct and specific standpoint.

As an example of instances of this kind, some say that they have planted a large quantity of seeds that will produce a great quantity of fruit and vegetables, and they contend that they will be lost unless they can get Mrs. Jones to can them.

In such cases as this, it seems that the necessity for getting somebody to can the produce does not devolve as a duty upon the county, but upon the individual. Even if the county should employ Mrs. Jones or anyone else to demonstrate canning, it would not mean that they were employing her to render service to people who were in turn directly commercializing her work. She would only demonstrate briefly the work to them, and then they would place on the market the results of their own hands!

If any body has planted more tomatoes or okra than they can get ready to put on the market before it rots, they should be hustling around to hire somebody to help them. It is not the duty of the county to look after such cases as that, even if it were able to, and did employ a demonstrator.

What would you think of a fellow if he were to come before the Commissioners and tell them he had planted more corn than he could harvest and put on the market, and ask the county to hire a man to come and help him save it?

If some would stop and think for a moment, they would find that they have done about the equivalent of such a thing in the request of the commissioners to give them a canning demonstrator.

But in spite of all the confusion and misconstruction that anyone may have in regard to the canning club work, the movement is organized and defined close enough by the government departments controling it, to keep it strictly within its own sphere, and render good service. But the question is can the county lay out extensive appropriations further right now until it "finds itself" financially?

This week we are publishing a letter from Mr. Guy H. DeShazo, in regard to the canning club work. The letter was intended for publication last week, but did not reach us in time for that issue. We gladly give space to it this week.

We believe, with all conscientious sincerity, that in spite of the arguments in favor of the agricultural extension work, home demonstration, canning clubs, etc., for the sake of the torn, tattered, "busted" and riddled poceket book of Chilton county, the people should not demand any extra layout of appropriations until the Commissioners have a little more chance to compose the conditions and find a position of definiteness in the public money matters. It seems to us that it would be a better plan right at present to operate our home necessities the best we can on the means we can get up by personal effort until the county is better able to take up the work.

The integrity and confidence of the court of county Commissioners with the people of the county is worth contending for. The members of that body have public duties and obligations to fulfill. They cannot sacrifice the trust the people put in them to heed the call of every fellow who comes along preaching some little something as the only proper and sensible thing for them to do. When the people lose confidence in the stability of a governing body, all is lost. As a proof of this fact, w ecite you to the past administration in Chilton county.

What pride could our people have in hordes of gold, or mountains of canned tomatoes, or any other individual or private attainments, with the county disgraced by a hopeless debt, "busted" and ruined by extravagant appropriations, and dishonored by a spineless administration of public officials? Give us safe, sane, wise and economical progress in public aspects, as well as in private and individual instances.

Last week we received a letter from "West Chilton," in regard to the canning club work. There was no name accompanying the letter, and we had no way of ascertaining who the author was, therefore we could not publish it. We would have been glad to use it if we had known who it was from.

FOOD EMERGENCY

"The world is on fire; we are in the conflagration."—Woodrow Wilson.

Ninety per cent. of the worlds' population are engaged in this war, whether directly or indirectly.

Ninety-five per cent. of the land of the earth is in the fire of distress.

The cry of food, food, food comes from every land; we must answer the cry of humanity.

"Alabama must feed herself," completely without receiving one carload of anything from anywhere.

We must turn loose the $100,000,000 of feed and food that has been coming to us, and let it go to feed the needy.

We have twelve months of a growing season, and we must "cash out" on that and produce our own food and feed.

The government advises that the South must feed herself or starve. We must be an asset instead of a liability. We can grow the stuff. Everybody get busy and do his part.

PLANT ALL THE FOOD CROPS POSSIBLE FROM NOW ON

Be sure and grow all the vegetables that you and your family can use during the present year, but do not increase your crops for canning until you ascertain whether or not you will be able to secure the cans you need. Cans and glass jars are very high in price, and you might not be able to get them at all.

Plant crops that can be kept without canning. For late summer use recommendations are made for green glazed and Carolina cabbage, long rooted beets, Hubbard squash, both bush and running butter beans, as well as pole and cornfield beans. Also grow a supply of okra, and on all land in the garden not otherwise used, grow some kind of cow peas.

Grow all the food and feed possible. If you do not need it, there are others who will; and they will be willing to pay you for it.

Uncle Tom Bates, the veteran blacksmith of Providence, Beat 16, was a visitor at the Union-Banner office Saturday. Uncle Tom is an old friend of the Editor, and he just dropped around to have a chat with us. To see him and hear his familiar words brings back the picture of those days when the editor was a bare-foot boy, and hung around his shop, in the shade of the old oak tree by the woodside, and played and froliced to the sound of his big sledge as he pounded upon the anvil. Great were the mysteries of those days—The vibrating bellows, the red-hot iron, the vice and the multitude of other things which Uncle Tom had taught us were not made to be handled by hands like ours. Such recollections bring to us sighs and pangs of heart, and are an empty vision that can never again be refilled.

BERMUDA GRASS

By D. J. Burleson, Agronomist for Extension.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

There is no better summer pasture grass for the Southern States than Bermuda. It thrives on a variety of soils, but is better adapted to sandy loam, sandy, and alluvial soils, than to stiff clays. As a pasture grass Bermuda will stand more grazing, more abuse and neglect than any other of the pasture grasses; is but slightly injured by floods; and drought only checks its growth. It is a hot weather plant and can not endure the shade. While Bermuda will endure neglect it will pay well for any attention given it.

While the chief use of Bermuda is for pasturage, it may be cut for hay on rich sandy loam or alluvial soils It should be cut just before the tops break out. If cutting is delayed much beyond this time the lower leaves fall and the upper part dies.

Bermuda should be on most permanent pastures in the Gulf States For sandy and loam soils Lespedeza, white and bur clover make a good combination for a permanent pasture with Bermuda. The white and bur clover furnish grazing in the winter and early spring, while the Bermuda and Lespedeza furnish grazing from mid-spring to frost.

Bermuda may be started by planting seed or pieces of sod, but the latter method is much surer, and is in nearly all cases to be recommended. Break the land as for corn, cut the Bermuda sod into small pieces and drop in furrows two feet apart and two feet in drill. In March or April is the best time to do this, but it may be done in summer or early fall by covering the pieces of sod deeply.

The seed may be sown in the spring after danger of frost is over, at the rate of five pounds per acre. The land should be thoroughly prepared, leaving the surface pulverized. The seed should be sown after a smoothing harrow, and brushed in, or followed by a heavy roller

Will you wet down your roughage and save several dollars on every ton?

SOME farmers are still paying top prices for old style cottonseed hulls because they prefer a bulky filler. Others are paying much less for and are making them as bulky as old style hulls by wetting them down a half hour or so before using.

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

By adding an equal part of water to Buckeye Hulls and stirring thoroughly they will swell and give you as bulky a roughage as you want. Most important, the bulkiness will be due to water which is of value to your cattle —not to lint which has no food value whatever.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls go farther.
They allow better assimilation of other food.
No trash or dust.
Sacked—easy to handle.
They mix well with other forage.
Take half as much space in the barn.

Mr. Benjamin Thompson, Baldknob, Ark., is feeding Buckeye Hulls to stock cattle. He says that he gets more food value per ton with less waste. He has bought five tons and has them stored in barn. He says that they occupy less space than old style hulls.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage oder, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

Ask Grandfather—He'll Tell You—

Stop Rheumatism Before It Takes Hold

You can do it by keeping your blood clean. The kidneys filter about 500 grains of uric acid and other salts from the blood every 24 hours. When there is more than the kidneys can remove, it is deposited in muscles and joints, and painful rheumatism follows. S. S. S., for 50 years the most efficient of all blood tonics, will keep the blood pure and prevent disease. At your druggists.

Pale Faced Women Take Phosphates to Make Rosy Cheeks and Beautiful Forms. Men need Phosphates to Make Strong, Healthy, Vigorous Bodies.

Athletes increase their strength, energy and endurance 200 per cent or more by simply taking a few weeks treatment of Argo-Phosphate.

Atlanta, Ga. Dr. F. A. Jacobson says that phosphates are just as essential to any man or woman who tires easily, is nervous, or irritable, worn out, or looks haggard and pale to make a strong, robust, vigorous, healthy body, as they are to cotton to make it grow. The lack of phosphate is the cause of all enemic conditions and the administration of 5-grain Argo-Phosphate tablets will increase the strength of weak, nervous, care worn men and women 300 per cent, in two or three week's time in many instances, and their continued use will build up the whole nervous system, and give new life, vim, vigor and vitality to the whole body. I always prescribe Argo-Phosphate to patients who are pale and colorless, and it is surprising to see how quickly a few week's treatment will transform a pale face to a rosy cheeked beauty. There can be no rosy cheeked, healthy beautiful women without their system is sufficiently supplied with phosphates. In recent interviews with physicians on the grave and serious consequences of a deficiency of phosphate in the blood of American men and women. I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors prescribe more phosphates in the form of Argo-Phosphates for the weak, worn-out, haggard looking men and women. When the skin is pale, and flesh flabby, it is a sign of anema. When the phosphates go from the blood, the pink cheeks go too. The muscles lack tone. They become nervous, irritable, despondent, melancholy, the brain frags, and the memory fails. Therefore, if you wish to preserve your youthful vim, vigor and vitality to a ripe old age, you must supply the deficiency of phosphates lacking in yaur food by using Argo-Phosphate, the form of phosphates most easily assimilated.

NOTICE: Argo-Phosphate which is recommended and prescribed by physicians in all enemic cases, is not a secret or patent medicine, but one that is sold and recommended by well known druggists everywhere, and physicians are daily subscribing the constituents contained in it. Being entirely unlike many other phosphates, it is easily assimilated and will be found effective in the treatment of indigestion and stomach troubles, as well as for care worn, nervous conditions. The manufacturers of Argo-Phosphate will forfeit to any charitable institution $200.00 if they can not treat any man or woman under 65 years who lacks phosphates, and increase their strength and endurance from 100 per cent to 300 per cent. or more in a month's time, if they are free from organic trouble. It is dispensed by all reliable druggists.

If your druggist will not supply you, send $1.00 to the ArgoLaboratories, 10 Farsyth St., Atlanta, Ga., and they will send you a two-week's treatmen by return mail.

BROKEN DOWN IN HEALTH

Woman Tells How $5 Worth of Pinkham's Compound Made Her Well.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them."—Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache, or bearing-down pains, need the tonic properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Arras Before the War.

Tapestries are no longer woven in Arras, but the city was a thriving industrial community at the outbreak of the war, its chief articles of manufacture being hosiery, ironware, oil products, beet sugar and agricultural implements.

In the Petite place and the Grand place Arras boasts some curious architectural relics of the period of Spanish occupation in the seventeenth century—houses of hewn stone whose upper stories project beyond the foundation walls and are supported by pillars which form arcades over the sidewalks. Beneath the streets are huge cellars or magazines which were originally quarries. The Hotel de Ville is an interesting sixteenth century building with a belfry 245 feet high, in which hangs a great nine-ton bell called "Joyeuse."

Vegetables Fill Window Boxes.

A great many London people have followed the example of Sir Samuel Evans, and are planting turnips in their window boxes instead of spring flowers, or, if not turnips, then some other useful vegetable. Those who won't forego their flowers are planting carrots in white sand in large boxes in their cellars or unused rooms, and mustard, cress, parsley and other herbs, are being grown in kitchen windows or in sheltered places in the areas.

Perhaps you have noticed that when a woman says "there's no use talking" she keeps right on talking.

Tin cans are used extensively in the manufacture of toy soldiers by Japanese toymakers.

GULF CITY HOST TO ALABAMA BANKERS

ATTENDANCE UPON ANNUAL CONVENTION OF STATE ASSOCIATION WAS GOOD.

PRESIDENT THOMAS PRESIDES

Efforts of the Association Along Agricultural Lines Told by Chairman Agricultural Committee.

Mobile.—The Twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Alabama Bankers' association convened here May 10, and will continue in session through the 12th. The convention opened at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon at the Battle House auditorium, official headquarters. After being called to order by the president, Judge C. E. Thomas of Prattville, and after prayer by Rev. J. W. Phillips of Mobile, Mayor Pillans of Mobile formally welcomed the bankers in the name of the city and its various business and social organizations. The association's response was made by Oscar Wells, president of the First National bank of Birmingham.

After the appointment of committees, James Keith, Jr., of Anniston, chairman of the agricultural committee, made his report. This, perhaps, is one of the most important subjects tee, made his report. This, perhaps, was expected that the scope of the association's agricultural work will be enlarged the coming year on account of the world shortage of food, co-operative effort being made all along the line for increase in live stock and forage crops production.

The report of the committee on legislation was made by its chairman, Val Taylor, and the report of the committee on warehouses by A. M. Baldwin, its chairman.

Says South Solid for Army Bill.

Washington.—That the south is overwhelmingly for the army bill was the statement made here by Colonel Hilary Herbert, Secretary of the Navy under President Cleveland, and Confederate soldier and statesman. Colonel Herbert has just returned from a trip through Alabama and Florida, and is firmly convinced that the people are with the President. "Looking at this matter as I do," said Colonel Herbert, "it could not well be otherwise with either the union or the Confederate soldier, for there is no better school in which to quicken the intelligence and broaden the understanding than an army in time of war. General Chas. Francis Adams, in his autobiography, said that his three years in the union army were of more value to him educationally than his three years at Harvard.

Big Fire in Gadsden.

Gadsden.—The interior of the brick building occupied by the Tri-Cty Ice and Supply company was destroyed by fire. The fire is thought to have originated in some feed stored in the rear of the building and is thought to have caused by an electric light wire. The damage is estimated at $1000. The building was owned by the Coosa Land company and was insured, but there was no insurance on the contents of the building.

Sheriff Wants Relief.

Selma.—Sheriff John Doherty wants some relief for the sheriffs. On May 1 he compared a bill for food supplies for prisoners with an old bill on the same date last year. It was for the same amount and same kinds of foodstuff. Last year on May 1 the bill was $60.58. This year on May 1 the same bill of goods cost the sheriff $121.08.

Federal Court Convenes.

Jasper.—Federal court convened here with Judge W. I. Grubb of Birmingham presiding. No cases of special importance were on the docket except a blackmailing case. Two negro men and one woman are charged with attempting to blackmail two young white women school teachers here several weeks ago.

Drunkenness No Longer Leads.

Montgomery—Habitual drunkenness, once among the leading causes for divorce proceedings in Montgomery, now has fallen from its former eminence. As shown by the records of the divorce court, the grounds for divorces, in order of their predominance, are: Abandonmbent, cruelty, adultery and habitual drunkenness.

Tuscaloosa May Get Plant.

Tuscaloosa.—If Tuscaloosa can raise the money to pay for the interest on a bond issue of $15,000, the combined pasteurizing plant, creamery and abattoir is assured. A committee of the Tuscaloosa Board of Trade went before the city commission and asked for the bond issue for the plant. The matter was turned over to thec ity attorney.

Hubbard Is Endorsed.

Washington.—Alabama members of Congress are endorsing Adjutant General G. J. Hubbard of the Alabama Natioinal Guard for Brigadier General in the new army to be formed.

Big Can Order Placed.

Albany.—Hartselle community expects to feed itself, and is planting large quantities of vegetables. An order has been placed with a local concern for 25,000 three-pound tin cans, which will be filled with home-grown products for winter use.

Alabama's Wettest Spot Is Found.

Huntsville.—What is believed to have been the wettest spot in North Alabama, a place where beer and whiskey flowed as in the days of old, has been reported to the authorities by Chief of Police John Childress who was appointed as a special deputy to raid a place on the Tennessee river. Liquor in large quantities has been brought down by steamboat and private launches from Chattanooga, and hundreds of empty bottles which were found i nthe rear of the place gave evidence of the fact that a thriving business had been carried on, says Chief Childress, but only two cases of whiskey were found on the premises.

U. D. C. Holds Annual Session.

Selma.—The interesting event of the annual convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy in session here, was the unveiling exercises of the boulder which was erected on the site of the historic ordnance and foundry site of the Confederacy. The ordnance plant was destroyed in 1865 by Wilson's raiders and the women of the Confederacy have erected a handsome boulder to mark the spot. Major D. M. Scott made the address of the occasion and the affair was preceded by a parade in charge of Clarence M. Boggs as marshal in chief, assisted by George H. Craig. Mrs. J. A. Rountree of Birmingham, first vcie president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was chosen president.

No Lives Lost in Storm.

Albany.—Reports received from Hartselle were to the effect that the disastrous cyclone which struck near there claimed no lives. Mrs. Sallie Gray, the aged woman who was seriously injured, is reported to be recovering. Her son, A. T. Gray, wife and nine children, all of whom were hurt, are also said to be out of danger. Citizens of Hartselle are raising funds with which to alleviate the distress caused by the loss of household effects and homes. The damage to the exhibit hall at the Hartselle fair grounds is placed at $1000.

Meeting of Press Association.

Birmingham.—The meeting of the Alabama Press Association, which was scheduled to be held in Gadsden on May 10 and 11, has been postponed for one week and will be held on May 17 and 18. The reason for the change is that on the 10th and 11th instant the convention of the Alabama bankers was held in Mobile.

SEND RAILROADERS TO FRANCE AT ONCE

EXPEDITION WILL NUMBER SOME 12,000 MEN; BUILDERS AND OPERATORS.

BROTHERHOODS WILL HELP

Expected to Encourage and Aid in Organization of the Force of Workers.

Washington.—Nine new regiments of army engineers, to be composed exclusively of highly trained railway men, will be the first American troops to be sent to France. They will go "at the earliest possible moment," the war department announced for work on communication lines, but special announcement as to exactly when or to what points they will be sent is forbidden because of the submarine menace.

The new forces will be volunteers, raised at nine great railway centers of the country. Each regiment will be commanded by an engineer colonel of the regular army, aided by an adjutant. All other officers will be railway engineers or officials.

The expedition will have a total strength of between 11,000 and 12,000 men, each regiment being composed of two battallions of three companies each. Every branch of railway workers necessary to the building or operation of lines will be represented in the ranks and the war department expects a response to the call that will permit a carfeul selection to be exercised and insure a force already trained to the minute, an army of experts in railway operation.

Recruiting for the regiments and the organization of each force will be directly under the colonel of each regiment. Recruiting machinery of the regular service or the National Guard will be placed at their service and it is hoped the enrollment of the troops will take little time. The recruiting points will be New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Pittsburg, Detroit, Atlanta, San Francisco and Philadelphia.

Officials believe the great railroad brotherhoods will co-operate, throwing the strength of the unions behind the recruiting efforts. The railway companies already are so organized under the council of national defense that their co-operation is assured. The engineers and officials of the lines who offer themselves will be selected in such manner as not to cripple the operating forces of any company.

The decision to send the engineers is understood to have grown out of conferences here between government officials and members of the French and British war missions. One of the greatest problems of the war has been that of maintaining adequate supply lines and the railroads are the vital element of the system that feeds men, shells and food toward the fighting front.

2000 AMERICAN DOCTORS WANTED

Head of Medical Division, Council National Defense, Issues Call for This Number.

Chicago.—England and France are in immediate need of 2000 medical officers and 5000 ambulance attendants, according to a statement issued by Dr. Franklin Martin, head of the medical division of the council of national defense. Dr. Martin's appeal is addressed "to the doctors of America."

Train Bearing French Mission Derailed

Ancola, Ill.—Members of the French mission to the United States were severely shaken up but otherwise uninjured when the special train aboard which they were returning east from their middle western tour was derailed one and one-half miles from here. William Nye, in charge of the United States secret service detail attached to the party, made a thorough investigation of conditions surrounding the wreck and announced as his opinion that it was entirely accidental.

Ex-Slaves Lose Big Wage Case.

Washington.—The Supreme Court dismissed a suit brought by former negro slaves and their heirs to collect $68,072,388 from the government for labor upon crops in the South from from 1865 to 1868. The money was collected as internal revenue taxes on cotton. The claim was made that the money was due for work performed while in a state of involuntary servitude.

To Pass Food Laws.

Washington.—The American people—producer, distributor and individual consumer—are to be put on their good conduct as to food. Duly authorized by congress, the government will urge production on producers; punish extortion by distributors and punish "preventable waste" by consumers. Legislation conferring the most drastic regulatory power is now before Congress. Its passage appears certain. But the power is to be used only where necessary. The people—on probation—are to be left to conform in good spirit.

IF YOU have a constant, dull ache, or sharp pains whenever you bend or twist your back, and the kidney secretions seem disordered, too, don't waste time plastering or rubbing the bad back. RESTORED TO HEALTH.

Mrs. J. A. Shute, 621 Main St., Greenwood, Miss., says "My kidneys became badly disordered and my health was run down. I had severe pains in my back, felt tired and was hardly able to do my housework. My head ached constantly and my body was all bloated up. Sometimes I could hardly see. I tried one remedy after another, but without success until I took Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's rid me of the pain in my back and I gained wonderfully in health and strength. Since then, kidney complaint has not bothered me."

DOESN'T SUFFER NOW.

T. J. Barrow, Box No. 14, Jackson, Ala., says: "I was injured when young and for weeks after was helpless with my back. After that, I had spells of backache that got worse as I grew older, I wasn't able to move when I got up in the morning without suffering severe pains. I could hardly stoop to lace my shoes and couldn't put my hands to the floor. For twenty years I suffered that way. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and got three boxes. I wouldn't take five hundred dollars for the good they did me. I can now get around without pain and I feel and look better than I have for years."

HIGH SHERIFFS OF THE SOUTH NOW CONVINCED

Sheriff Mangum of Atlanta, Ga., Sheriff Anderson of Houston, Tex., Sheriff Lewis of Marion, Ark. and Sheriff Kelley of Odessa, Tex., Come Out With Strong Statements and Tell What Tanlac Has Done for Them.

FOUR leading Sheriffs of the South—in widely separated states—have recently given their unqualified indorsements to Tanlac. The word of men whose records for honesty and unrightness has won and held for them the highest county office in the gift of the people of their own communities, cannot be doubted, for if there is any office that demands a man of unimpeachable integrity, it is the office of Sheriff.

"Tanlac has certainly helped me and I recommend it for the good it has done in my case," said Hon. C. W. Mangum, ex-sheriff of Fulton County, Georgia, who resides in Atlanta and who has been one of the most popular officials in the state, having served three terms as sheriff. "I am seventy years old," he continued, "and have most always been a pretty healthy man until here lately. I have been in a nervous wornout, rundown condition. Most always after eating I would have a full uncomfortable feeling which would last several hours.

"After taking the second bottle of Tanlac the fullness and all the disagreeable symptoms disappeared and my condition is now that of a well man. Tanlac seemed to be just what I needed to put my system in shape and it has toned me right up. Naturally I would recommend it to my friends and I know of fifteen or twenty families that are taking it now on my say-so."

Arkansas Official Testifies.

Hon. Chas. I. Lewis, ex-sheriff of Crittenden County, a merchant and a large plantation owner of Marion, Arkansas, said: "I am convinced from the benefits that my wife and myself and many of our friends have received from Tanlac, that it is without an equal. Mrs. Lewis suffered for ten years. She couldn't digest anything and gas forming in her stomach caused severe pains and shortness of breath. We both started taking Tanlac at the same time and have had the most gratifying results. Mrs. Lewis can now eat and enjoy her food for the first time in many a day. She is not nervous and her sleep is sound and refreshing and she is like a different woman. "I suffered with biliousness and malaria and the two bottles of Tanlac have fixed me up in fine shape."

Ex-Sheriff Anderson's Statement.

"Money couldn't buy the good Tanlac has done me and I gladly recommend it to others for what it has done in my case," said Hon. Archie R. Anderson, ex-sheriff of Harris County, Texas, who was re-elected to this high office seven times and served the people of his country for fifteen years as sheriff. Mr. Anderson was chief of police of the city of Houston, where he resides, for several years, and there is not a better known man in Harris County.

"I was continually belching up undigested food," he continued, "and I would bloat and swell up like I was poisoned and suffered from neuralgic pains of the worst sort and nothing relieved me. I began to feel better after taking the first bottle of Tanlac and have just started on my third and feel like a different man already. I sleep like a log now and can eat any and everything I want without the slightest discomfort afterwards."

Texas Sheriff's Indorsement.

"I needed a general all around building up for the last seven months and Tanlac has done that very thing for me," said Hon. S. A. Kelley, sheriff of Ector County, Texas, who resides at Odessa, Texas, and who is one of the most popular officials in that section of the state. "I'm mighty glad now that I took Tanlac, for I had been in a badly rundown condition for several months. I had no appetite and didn't enjoy what I did eat and at times I suffered terribly with rheumatic pains. My back ached all the time and my liver was so sluggish and out of shape that I had a dull headache continually.

"I have taken only two bottles, but I feel like a different man already. My appetite is fine and what I eat gives me nourishment and strength. The rheumatism is much better and my liver is in good condition. I am relieved of the headaches and feel more active and energetic than I have in months."

There is a Tanlac dealer in your town.—Adv.

The compound is also furnished in flexible sheets which can be cut and shaped as desired, and can be applied to uneven or broken surfaces. This form can be used in making self-contained brass-backed buttons to glue on electric switches already installed and for manufacturers to fit into the hard rubber portions of new switch buttons. The enamel is said to be waterproof and immune to damage from vibration, and may be applied to watch dials and indicating devices of all sorts.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

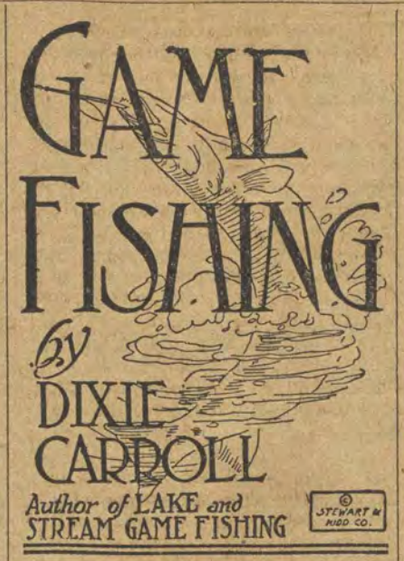
(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director o the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 13

JESUS THE TRUE VINE.

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—I am the vine, ye are the branches.—John 15:5.

This lesson chronologically follows that of last Sunday. Christ had risen with his disciples from the supper table (14:31), and the remainder of his discourse may have occurred in an upper room, or in the courtyard of the house before they left the city, or on the way to the garden of Gethsemane.



I. THE ABIDING LIFE (vv. 1.4). Under the figure of the vine Jesus teaches spiritual truth by natural analogy. The vine is composed of roots, stem, branches, tendrils, and fruit. There is no separate life: the branches are one with the vine. Christ is the head of that body which is the church to its least member. The life lived by the Christian is Christ's life humanized, the purpose of which is fruit bearing. Discipline is in order to fruitfulness. "He (My Father, the vine-dresser) cuts away any branch on me which is not bearing fruit, and cleans every branch which does bear fruit, to make it bear richer fruit" (Moffat's translation). Paul tells us that "no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." The Word is the cleansing agent (17: 17). Verse four suggests a double abiding—we in him, and he in us—the branch depending upon the vine for life, and the vine depending upon the branch for fruit. Jesus had just been talking about his approaching death, and his disciples were full of anxiety. He tells them not to be troubled, and by this figure assures them, that, though he would leave them, he would still be joined to them. Although they had been made clean, they are taught that the only way to keep clean is by "abiding," which is to be continued through the eternal spirit after his decease and ascent to the Father. "It is given to us to hold fellowship with both the root that twines itself about the cross and the tendrils which stretch upward to glory."—A. J. Gordon. So long as we think of ourselves, and not of Christ, as the source of power, we shall miss the secret of fruitfulness.

II. The Fruitful Life (vv. 5-8). If we abide in him we will bring forth much fruit. Note the progression: "fruit," "more fruit," "much fruit." If the branch does not bear fruit it is fit only for fuel (Isa. 27:11). "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (v. 7). Our first fruit is to glorify God (v. 8). The vine does not consume the fruit which it produces, though it does exist for its production, thus glorifying God through its fruit-bearing function. The Bible uses many figures to illustrate the intimate relationship between root and fruit. "Without me," emphasizes Christ, "ye can do nothing." The "word" of verse three is equivalent to the word "I" of verse four. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (v. 3). Our fruit bearing is for God's glory because it is an expression of his grace and power, and it is made possible through our identification with his dear son. Our fruitfulness attests our Christian character. We have not yet attained perfection in our conduct, but we are making progress. Progressive deliverance from the power of sin is counterbalanced by corresponding fruitfulness.

III. The Permanent Life (vv. 9-13). "Fruit," "more fruit," "much fruit." Even as the life of Christ has increasingly manifested itself through the ages, so our individual lives are to increase in the fruitfulness which assimilates them to his character and expresses his graces. As the Father has loved him, so has he loved us, and this love he communicates to those who abide in him. The evidence of our abiding is manifested by our joy in keeping his commandments, just as he delighted in keeping his father's commandments. Obedience and joy are correlated terms. The fuller the obedience the greater the joy. Bushnell said: "Heaven is nothing but the joy of a perfectly harmonized being filled with God and his love." Instead of minute, detailed instructions regarding their conduct, the disciples are here presented with love, the governing principle. Love was to be the one sufficient impulse for both divine and human relationships. Our Lord would have the world know his servants by the fruit they bear.

Three things are mentioned as resulting from the abiding life; power to bear much fruit; transform lives and change circumstances through answered prayer; and fullness of joy—a "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The world with its poor counterfeits has nothing like it to give, but all of these gifts are contingent upon our "abiding" in Christ, the source of every blessing. The personal pronoun suggests peculiarly intimate relationships: "My Father," (vv. 1, 8, 10); "My love," (v. 9); "My disciples," (v 8); "My commandments," (v. 10) "My joy." (v. 11).

GAME FISHING

FLY TACKLE FOR BEGINNER.

My Dear Buck:

You want to get into the fly-casting game, but you feel that the price of an outfit is high. That all depends, old man, on how you go about it. You have heard so much about rods at $25 to $50 and so on, that it makes you feel sick when you think of practicing on such high priced tackle. You expect to give the tackle some hard knocks before you get the hang of the sport and you see your bankroll with a healthy case of shrinkage during the operation.

For a starter there is no need of going deeper into the mint for an outfit than say $15 to $18 and if you do feel like playing her a little higher, $25 makes a limit, and at that you can get a good serviceable outfit that will take you through the season and give you a working practice that will make you a "stay-for-sure" fly-caster.

Select Rod With Care.

Of course every fellow wants as fine an outfit as he can select after he's in the game and has the rough edges worn off. A rod for instance should have the same consideration that one gives to the selection of a shotgun or rifle. It takes the same place in the fishing kit that the gun does in the hunting layout. A fellow pays a good price for a gun, he selects the best he can get and is mighty particular about the drop—the bore and all details, because he depends on his gun to stand him well at the right moment. Therefore as the rod holds the same value to the fisherman, the care in selection and the money put into the rod covers a big vital point in the outfit.

However, for a starter we can select a well made and serviceable line of tackle at a very moderate cost. Here is an outfit, from which a selection can be made at either end, as to price, and it will cover tackle good enough for any beginner. You can buy the $5 rod or the $10 one or go anywhere between, and you will get good value as far as service goes.

Outfit for the Beginner.

Fly rod of split bamboo or steel, $5 to $10.
Reel, single action, click, $1 to $5.
Enameled waterproof silk line, $1.50.
Half dozen 6 foot gut leaders, $1.25.
Two dozen artificial flies, about eight patterns, $3.
Fly book, $1.50.
Wicker creel or basket, $2.
Landing net (folding), $1.25.
Leader box, 25c.

In selecting your rod, make it a 9 to 9½ foot in length, 5 ounce weight, three piece with extra tip, snake guides, German silver ferrules and solid metal reel seat. The rod when together should turn around in the hand with exactly the same droop all around. It should show an even curve without lopping over to one side and have plenty of action when you whip or bend it.

The line should be enameled waterproof silk, level braided size E. Here you can go a little deeper if you wish and get a double tapered line, which being lighter at the ends makes less friction in going through the guides and enables you to shoot out the line for greater distance in your casts; however a level braided line will answer the purpose.

The reel is not as important in fly-casting as in bait-casting, as it is merely used to store surplus line. The featherweight, 60-yard size, weighing 3 ounces, makes a good all round reel, while the automatics are coming into use to a greater extent each season.

Flies You Swear By.

Whip a stream for a few hours trying every fly in your kit without a rise, when the fish are "off," and then pick a fly at the windup when they happen to be "on" and get a well-filled creel and you will play that fly clean across the board, until the same thing happens over again with another fly. One well-known fisherman who carries in his kit an assortment of about a dozen flies, admits that in the past five years he has seldom used other than three flies and he is some fisherman at that, not the porch variety.

For the eight patterns to go with the above outfit let it go at Coachman, Professor, Queen of Waters, Cow Dung, Brown Hackle, Silver Doctor, McGinty and Emerson Hough Bucktail. This last named fly is a new one to most trout fisherman, but it sure is a killer. It isn't a very fancy looking cuss, just an ordinary sort of a fly that don't shine up alongside of the dainty looking feathery affairs, but to those who have used it, it holds the first place in their fly book, because it is certainly some creel filler.

With the above tackle, Buck, you can have many pleasant days on the trout streams and feel that you are learning a game that has added attractions every time you play it.

DIXIE.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! ACTS LIKE DYNAMITE ON LIVER

I Guarantee "Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Give You the Best Liver and Bowel Cleansing You Ever Had—Doesn't Make You Sick!

Stop using calomel! It makes you sick. Don't lose a day's work. If you feel lazy, sluggish, bilious or constipated, listen to me!

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile, crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste. —Adv.

Sydney had been returning from school for several days with a naughty boy, so his mother said: "Sydney, I don't want you to associate with Stanley; I want you to select the nicest little boy in your school to walk home with."

Next day he returned with Stanley again.

"Why didn't you do as I told you, Sydney?" his mother asked.

"Well, mother, I think Stanley's mother must have told him to pick out the nicest little boy in school, because he always picks out me."

Government Issues Warning Against Fly Poisons

Following is an extract from "The Transmission of Disease by Flies," Supplement No. 29 to the Public Health Reports, April, 1916.

"Of other fly poisons mentioned, mention should be made, merely for a purpose of condemnation, of those composed of arsenic. Fatal cases of poisoning of children through the use of such compounds are far too frequent, and owing to the resemblance of arsenical poisoning to summer diarrhea and cholera infantum, it is believed that the cases reported do not, by any means, comprise the total. Arsenical fly-destroying devices must be rated as extremely dangerous, and should never be used, even if other measures are not at hand."

106 fly poisoning cases have been reported by the press within the last three years. As stated above this number is but a fraction of the real number. Protect your children by using the safe, efficient, non-poisonous fly catcher

CLANTON, ALA.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOLUME VI. CLANTON, CHILTON COUNTY, ALA., MAY 17, 1917. NUMBER 7.

CAN'T PRODUCE SURPLUS OVER THE BIG DEMANDS.

Can America Feed Herself, & England, France and Italy and the Submarines?

Many farmers seem to be tenderfooted and fear a big surplus of food and feed crops will be produced which will bear the prices to the extent of being unprofitable. Such an idea is unnecessary and and such a condition is impossible. An overwhelming crop of perishable products may become temporarily congested in some localities in which losses will occur from lack of transportation. America cannot produce enough wheat, corn, beans, peas, hay and meat to bear the present high prices very much. Congested, short transportation facilities and speculation are the greatest dangers to be encountered and the government is already laying plans to facilitate transportation and control speculation.

Can you imagine that America can feed herself, England, France, Italy and the submarines and then have a surplus large enough to bear prices very much? You will have to produce and conserve heroically to keep prices from going higher. Our great reserved supply of food is very low and getting much lower. Our production and cheap prices are an impossibility. It is your opportunity, Mr. Farmer, to do something for your country and to make money for yourself. If you fail to produce enough food and feed for yourself and some to sell, you will fail to help your country and find yourself distressingly in need a year hence. This is no boost or joke but just plain facts.

Staple Crops Safer.

Such crops as can be stored and are not immediately perishable, are safer and the kind that can be best exported to the Allies. The corn crop is the only assurance for bread in the South and should be increased to the limit. The Allies have never been trained to eat corn bread and for that reason wheat will be the principal export for bread purposes. We can only hold down prices of flour in America by producing and eating more corn bread.

Feeding stuff of all kind is a safe crop. An increased production is necessary to feed the meat producing animals to stimulate their numbers and increase the size and weight. Reports from sections of California and New Jersey are that young animals and some old ones are being killed to keep them from starving on account of the scarcity and high prices of feed stuffs.

We do not want to alarm you, but the war situation stands a chance to become serious and we may lose the victory unless every citizen does his utmost on food and feed production.

FILE YOUR COUNTY WARRANTS

County Treasurer, J. Bice, urges all holders of County warrants to file them with him as soon as possible, as he must have the warrants all in hand before bonds can be issued to cover them.

This applies to all classes of warrants, road and bridge claims and otherwise.

All who hold any warrants against county are urged to turn them to Mr. Bice, so that he can arge for payment June 1.

McDONALD WILL REMAIN AT CHILTON HIGH SCHOOL

It is with much pleasure that we learn that arrangements have been made whereby Prof. H. C. McDonald will remain at the head of the Chilton County High School for the next year.

Mr. McDonald has been here two years already, during which time he has made a record which could be scarcely equaled and in no wise surpassed.

The school here could not afford to give him up, and the extra effort which was expended in keeping him is indeed worthy and well spent.

WARRANT HOLDERS ARE TO BE PAID BY JUNE 1

Officials urge holders to Deposit their Warrants with Treasurer Bice.

All parties holding warrants against Chilton County will deposit the same with J. Bice, Treasurer. He will be able to pay the same about June 1st.

DR. HERSEE'S LECTURE

On the 30th inst. Dr. Hersee of the I.B.S.A., under the direction of the Watchtower Tract Society of Brooklyn, N. Y., lectured at the school house near Macedonia to a large audience. His sugject was "The world on Fire"—not a literal fire, but the fire of trouble, of Jehovah's jealousy. "The earth adrift forever," in 1914 the gentle times expired. Since then the nations are tearing each other to pieces, prparing to usher in the kingdom of peace and love. He claimed that the present world war would be followed by a great revolution and anarchy, and the present order of things would be changed. He alluded to the large nations as mountains, the smaller ones and hills. Those hills would melt like wax, Belgium for instance, done melted. But just beyond this imparalleled struggle would appear the silver lining of the cloud, universal peace, the sweet by and by, the beautiful land, the golden age, the great jubilee.

He handled his subject in a masterful manner from a Biblical standpoint. He is a man of fine intelligence and a fine reasoner. It was a treat to hear him.

Tell the whole world these tidings,
Speak of the time of rest that nears.
He who was slain on Calvary
Soon will reign a thousand years.

SHOULTS

We wish to thank the people of this community and others that attended the play at the Shoults School house Saturday night for their presnece and good behavior. Everything was a grand success and we had a large audience. Everybody seemed to enjoy it.

The exercises were opened with a welcome address by little Daisy Latham, next a recitation by Miss Lula Mae Mull, and the main play, a Suffragette Meeting by thirteen characters. The entertainment was closed with two tableaux: one Paul before Agrippa and the other the Dead Hunter and his little girls.

The amount of money we received was quite a large sum more than we expected. We again thank all of those who cooperated with us.

Miss Sarah Snead, her brother and his wife spent Saturday night and Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Walker.

Bro. Littlejohn preached an excellent sermon at his regular appointment Sunday which was enjoyed by all who heard him.

Mr. Leroy Oden, one of our many soldier boys, spent Saturday night and Sunday with his family.

Miss Lomy Mae Mull spent Saturday night with Miss Sula Mae Mull.

We are having some cool weather now and the farmers would like to see it change for the warmer and come a nice rain.

Miss Lettie Walker and Mr. Enoch Latham atended church at Pleasant Hill Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Hicks spent Sunday with Mrs. C. T. Walker.

Miss Lois Collins from Lawley spent Sunday with Misses Ola and Lettie Walker.

HAS PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF SUBJECT

Few Congressmen bring to their committee work a more intimate knowledge of the subject matter than Representative Benjamin L. Fairchild of New York, who has been given a place on the District of Columbia Committee. Mr. Fairchild lived in the city of Washington during his boyhood and early manhood, and received his public school and university education in that city. His knowledge of local affairs will enable him to better represent the best interests of the people of Washington than any man who has been on that committee in recent years. Mr. Fairchild returns to Congress after a 20-year absence, but he has kept pace with the growth of the capital city through frequent visits to practice before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which branch of the law he is a specialist.

OPERATION OF SCHOOLS BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

In same Essentials as Other of Business Enterprises, says Supt. Feagin.

We are at last coming to realize that the administration of schools, city and rural, is a business proposition and that the same business judgment essential to success in other enterprises is not out of place when applied to schools. It is gratifying to observe the readiness with which our new county boards have taken the matter in hand and are applying these business principles. The effect of such action is significant and far reaching and within a few years, Alabama will have a system of efficient rural schools.

In the administration of any business enterprise certain requirements are made of employees serving in the various capacities. The following summaries from resolution passed by several county boards are in harmony with the best educational thought and business methods. Other counties than those to which these quotations are accredited have adopted similar resolutions and they are worth the consideration of any board whose purpose is to obtain the best possible results.

1. All things being equal we will give preference to those teachers who have been especially trained for their work.—Conference of County Boards of Education.

2. All teachers are required to take Reading Circle Work, and teachers failing to do so will be ineligible to contract in the county next year. —Morgan County Board of Education.

3. In employing teachers in the future, preference will be given to those who have done or promise to do some form of extension work.—Crenshaw Cunty Board of Education.

DEATH OF MRS. W. D. MARTIN

The wife of Mr. W. D. Martin was called to higher life Tuesday night, May 8th, at 11 o'clock. Mrs. Martin was a good wife and made many friends while she has been living in this community. She had been confined to her bed for about eight months suffering much agony, but she bore her pains with no murmering.

She was forty years old, and joined the Missionary Baptist church in her 17th year, and has lived a Christian life until her death. Her mother, father and all kindred have gone in before her; she only leaves a husband and a host of friends to live the life she has lived and meet her in that Great Beyond.

She was laid to rest in Collins Chapel cemetery Wednesday evening, May 9th, at 3 o'clock. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. P. Lowery.

PAY FOR MEN IN IN OFFICERS' TRAINING CAMP

The plea made to the House by Representative Cassius C. Dowell of Iowa that a compensation should be provided for the men entering the officers' training camps, is understood to have had much weight with the conferees on the army bill in insisting on a provision to that effect in their report. Mr. Dowell received a large number of communications from young men in his District indicating that it was impossible for them to attend the camps unless they received some pay that could be used in caring for their families. Their salaries, of course stop when they enter the service, and it is impossible for most young men to forego all their income for three months while they are in training. Congressman Dowell was impressed with the idea that the government was likely to lose some of the best available officer material unless some relief was provided, and he immedittely pressed the matter to its successful conclusion.

TRUSTEES MEETING AT COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL.

Report is Given of Details of Busines Transacted at the Session.

The Trustee's Association of Chilton County met at its quarterly session at the Chilton County High School building on Saturday, May 12th, and was called to order by President W. A. Aldredge at 11 o'clock.

After devotional exercises conducted by Rev. M. F. Lett, our County Superintendent, Prof. W. T. Bean suggested that we have a round table duscussion first, on the new compulsory attendance law, and second on the local tax proposition.

Very interesting short talks on the compulsory attendance law were made by Messrs Bean, Peterson, Johnson, E. C. Popwell, J. Popwell, Lett, Aldridge, Roper and others.

The local tax proposition was discussed by Prof. Bean and others, and all the trustees and teachers present pledged themselves to support the tax proposition in case the county commissioners call an election on the question. During his discussion Prof. Bean assured the people that if the tax was levied in the county, the county board of education would guarantee every district in the county seven months free school and teachers enough to take care of the increased attendance under the compulsory law.

On motion by Mr. Lett, the president and secretary, and Prof. Bean were made a permanent program committee for the association.

On motion by Mr. Peterson, the next regular meeting was set for the Second Saturday in August.

On account of all the rural schools being out and the farmers being busy the attendance was not as large as usual, but all of those present were full of enthusiasm, and taken all in all, it was a great meeting. We believe that all present gained in zeal for greater effort and a broader view in educational matters. We feel that it was good to be there, and respectfully urge that every person who possibly can will come to the next meeting.

Respectfully,
W. M. ALDRIDGE, Pres.,
H OWARD ROPER, Sec'y.

OPERATIONS UNDER SELECTIVE DRAFT

Measures for Raising of Military Forces, as Agreed Upon by Congress.

AGE LIMIT, 21 TO 30 YEARS

Male Citizens, and Those Who Have Declared Their Intention to Become Citizens, of That Age, Liable to Draft—Classes That Are Excused.

Washington.—The selective draft under which the new United States army will be raised will be applied under the following provisions of the army bill:

"That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the regular army and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, at the maximum legal strength as by this act provided, shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or if and whenever the president decides that they cannot effectually be so raised or maintained, then by selective draft; and all other forces hereby authorized shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively; but this provision shall not prevent the transfer to any force of training cadres from other forces.

Age Limits Are Fixed.

"Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the president may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act.

"Quotas for the several states, territories and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof and credit shall be given to any state, territory, district, or subdivision thereof for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard on April 1, 1917, or who have since said date entered the military service of the United States from any such state, territory, district, or subdivision, either as members of the regular army or the National Guard.

Provides for Military Law.

"All persons drafted into the service of the United States and all officers herein provided for shall, from the date of said draft or acceptance, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the regular army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and those drafted shall be required to serve for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged, provided that the president is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops, as he may deem necessary, and to employ them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 9 of this act.

"Organizations of the force herein provided for, except the regular army, shall, as far as the interests of the service permit, be composed of men who come, and of officers who are appointed from, the same state or locality."

No person liable to military service will be permitted to escape therefrom by furnishing a substitute or the payment of money, and the payment of bounties for recruits is prohibited.

Men Who Are Exempt.

The persons who will be exempted from military service are thus designated by this provision of the bill:

"That the vice president of the United States, the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, of the United States and of the several states, territories, and the District of Columbia, regular or duly ordained ministers of religion, students who at the time of the approval of this act are preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools, and all persons in the naval service of the United States shall be exempt from the selective draft herein prescribed.

"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel another person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organization; but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the president shall declare to be noncombatant.

Certain Classes to Be Excused.

"The president is hereby authorized to exclude or discharge from said selective draft and from the draft under the second paragraph of section 1 hereof, or to draft for partial military service only from those liable to draft as in this act provided, persons of the following classes: County and municipal officers, customhouse clerks, persons employed by the United States in the transmission of the mails, artificers and workmen employed in the armories, arsenals and navy yards of the United States, and such other persons employed in the service of the United States as the president may designate; pilots, mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency; those in a status with respect to persons degendent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable; and those found to be physically or morally deficient.

"No exemption or exclusion shall continue when a cause therefor no longer exists: Provided, that notwithstanding the exemptions enumerated herein, each state, territory and the District of Columbia shall be required to supply its quota in the proportion that its population bears to the total population of the United States."

How Exemptions Are Determined.

The machinery created for determining of exemptions is thus described by the bill:

"The president is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to create and establish throughout the several states and subdivisions thereof and in the territories and the District of Columbia local boards, and where, in his discretion, practicable and desirable, there shall be created and established one such board in each county or similar subdivision in each state, and one for approximately each 30,000 of population in each city of 30,000 population or over, according to the last census taken or estimates furnished by the bureau of census of the department of commerce. Such boards shall be appointed by the president and shall consist of three or more members, none of whom shall be connected with the military establishment, to be chosen from among the local authorities of such subdivisions or from other citizens residing in the subdivision or area in which the respective boards will have jurisdiction under the rules and regulations prescribed by the president.

Powers of Exempting Boards.

"Such boards shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to review as hereinafter provided, all questions of exemption under this act, and all questions of or claims for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under rules and regulations prescribed by the president, except any and every question or claim for including or excluding or discharging persons or classes of persons from the selective draft under the provisions of this act authorizing the president to exclude or discharge from the selective draft 'persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment, or the effective operation of the military forces, or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency.'

Additional Boards Provided.

"The president is hereby authorized to establish additional boards, one in each federal judicial district of the United States, consisting of such number of citizens, not connected with the military establishment, as the president may determine, who shall be appointed by the president.

"Such district boards shall review on appeal and affirm, modify or reverse any decision of any local board having jurisdiction in the area in which any such district board has jurisdiction under the rules and regulations prescribed by the president. Such district boards shall have exclusive original jurisdiction within their respective areas to hear and determine all questions or claims for including or excluding or discharging persons or classes or persons from the selective draft, under the provisions of this act, not included within the original jurisdiction of such local boards.

"The decisions of such district boards shall be final except that in accordance with such rules and regulations as the president may prescribe, he may affirm, modify, or reverse any such decision."

All persons subject to registration must have attained their twenty-first but not their thirty-first birthday, and such persons as fail to register will be subject to imprisonment for not more than one year. Persons temporarily absent from their legal residence may register by mail under presidential regulations.

Provisions for Volunteers.

The provisions governing voluntary enlistment in the regular army and National Guard follow:

"That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the regular army, except that recruits must be between the ages of eighteen and forty, both inclusive, at the time of their enlistment, and such enlistment, and such enlistments, shall be for the period of the emergency unless sooner discharged.

Plan Grouping by States.

"Provided, That all persons enlisted or drafted under any of the provisions of this act shall as far as practicable be grouped into units by states and the political subdivisions of the same; provided, further, that all persons who have enlisted since April 1, 1917, either in the regular army or in the National Guard, and all persons who have enlisted in the National Guard since June 3, 1916, upon their application, shall be discharged upon the termination of the existing emergency.

"The president may provide for the discharge of any or all enlisted men whose status with respect to dependents renders such discharge advisable, and he may also authorize the employment on any active duty of retired enlisted men of the regular army, either with their rank on the retired list or in higher enlisted grades, and such retired enlisted men shall receive the full pay and allowances of the grades in which they are actively employed.'

Provision for Increased Pay.

The army pay increases are set forth in the following provisions:

"That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the regular army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the regular army; and commencing June 1, 1917, and continuing until the termination of the emergency, all enlisted men of the army of the United States in active service whose base pay does not exceed $24 per month shall receive an increase of $10 per month; those whose base pay is $24, an increase of $8 per month; those whose base pay is $30, $36, or $40, an increase of $6 per month, and those whose base pay is $45 or more, an increase of $5 per month; provided that the increases of pay herein authorized shall not enter into the compilation of continuous service pay."

President's Powers Broadened.

An entirely new provision of the bill as drafted is:

"That the president is authorized to increase or decrease the number of organizations prescribed for the typical brigades, divisions, or army corps of the regular army, and to prescribe such new and different organizations and personnel for army corps, divisions, brigades, regiments, battalions, squadrons, companies, troops, and batteries as the efficiency of the service may require; provided further that the number of organizations in a regiment shall not be increased nor shall the number of regiments be decreased.

The president will officer the regular army and National Guard under existing law, and for the conscript force he is empowered:

"To provide the necessary officers, line and staff, for said force and for organizations of the other forces hereby authorized, or by combining organizations of said other forces, by ordering members of the officers' reserve corps to temporary duty in accordance with the provisions of section 38 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916; by appointment from the regular army, the officers' reserve corps, from those duly qualified and registered pursuant to section 23 of the act of congress approved January 21, 1903 (thirty-second statutes at large, page 775), from the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States who have been graduated from educational institutions at which military instruction is compulsory or from those who have had honorable service in the regular army, the National Guard, or the volunteer forces or from the country at large; by assigning retired officers of the regular army to active duty with such force with their rank on the retired list and the full pay and allowances of their grade; or by the appointment of retired officers and enlisted men, active or retired, of the regular army as commissioned officers in such forces."

WAR TARIFF BILL MAKES EVERYBODY PAY HIS SHARE

$1,800,000,000 To Be Raised in Year by Measure Reported to House.

BOOST DUTIES; NO FREE LIST

Limit on Incomes Reduced to $1,000 for Single Men and $2,000 for Married Men—Taxes for Heirs Are Increased—Tariff Raised 10 Per Cent and Articles on Free List Are Taxed 10 Per Cent.

Washington.—A war revenue bill designed to raise $1,800,000,000 by taxation during the coming year was approved finally in the house ways and means committee Tuesday by unanimous vote and reported to the house Wednesday.

In the meantime the senate finance committee is holding public hearings on the bill, with a view to being ready to report soon after the house acts.

To bring the amount to be raised up to the desired total, the house committee wrote into the bill a flat increase of 10 per cent in all existing tariff duties and 10 per cent duties on all articles now admitted free, all estimated to bring in $240,000,000, this more than doubling the present tariff revenues.

In addition it was decided to make all income-tax increases retroactive, beginning with the present calendar year. Other taxes provided for would become effective upon the signing of the bill.

The income-tax increases, applying to both personal and corporation incomes, are designed to produce $533,000,000 more than the present income-tax receipts.

Income and Profits.

Most of the new revenue will come from the income, excess profits, and inheritance taxes and additional tariff duties, but the levies of the bill would reach into many other sources.

Letter mail rates would be increased from two to three cents an ounce, and postal cards from one to two cents, while $19,000,000 would be added to charges against newspapers under a new system based upon the present parcel-post zones.

Internal-revenue taxes upon liquor and tobacco would be materially increased, and there would be taxes on amusements, and stamp taxes of wide scope.

Increase in Supertaxes.

The war income tax section would double the present normal tax of 2 per cent on individuals and 3 per cent on corporations. It would lower the exemption of individual incomes from $4,000 to $2,000 in the case of married persons and from $3,000 to $1,000 for the unmarried.

In addition, beginning with incomes of $5,000, graduated supertaxes would be imposed, in addition to the normal 4 per cent, ranging up to 33 per cent on all incomes over $500,000 a year.

The surtax schedule follows:

Income.	Tax.
From $5,000 to $7,500	1 per cent
From $7,500 to $10,000	2 per cent
From $10,000 to $12,500	3 per cent
From $12,500 to $15,000	4 per cent
From $15,000 to $20,000	5 per cent
From $20,000 to $40,000	6 per cent
From $40,000 to $60,000	8 per cent
From $60,000 to $80,000	11 per cent
From $80,000 to $100,000	14 per cent
From $100,000 to $150,000	17 per cent
From $150,000 to $200,000	20 per cent
From $200,000 to $250,000	24 per cent
From $250,000 to $300,000	27 per cent
From $300,000 to $500,000	30 per cent
On all exceeding $500,000	33 per cent

The provisions requiring the normal tax of individuals to be deducted and withheld at the source of income would not apply to the new normal tax prescribed in this bill until after January 1, 1918, and thereafter only to incomes exceeding $3,000.

Tax on Inheritance.

In addition to the inheritance tax now in force, the bill imposes a tax equal to the following percentages of its value upon the transfer of each net estate:

$50,000	One-half of 1 per cent
$50,000 to $150,000	1 per cent
$150,000 to $250,000	1½ per cent
$250,000 to $450,000	2 per cent
$450,000 to $1,000,000	2½ per cent
$1,000,000 to $2,000,000	3 per cent
$2,000,000 to $3,000,000	3½ per cent
$3,000,000 to $4,000,000	4 per cent
$4,000,000 to $5,000,000	4½ per cent
$5,000,000 to $8,000,000	5 per cent
$8,000,000 to $11,000,000	7 per cent
$11,000,000 to $15,000,000	10 per cent
$15,000,000 and over	15 per cent

The exemption is lowered from $50,000 to $25,000 and a new tax of 1 per cent levied on estates between $25,000 and $50,000.

The bill proposes to bring in $200,000,000 by doubling the present 8 per cent tax on excess profits.

On distilled spirits the present tax of $1.10 per gallon is doubled; to the rectifiers' tax 15 cents a gallon is added, and fermented liquors are assessed $2.75 per barrel instead of $1.50.

Tobacco Tax Doubled.

The tobacco tax is doubled, except as to cigars, which are graduated from 50 cents to $10 a thousand, according to retail value. Cigarettes, made in or imported into the United States, would be taxed an additional $1.28 per 1,000 if weighing less than three pounds per 1,000, and $3. 1,000 if more than three pounds.

Newspapers would be required pay 5 per cent on all advertising collections.

The second-class postage section says:

"After June 1 next the zone system applicable to parcel post shall apply to second-class mail matter, with rates of postage two cents a pound or fraction when for delivery within the first or second zones, four cents within fourth or fifth, five cents within sixth or seventh, and six cents for delivery within the eighth zone.

"It is provided, however, that postage on daily newspapers when deposited in a letter carrier office for delivery by its carriers shall be the same as at present; copies now entitled to free circulation in the mails within the county of publication shall retain that privilege, and the postmaster general may require publishers to separate for zones in mailing.

"Newspapers mailed to subscribers from an office other than that of publication shall pay the same rate as if mailed from its office.

"Religious, educational, agricultural, labor or fraternal publications, issued without profit, shall pay 1½ cents per pound irrespective of zones."

Theaters and Clubs.

The amusement tax is one cent for each ten cents or fraction paid for admission, applying to charges remitted in the cases of persons admitted free except bona-fide employees. Places where the maximum charge for admission is five cents or where the proceeds of the place admitted to are for religious or charitable purposes are exempt.

Clubs would be taxed 10 per cent of dues or membership fees (except initiation fees), the members individually to pay the tax. This is effective June 1, and the club receiving the payments or fees is required to collect the tax from the person so admitted and make the returns.

NEW AND ADDITIONAL TAXES PROPOSED IN $1,800,000,000 WAR REVENUE BILL

These figures are those of the house bill. When the measure goes to the senate it will be subject to amendment and doubtless in many cases there will be revision. The senate finance committee will hold hearings at which arguments and objections may be presented.

SYNOPSIS.

Adventurous Jerry Carson embarks in search of hidden treasure with the promise of Leontine Walcott to be his wife on his return. Her father favors Sebastian Navarre. Jerry's ship is burned, he is reported lost. Sebastian presses his attentions. Jerry suddenly turns up to confront charges of the Navarres against him. In a struggle for a forged paper Diego Navarre is killed and Jerry is convicted of the murder. He escapes, and finds the treasure and a wonderful chemical pellet. Leontine is forced to marry Sebastian. On the honeymoon, he attacks her in a rage. Suddenly he is confronted by a weird apparition. Ravengar forces a confession from Louie. Sebastian attempts to get it. An earthquake occurs; in the excitement Red Finn steals the confession and flees. He appears in New York as Romanoff and enlists the aid of Madame Bianca. Leontine confronts her husband in the gambling house. The Shadow battles for her and she escapes with the confession. One-Lamp Louie follows her and takes the paper from her. The Shadow saves Navarre from robbery. Romanoff attempts to kidnap Sebastian and Leontine, but Ravengar appears to thwart them. Bianca and her thugs are puzzled by Ravengar's repeated escapes and returns to his cellar prison.

Seventh Episode.

The Awakening.

Suddenly Bianca turned on Romanoff and his companions and ordered them from the cellar. Nothing loath to escape the anger of their employer, they filed away. Bianca closed the door behind them and seated herself upon the couch at Ravengar's side.

"Why don't you like me?" she asked.

Ravengar rose to his feet, with the suspicion of a mocking smile on his face.

"Indeed, madame, in spite of my imprisonment here I have conceived the highest respect for my jailor," he answered.

Bianca turned furiously upon him.

"It isn't often that I have practically told a man that I am interested in him," she cried. "This is the second time that I have—I have admitted it to you."

Ravengar looked at her so searchingly that Bianca, even in her angry humiliation, felt baffled.

She flung herself from the cellar and bolted the door on the outside. Then she went up to her boudoir and threw herself upon the lounge in an agony of humiliation.

Suddenly, as she raised her eyes, she saw in the far corner of the room the same mysterious vision as before. There were the two flaming eyes, the death-white hands; and, as she watched, she saw the hands trace, in phosphorescent letters upon the air, the message:

"If you would win Ravengar's love, obtain from Sebastian Navarre a confession of the forgery which blackens the name of a dead man."

She sprang to her feet and ran across the room. The writing faded out. The corner was empty.

She recoiled in terror. The same warning as before, and obviously a spirit warning! What did it mean?

She resolved to get the confession from Sebastian.

A ring! Woo Lee stood in the doorway. He indicated that a visitor stood in the hall.

"All right. I'll see him," said Bianca.

To her amazement, almost horror, Sebastian himself came into the room. He looked at her for a moment. Then he bowed and came forward, his hand answering Bianca's own.

"I'm sorry that business matter didn't go through," he said. "I might have bought that so-called confession from you. Of course it was blackmail, but my wife was making trouble for me."

"Wives generally do make trouble," said Bianca, with the wit of her kind. "Won't you sit down, Senor Navarre?"

He took his seat beside her. "I don't know what happened to that wretched paper," he continued, "but my wife lost it or had it stolen. Anyway, that's all over now, and this time I haven't come on business."

"On what, then?" asked Bianca very alluringly.

"Pleasure," answered Sebastian. "To see you. Bianca, I—"

Bianca leaned toward him, smiling; Bianca's face was very near his own. He clasped her in his arms and their lips met.

The charms of Bianca had supplanted the desirability for Leontine in Sebastian's mind. The woman whom he had married under so strange a compact, that she was to be his wife in name, whom he had pursued so relentlessly, now faded out of the man's mind. To her relief, almost gratitude, Leontine found that Sebastian cared for her no longer.

And this meant happiness to her. Since the death of her lover of long ago, Jerry Carson, in the convict camp, she had felt incapable of loving. Sebastian's new indifference enabled her to face life with tranquillity again. She went into society, with Sebastian's equal indifference; and that was how she found herself with Mr. Bob Hamilton on the grounds of the Dirigible club one bright spring afternoon.

They motored out together, with Sebastian's approval. Mr. Hamilton was a young balloon enthusiast; he was to fly in the long-distance race the following week.

Bob turned to Leontine. "I am thinking of asking a very daring request, Mrs. Navarre," he said.

"Don't be afraid," replied Leontine, laughing.

"You know each balloon is to carry a pilot and passenger. The passenger who was to have accompanied me—my sister-in-law, backed out yesterday. How would you like to come, Mrs. Navarre?"

"I should love it," said Leontine enthusiastically.

"May we regard it as settled," persisted Bob.

"If my husband doesn't object," said Leontine. "Oh, no, I don't believe he will."

"Why, there is Senor Navarre!" exclaimed Bob Hamilton suddenly turning. Following his look, Leontine perceived her husband, accompanying a flashily dressed woman of singular beauty—in fact, Bianca.

Sebastian had accepted Bianca's invitation to motor out to the grounds, in spite of the knowledge that his wife would be there. His infatuation for Bianca had grown steadily. Now, seeing himself observed, he left her and came to Leontine rather sullenly.

"Sebastian, Mr. Hamilton wants me to be his passenger in the balloon flight next week," said Leontine. "Shall I?"

"By all means, if you wish," answered Sebastian, mentally computing the chances of an accident.

She looked about her while the two men engaged in conversation. Her eyes fell upon a sportily clothed man of middle age, who, leaning against a rope, was watching the grounds.

Leontine started. She recognized the man. It was the little crook, Louis Lamb, or One-Lamp Louie.

Another man had recognized One-Lamp Louie. This was Avery, Mr. Hamilton's assistant in the shed, a sinister-looking individual—in fact, one of those typical hangers-on of all athletic and sports meetings. He stared at Louie in astonishment; then he flung the fag of his cigarette away and went up to him.

"Hello, One-Lamp!" he said easily. "Don't you remember your old pal Avery who did time with you three years ago?"

Louie gazed at him dully. "I never saw you in my life before," he answered.

And while Avery, completely taken aback, stared at him, Louie sauntered away through the thinning crowds in the direction of the roadhouse.

Since Louie had received the blow on the head from a falling beam in the cabaret fire, he had had no memories whatever of his past life.

Another man upon the grounds had recognized Louie. This was Romanoff, Bianca's chief accomplice. Romanoff knew all about Louie.

He followed Louie to the roadhouse and waited while Louie tossed down a glass of whisky. The little crook came out and glanced cautiously about him. and then made his way toward a secluded spot in the bushes near by.

Romanoff crept stealthily after him. He saw Louie leaning against a tree, counting out his bills. Romanoff drew a revolver from his pocket and sprang.

The butt descended on Louie's head. With a fearful cry Louie tumbled prostrate among the trees. Romanoff snatched the wallet from his hand and disappeared through the undergrowth.

A moment later the car containing Leontine and Bob Hamilton came from the grounds.

"What was that?" exclaimed Leontine, laying her hand on her companion's arm.

Bob stopped the car and sprang into the road. A faint moaning was heard among the bushes at one side. He pushed the overhanging shrubs apart and came upon Louie, half-conscious, with a gaping wound in his head. Looking up, he saw that Leontine had followed him.

"Why, it's—it's Louis Lamb!" exclaimed Leontine, suddenly remembering the little man's name.

"He must have been slugged. We'd better take him to a hospital," suggested Bob.

"No!" cried Leontine. "Take him to my home."

"But, Mrs. Navarre—" protested Bob.

"I mean just that, Mr. Hamilton," said Leontine.

Sebastian, returning later in the afternoon, was vaguely conscious of a stir in the apartment. Entering Leontine's boudoir, he discovered his wife seated beside the couch on which lay the figure of a man.

"Nothing happened to Hamilton?" he asked, hurrying forward.

The look in his wife's eyes frightened him. He advanced to the side of the couch. To his horror he found himself looking again into the face of his companion of the forgery, the man whom he had last seen at White's Village, in western Canada.

As he stood staring at Louie in mingled terror and rage he saw that Louie's eyes were open. And there was a look of recognition in them.

Leontine had left the room. Sebastian and Louie looked at each other. Then Louie spoke.

"I know you, Sebastian Navarre," he said. "You paid me to forge the paper which Jerry Carson was supposed to have given you in return for that money you never lent him."

Sebastian quivered, as if he were about to spring at Louie's throat.

He could not know that the stunning blow on the head had restored Louie's memory as it had been before he received the first blow from the falling beam at the cabaret fire.

Louis Lamb rose to his feet and staggered toward him, pushing out weakly with his hands.

"Lemme go!" he said, looking at Sebastian sourly. "Take your hands off me. You got no right to stop me."

He pushed past him and encountered Leontine in the doorway. She tried to stop him, but Louie evaded her and passed into the hall. Leontine and Sebastian, looking at each other, heard his lumbering footsteps pass along the floor, heard the door open and close. Louie was gone. And still they looked into each other's eyes.

"Did you hear what that fellow said?" Sebastian asked.

Leontine nodded quietly.

"What did he mean? Who is he? I don't remember seeing him before? He is lying, anyway."

"I don't believe it," she returned.

"Leontine," he said, "I guess we have made a mistake over our marriage. I was to blame. Will you agree to divorce me if I give you the opportunity?"

Leontine raised her head, and it was a long time before she answered him.

"You shall have your divorce," she said, "when you have confessed your crime and cleared Jerry Carson's name."

"So you did recognize me this morning, eh?"

One-Lamp Louie looked at Avery, Bob Hamilton's assistant, in astonishment.

"I don't know what you mean," he answered. "I never saw you this morning."

"What do you mean, One-Lamp? Weren't you on these grounds this morning, and didn't I speak to you, and didn't you tell me that you'd never seen me before?"

"I dunno," said Louie weakly. "I been sick. Somebody slugged me and picked my pocket. I can't remember much. I want to talk to you on business, Avery."

"I heard Mrs. Navarre saying that she was going up with your boss, Bob Hamilton."

"Maybe she is. Maybe she ain't. What business is it of yours?"

"Suppose Mr. Hamilton was taken sick. Wouldn't you go up with her then?"

"Maybe I would. Why?"

"And suppose there was an accident up aloft, what would happen?" persisted Louie. "Suppose a flare bomb was to be set off wrong and the balloon got burned—you'd have about half a minute to get away in your parachute, wouldn't you?"

"He Came Into My Room, Knocked Me Down, Gagged Me and Tied Me to the Bedpost!"

"What of it?"

"You couldn't both get away in the parachute? She'd croak, wouldn't she? Croak up there in the burning balloon, and then down she'd come—phut—like a rocket."

"Say, what are you driving at?" demaided Avery, rising to his feet and looking fixedly at Louie.

Louie extracted a wallet from his pocket.

"Fifteen hundred, and the same afterward," he said. "Now, am I talking sense, Avery?"

"I guess so," muttered the pilot, picking up the bills. "Sit down, One-Lamp. Tell me what the meaning of the game is and just what you want me to do."

* * * * * * *

At midnight Sebastian's telephone rang. Sebastian, who was brooding in his library, took down the receiver irritably. "Well?" he demanded.

"This is your friend, One-Lamp Louie," answered the voice.

"You—you—" sputtered Sebastian.

"Keep calm, old pal. I said 'your friend.' I guess she's got it on us all right, and she'll put it across unless we do something. Ever hear of her friend, Bob Hamilton?"

"Confound you, what do you want?"

"Have your friend Bob to lunch before you start for the ground. If he gets taken sick at your house everything will come out all right. Hey! Cut out the questions. I'll attend to the rest of the business. Good-by."

* * * * * * *

Bob Hamilton was in high spirits at the luncheon, and Sebastian showed all the graciousness of which he was capable.

Navarre poured out two liquor glasses of cordial. Bob raised his toward Leontine.

"To a successful flight, madame," he said smiling.

"Queer taste to that stuff," said Bob. "Pretty strong, though."

"It is strong," said Sebastian smiling. "My friend must have been joking when he told me it was like light wine. Well, I think I hear the auto at the door."

He went out. Leontine and Bob were together. The girl looked in astonishment at Bob's flushed face.

"I guess we'd better be—starting," said Bob, with something of an effort. He was watching her in perplexity. "Come along," he said offering her his arm. Only he offered it to space, beside her. He put his hand to his head.

"I guesh that cordial—pretty shtrong shtuff," said Bob.

"Mr. Hamilton! What is the matter?" asked Leontine, as he swayed and clutched at the table.

Sebastian appeared in the doorway, cool and suave as before. "We're ready," he said. "Ready, Leontine? Mr. Hamilton? Why—aren't you feeling well?"

"I'm all right," muttered Bob thickly. "Pretty—shtrong shtuff—"

He tumbled forward on the floor.

"Telephone the doctor! Quick!" insisted Leontine.

Sebastian ran to the telephone in the hall. Leontine kneeled beside Bob Hamilton, who opened his eyes and looked at her in a dazed way.

"Oh, what is the matter?" she cried.

"Wine—drugged," said Bob thickly. "Not old Sebastian's fault. Butler bribed, perhaps. Rivals hate my balloon."

"Never mind the balloon, Mr. Hamilton," cried Leontine, half crying.

Bob struggled up on the lounge. Outside Leontine could hear Sebastian telephoning. And she knew instinctively that he had drugged the cordial.

"Listen," muttered Bob, sitting up. "If I can't go—you must go with my man Avery. Promise me, Madame Navarre."

"Oh, I can't go up—I'm not thinking of that at all," said Leontine.

"You must. You must start at once. Promise me," persisted Bob.

"I promise, then," said Leontine.

"I'm all right now," said Bob, trying to rise as Sebastian came in. "I'm going—take you."

"Nonsense," said Sebastian, hurrying forward. "We must take care of you until you are better, Mr. Hamilton."

Bob leaned against the lounge and shook his head. "No. Got to go up in the balloon," he said.

At that moment the doctor entered. He was a Spaniard, a crony of Sebastian's, and Leontine knew that she would get no help from him. He made a swift examination of the patient.

"What is it?" Sebastian asked.

"I should say," said the doctor suavely, "that this gentleman has been dining not wisely, but too well."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Leontine angrily. "Mr. Hamilton has been drugged."

The doctor looked at her quizzically. "Of that, madame, you are the only possible judge," he answered.

She looked at Sebastian defiantly. He opened his mouth as if to speak; then turned away and shrugged his shoulders again.

With some show of feeling he assisted Bob into the auto and watched it roll away.

* * * * * * *

Leontine had a curious sense of personal recognition when she met Avery at the grounds.

They were a little late, for the other balloons were ready to begin the flight. A long line of the giant spheres filled the grounds, and an immense crowd pressed and jostled about them.

Suddenly Leontine saw a sight which sent a shiver through her. Not far away among the crowd, were her husband and the woman Bianca.

Then Leontine perceived another thing which added to her disquietude. Approaching her car was the little crook Louie, the man whom she had carried to her home after the attack on him. He was coming straight toward her, and as Avery descended to test the ropes he saw Louie approach him and begin to speak to him.

Leontine's mind went drifting off, as was its wont, to the memories of Jerry in far-away Argentina, and she did not see the look of astonishment upon One-Lamp's face as he accosted Avery.

The mechanician, smiling grimly, climbed back into the car. At that moment Sebastian approached. He had decided to speak with Leontine.

"Leontine—" he began.

The girl saw remorse upon his face. Her husband seemed torn by some internal struggle. "Leontine," he began again, "if you decide not to go—"

Then Leontine saw Bianca, beautiful, alluring, smiling at Sebastian from where she stood among the crowd. The look of remorse disappeared from Sebastian's face.

"This Will Carry You Down Safely," He Said.

He bent toward her and kissed her. "I hope you'll have a pleasant trip," he said.

"Stand clear!" shouted the pilot.

Men were releasing all the ropes of the balloons simultaneously. The great gas spheres strained upward.

At that moment a man, hatless, coatless, and disheveled, came running out of the shed in which Hamilton's balloon had been housed. He rushed up to One-Lamp Louie and gibbered excitedly, pointing to where the balloon was already shooting upward into the sky, Louie stared at him in consternation.

"Avery?" he yelled, above the din of the applauding multitude. "Who—who—who's the man, your double, in the car?"

Avery, shaking with excitement, answered in Louie's ear:

"I don't know. I never saw him before. He came into my room an hour ago, knocked me down, gagged me, and tied me to the bedpost. I've only just worked free."

Louie gripped his arm fiercely.

"You've busted everything!" he screamed. "You've cooked my goose and yours too. Gimme back that money!"

"Well, I guess not," answered Avery with a grin. "It's all right, partner."

"What d'yer mean?"

"The flare bomb's hidden in the basket of the car, and it's set to go off at halfpast eight o'clock this evening. Ain't that what you wanted, One Lamp?"

* * * * * * *

Leontine felt no fear as the earth seemed to slip away beneath her. She leaned dreamily over the edge of the basket and watched the crowds grow smaller, until the black sea of heads beneath was only a blur.

She fell to watching her silent companion, who busied himself with his anemometer and hygrometer. Already, under his guidance, Avery's balloon had taken the lead, and the rest tapered off in a straggling line, the last disappearing in the mists of the horizon.

Slowly the sun dipped into the west. The fleet of balloons had vanished in the distance. They were high above the clouds now, floating in a transparent medium of palest blue. The gorgeous dying orb dipped on the horizon.

It disappeared in a veil of reddening clouds. These faded. The stars appeared. The moon shone, hard and brilliant, overhead. Night fell.

Leontine was aware that her companion was looking at her.

"Are you happier?" he asked gently.

Two tears stole down Leontine's cheeks. She could not answer him. Again the thought of the mysterious Ravengar came to her.

Who was this Ravengar? And who was this Avery?

Suddenly Leontine saw a look of horror in her companion's eyes. He was looking at the bottom of the car. Leontine perceived a small wisp of smoke coiling up among the basket-work.

Instantly the man had leaped forward to where a small fire extinguisher hung. He snatched it up, inverted it, and directed a steady stream from the nozzle upon the blaze. Leontine heard a sputtering sound. The smoke disappeared, to reappear in half a dozen other places. The whole bottom of the car was smoldering, and the fluid from the fire extinguisher seemed to have no effect upon it, unless to intensify the conflagration.

A little spurt of fire was seen. It seemed to lean into existence. It ran along the bottom of the basket. The fire extinguisher was empty.

The man in the car cast a frenzied look upward at the great balloon, its silken coat filled with inflammable hydrogen gas. Already the gas was expanding under the influence of the heat, and the balloon was shooting upward with prodigious rapidity.

"There's going to be an explosion in 15 seconds," said Leontine's companion, dragging the parachute from its rest. He thrust the handle into her hands. "This will carry you down safely," he said. "Don't let go. Understand me? Don't let go. Now, jump." And he drew her toward the edge of the car.

The basket was ablaze from end to end. Yet Leontine hesitated. It was fearful, standing there in the midst of the circling flames and looking down into those fleecy clouds beneath.

"Jump!" cried the man, and forced her over the car's edge.

Leontine fell into space. As she did so the other pulled the cord that opened the valve. The great balloon shot downward, passing her. Then she fell swiftly, and the parachute passed the balloon in turn. The dizzy rush downward turned Leontine faint. With all the intensity of which she was capable, she clung to the parachute handle. Then the swift descent ceased as the wind opened the parachute. She was falling earthward softly, as a feather might fall. Above her head was the black outline of the burning balloon. And standing in the midst of the flames Leontine saw her companion.

The parachute plunged down. The sea rushed up to meet it. Leontine felt the dazing shock of the icy water. She felt the surface close above her head. Then the parachute bobbed up like a cork, and, faint and dizzy, the girl found herself afloat on the waves, the parachute and cork supports holding her buoyantly.

Above her head she saw the fiery mass that hurtled downward.

As she watched, horror-stricken, she saw a column of flame shoot upward. For one moment the lurid light played about the balloon, gilding it against the sky. Silhouetted beneath the sphere she saw the figure of the pilot, standing bareheaded, a tiny outline that disappeared as, with a terrific explosion, the balloon burst and vanished.

Then something came falling from above. It was the long rope that hung from the bottom of the balloon. Leontine's companion was clinging to it. He had jumped for it at the moment when the explosion occurred. Now, from a height of 200 feet, he fell, plunging into the waves.

Leontine cried out in horror as he fell into the water, not a dozen paces from where she floated. She sprang to her feet, while the parachute tipped dangerously, and straddled the floats, peering downward with agonized gaze into the water.

Then the waves cast up their booty. She saw the upturned face of the man staring at her through the green, lapping crests of the ocean. She dragged him, with an almost superhuman effort, upon the float beside her.

The mustache which had hidden the upper lip had come loose from the flesh. It was a disguise. As Leontine stared into the pilot's face he opened his eyes and smiled at her.

"Will this war make a President of the United States?" asks the Philadelphia Ledger. We cannot say. But we are willing to make a small wager that this war will unmake at least one Secretary of the Navy.

"Cotton" Tom Heflin says build ships of cotton and thereby get by the submarine. Before we can do that, he should give us some way to get by the boll weevil with cotton. This cold weather is giving the boll weevil the down-hill pull on us.

According to authentic reports, Col. Roosevelt's volunteer army now numbers 180,000 men, including such notables as Senator Borah of Idaho, James A Garfield and Henry L. Stimson, who were members of the Roosevelt cabinet, Robert Bacon, former Ambassodor to France, and Prof. Hiram Bingham of Yale, the noted explorer. The Colonel has perfected arrangements that the entire force sould be mobilized in six weeks, and its first units started on the way to France for intensive training.

We have received a copy of that most useful and handy little volume of 48 pages, Booklet 272 "Roster of the Sixty-Fifth Congress of the United States," published by the American protectove tariff league, New York, and mailed with the compliments of the league to all of its connections. The Roster is a convenience which should be on every man's desk. It contains a full list of the Senators and Representatives of the Sixty-Fifth Congress, and the Congressional Tariff Committees. The large number of letters from congressmen and business men expressing unabated interest in protection as the right American policy in peace or in war are very interesting.

A MAN'S MAN

The finest example of leadership which has been exhibited to this country since the Civil War was contained in the news that Theodore Roosevelt, without the blare of a trumphet or the boom of a drum, has an army of 200,000 men, the flower of the country, at his beck and call, eager and willing to take the measure of the Huns on the battleground of Europe. This is better than the entire administration with its flamboyant posters, spread eagle oratory, appeals to patriotism, bands, banners, and bravos has been able to accomplish since the troops were sent to the Mexican Border. And the reason for it is plain: Roosevelt follows speech with immediate action. He says what he means and means what he says. He goes not around but over obstacles. He is a man's man. It is a judgment on the country for its action last November that we have not more such men as Theodore Roosevelt to handle a situation the gravity of which we are only beginning to appreciate.

GUARD FOREIGN RECRUITING

Washington, May 16.—While Congressman Louis W. Fairfield of Indiana was not opposed to the recent measure that passed the House authorizing foreign recruiting officers to work in this country, he considered it should have contained a selective provision similar to that embodied in the conscription act. Mr. Fairfield pointed out that the men employed in the sugar beet fields of the West are almost wholly foreign labor, many of whom have not yet been naturalized. Furthermore, Mr. Fairfield thinks that men who have been negligent in taking out their first papers should no tbe made liable to foreign military service when they are loyal at heart to this country and may have participated in municipal, state and national affairs. "The bill should be so explicit" said Representative Fairfield, "that these people, who are American at heart and who are perfectly willing to fight under the flag, should be amply protected."

ANOTHER TUNE LATER

The New York World estimates the banks of the country have saved the government at least $5,000,000 by their free service in helping to place the first enstallment of what Mr. McAdoo has christened the Liberty Loan. The war bases its estimate upon the commissions which were paid to Jay Cooke for his services in floating the bonds of the Civil War period; and the inevitable deduction is that [illegible] have done a highly patriot[illegible] have. But we [illegible]ny recogni[illegible] powers at [illegible]ry, there [illegible] of the country will continue to be looked upon as potential criminals to be hedged about with all sorts of ministerial restrictions such as John Skelton Williams is a past master of drawing.

NO STIGMA ON CONSCRIPTS

Congressman William J. Graham of Illinois is of the opinion that we ought to prevent in this country the disgraceful scenes that have too frequently attended the so-called volunteering in other countries. When the army bill was under consideration in the House, Mr. Graham offered an amendment making it unlawful to speak or publish anything in regard to a conscripted soldier "intending to bring such person into public disrepute or disgrace." "There ought not to be any stigma attached to persons who go into the military service under this act," declared Mr. Graham, "and we should so provide in the law"

Upon a vivi voce vote the Speaker ruled his amendment was lost, but Mr. Graham refrained from following the lead of certain other members and did not consume the time of the House by demanding a roll call.

REAL REASON FOR DELAY

There has been much criticism of the delay in Congress in bringing the war legislation to a conclusion. Especially has this criticism been directed against the committee on conference which dealt with the conscription bill; and its members have been accused of hampering the President in his plans for the war. This is unjust. The committee has had no means of knowing what the President's plans for the war may be. He did not tell the committee, he did not tell congress, he did not tell the country. He kept his own counsel and expected everyone else to do as he bade them He cannot justly complain if Congressmen have not moved as he would have them. In fact, if he finds congress slow motioned, he should know the reason. It is because there is no recognized channel thru which the opinions of the President and the deliberations of Congress can be coordinated and made effective. Such a channel would be offered by the joint committee on the conduct of the war which the Weeks-Madden resolution calls for. The President has shown reluctance to have such a committee named and he has thusfar been unable to restrain Congress from creating such a committee. He now finds that it is easier to influence congress not to do something—such as the force of inertia, political as well as physical—than it is to influence Congress to do something. It would only help procure the joint committee, he would find somewhat paradoxically, that he would be able to have many things done easily that now advance with great difficulty.

SUGAR CANE FOR SIRUP ON SOUTHERN FARMS.

Detailed Discussion of Problem Affecting the Industry are Published in Bulletin.

Washington, D. C.—The culture of sugar cane for sirup production is essentially a small farm industry. Limited areas only are devoted to it on each farm, but nevertheless cane syrup is an abundant article of food and a source of considerable income to the farmers of the gulf states. That the yields could be considerably increased, however, is pointed out in Department Bullein 486, a new publication of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The cost of producing syrup on the south Georgia farms under the conditions which prevailed in 1914, indicated that at that time the price of sugar cane sirup in bulk must be over twenty-three cents a gallon to allow the producer a profit. However, production costs have increased slightly since that date. In recent years the price of syrup in the general market has fluctuated widely. In the fall of 1914 it was abnormally low; a year later it advanced sharply to 40 cents per gallon and more, and recent advances in the price of sugar have been followed by higher prices for syrup.

The margin between cost of production and the market price can be supplanted, the bulletin points out, by a better utilization of the by-products. Of these there are three: (1) The leaves and tops (2) the bagasse (pomace or mash) and (3) the skimmings. With the practices prevailing at present very little use is made of any of these three.

When fresh the tops of the cane weigh approximately from three to four tons per acre. If left exposed, this material soon becomes worthless for feed. Recent eyperiments, however, have shown that the tops may be siloed successfully and that in nutritive value silage of this character is not greatly inferior to silage from whole corn. Moreover, in most of the cane sirup sections there is a shortage of available roughage for winter feeding, thus giving a value to such silage above that represented by its nutritive constituents, and the additional manure resulting from the feeding of these tops is an important consideration. The systems of farming in vogue in the sugar districts tend to deplete the soil of its humus so that the value of manure in these regions is unusually high. For these reasons, it seems that the siloing of sugar cane tops will more than repay the farmer for the labor of filling the silo. In this connection the bulletin already mentioned points out that it is essential to trampt the tops very thoroughly in the silo.

The bagasse—cane from which the juice has been extracted—also has some feeding value while fresh, but it is far lower than that of tops. In the open air it ferments very quickly. Whether or not it can be made into silage with profit is a subject for further tests. In small mills, such as those ordinarily used by the sirup producer, the juice is extracted too incompletely for the bagasse to be used for fuel, and in many cases farmers simply cart it off to some waste land where it will be out of the way. A more profitable disposal of the material is to use it as litter to mix with the barnyard manure. When rotted for about a year in this form it may be applied to potato land or some other lands not injured by fresh applications of manure. In this way needed humus may be supplied cheaply to the soil.

Like the bagasse, the skimmings are now largely wasted on most farms. With proper precautions it is believed that the clear portion of these could be used for sirup making without injuring the quality of the product. Another method is to feed the skimmings while fresh to hogs, or, if suitable apparatus is at hand, they may be boiled down to a thick molasses-like feed which is available for the stock at any time of the year and is greatly relinished.

The cost of producing cane for sirup is enhanced by the fact that the crop can be grown profitably on good ground. In the case of the farmer however who grows only a small acreage, it is impossible to select for the cane crop an area which has been favorably treated in previous years. A very good practice is to precede the cane crop with a crop of corn and cow peas, plowing the latter under. A four-year rotation now practiced in many sections consists of two successive years of corn and cow peas, plowing under the peas each time, then two years of cane. Very good results are also obtained from manuring a field heavily for sweet potatoes and in the succeeding year planting to cane. The quantity of manure available for this plan can be increased by working the cane bagasse into manure and leaving it to rot for the year. In general, it may be said that practically all of the soils used for sugar cane are very responsive to increase in the humus content and that the alert farmer will take every opportunity to add this by plowing under vegetable matter. Where this is done systematically, the cost of fertilization, now an important item in the total cost of producing syrup may be materially reduced.

Sugar cane, the bulletin points out, is not propagated successfully from seed. The commercial method is to plant the stalks either in whole or in part of the old plants. If the root-stalks are left in the ground, they will produce in the succeeding year, another crop known as a stubble or ratoon crop. That however rarely makes as good yield as the first or "plant cane" crop, and if the stubble is left another year the second ratoon crop is usually still smaller. In practice it has been found that it is rarely profitable to attempt to secure more than two crops from one planting and almost never profitable to secure more than three. The amount of cane required for planting is so great as to constitute a heavy drain upon the production. The bulletin points out that this is a strong incentive for undertaking experiments intended to develop cane varities that are more resistent to disease and that will consequently not require such frequent planting.

The bulletin also discusses in detail the methods of preparing the land, cultivating and harvesting the crop, and the cost of making the sirup.

Sacked hulls mean convenience and economy

PUTTING Buckeye Hulls in sacks is just one of the important little things that have been done to make this roughage an improvement over the old style. This makes easier to handle when putting them in the barn and easier to measure out when mixing feed. It keeps them clean and makes your help think of them as forage—not as bedding.

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

Even though sacked, Buckeye Hulls sell for much less than loose old style hulls. It costs us money to sack them but we believe that anything that will help you use this product to best advantage is worth the expense.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls are free of lint which has no food value.
2000 pounds of real roughage to the ton—not 1500.
Buckeye Hulls allow better assimilation of food.
No trash or dust.
They mix well with other food.
They take less space in the barn.
Every pound goes farther.

Kimbraugh Bros., Indianola, Miss., say:
"We are using Buckeye Hulls and are very much pleased with them. We think they are superior to old style hulls."

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

SAYS THAT PHOSPHATES MAKE BEAUTIFUL WOMEN AND STRONG HEALTHY VIGOROUS ROOBUST MEN

Physicians all over the World are prescribing Phosphates to build up run-down enemic conditions and those who have treated their patients with Argo-Phosphate are changing thin enemic women

With toneless tissues, flabby flesh, into the most beautiful rosy cheeked and plump round-formed women imaginable.

Atlanta, Ga.—Dr. Jacobson said in a recent interview that 90 per cent of enemia comes from nervous breakdowns which can only be corrected by supplying the necessary phosphates to the nervous system that is lacking in the food you eat, and this can be quickly supplied by taking one or two five-grain Argo-Phosphate tablets after each meal, and at bedtime. It will in many cases make a pale, scrawny face the picture of health in a few days, I have seen women that I expect would have to be kept under treatment for months restored to perfect health in one or two weeks time.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Argo-Phosphates recommended by Dr. F.H. Jacobson contains phosphates such as are prescribed by leading physicians throughout the world, and it will be found the mose effective from for treating patients with nervous dyspepsia, stomach troubles, brain fag, nervous prostration. It will renew youthful vim and vigor and will build up the whole body. If your druggist will not supply you with Argo-Phosphate, send $1 for two weeks treatment, to the Argo Laboratiries, 10 Forsyth, St., Atlanta, Ga.

MOTHERHOOD

Brides of 35, 38 and even 40 are becoming more numerous year by year. Late or postponed marriage is a serious handicap to motherhood because of changes in the birth canals. But the period may be passed in safety if proper care and attention is rendered.

"Mother's Friend," which is applied by the mother-to-be herself, relieves the strain always experienced when the abdomen expands. "Mother's Friend" has a softening, penetrating effect. The breasts are kept in good condition.

Thousands of women, who have used "Mother's Friend" during their period of expectancy testify to its beneficial effects and many refer to its value in relieving the morning sickness so prevalent during pregnancy.

Obtain a bottle from your druggist today and begin its use immediately.

A valuable book for expectant mothers will be sent free. Send name and address to Bradfield Regulator Company, Dept. J, 554 Atlanta, Ga.

SUDAN GRASS

By D. J. Burleson, Agronomist for Extension.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

In general appearance Sudan grass quite closely resembles Johnson grass, but a very important difference is that the former produces no rootstocks, and therefore does not come up from roots the next year as Johnson grass does, but must come from seed. Hence it can not become a pest in cultivated fields.

Sudan grass is killed by frost, therefore the seed should not be planted until danger from frost is past. However, planting should be done as early as the climate will permit, thus giving a longer growing season and a greater yield of hay. The seed may be planted in drills or broadcast. They are so expensive at present it is advisable to plant in drills about 30 inches apart using 2 to 5 pounds of seed per acre. Two or three cultivations should be given. When seed are not too expensive it may be profitable to broadcast at the rate of 20 pounds of seed per acre.

For hay, the grass should be cut as soon as it is headed out; for seed, when most of the seed are ripe. Three cuttings may usually be made after early plantings. In some sections four cuttings are made by cutting earlier than recommended above.

Sudan grass hay is palatable and is as nutritious as Johnson grass hay.

SCHEDULE OF WAR TAXES

CANTALOUPE INSECTS

By W. E. Hinds, Entomologist, Alabama Experiment Station.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

In cantaloupe production upon a large scale, three different types of insects may need to be guarded against.

The first of these may be either one of two leaf eating species known respectively as the striped and the 12 spotted cucumber beetle. These beetles attack the young plants, feeding upon the underside of the little leaves especially, and laying their eggs at the surface of the ground where they hatch and the little grubs bore into and feed upon the roots. The beetles appear soon after the plants are up and their damage is most serious during the first month or six weeks. The methods of control consist in applying air slaked lime or dry ashes with which may be mixed powdered Arsenate of Lead at the rate of 1 pound to 10 pounds of the lime or ashes. It is even better if the plants can be treated with a spray containing one ounce of powdered Arsenate of Lead per two gallons of water. This may be applied with a knap-sack pump and an angle nozzle at the end of a 3 and one-half foot extension rod so that the spray may be applied to the underside of the leaves particularly.

The second type of insect is the common sap-sucking melon aphis or plant louse. This species occurs upon other plants also. On the melons the lice multiply on the underside of the leaves and by their feeding cause the leaves to curl about them. The vines should be watched closely for the beginning of this trouble and the first affected plants might have the tips of the vine carefully removed and destroyed, but be careful not to scatter the lice in doing this.

The third and most serious of the Cantaloupe insects is the so-called melon worm which bores into the ripening fruit. There are really two species of these which work in a similar manner. Fortunately the parent moths prefer to lay eggs upon the early squash rather than upon cantaloupes and the eggs may be concentrated therefore by planting a row of squash about every tenth row through the melon field. The young worms feed on the leaves and particularly in the flower buds and occur from the beginning of blooming through the season. The older worms bore into the ripening fruit. The squash row particularly, should be kept thoroughly sprayed with Arsenate of Lead solution as advised for cucumber beetles and it would be well to pick the buds once a week and burn them so as to destroy the forms within.

As a final method of control with all of these pests, stimulate the growth of the plant during the early part of the season especially and burn all remnants of the plants as soon as the commercial crop has been removed, then plow the land and put in some succeeding fall crop.

Barbed wire cuts, ragged wounds, collar and harness galls, heal up quickly when BALLARD'S SNOW LINIMENT is applied. It is both healing and antiseptic. Price 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

CHEAP FEED NECESSARY FOR PROFITABLE DAIRYING

By J. P. Quinerly, Agent in Dairying.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

There are many factors which play an important part in successful dairying, but the most important one is cheap feed. We must raise the feed at home and feed our cows by the rule of plenty if we wish the dairy to make a satisfactory profit. Very few, if any, of the cows that we have or can buy are efficient enough to declare dividends on bought feed at present prices. For this reason, no farmer should go into the daily business unless he plans to raise practically all his feed at home. His product must be sold to the Creamery on a butter-at basis—and that means from 12 cents to 15 cents for the cream from a gallon of average milk. Even the city dairyman who receives 40 cents or 50 cents per gallon for his milk usually finds it difficult to make much profit on bought feed. The prices received in both cases are high enough. It is a problem of cheaper production—better cows and home raised feed. We must not expect the consumer to pay us a premium on our inefficiency.

Nature's feed for dairy cows is grass and other pasture plants, hence we should devote our best land and attention to pastures. Our long growing season makes it possible to utilize grazing much longer than can dairymen in many other sections. A piece of waste land full of gullies and bushes is not a pasture and cows will not produce profitably under such conditions.

Green, succulent feed is necessary all the year for profitable dairying. "Canned" pasture should therefore be provided for all seasons when field pastures are not good. Fill the silo with corn or sorghum, or both. No farm investment will pay as great dividends as a silo where dairy cows are kept. In fact many farmers who fed silage during the past winter report that they got excellent results and would not think of milking cows again without a silo even if they were sure of an abundance of velvet bean pasture. In many cases the silo has spelled the difference between profit and loss on dairy farms right here in Alabama this season.

We should feed our cows, first all the pasturage or silage they will eat; then what hay (preferably a legume such as cow-pea, peanut, soy bean, or alfalfa) they will clean up; and grain in proportion to their individual ability to produce milk. When on good pasture, a cow does not require much if any hay or grain unless she can produce over fifteen or twenty pounds of milk per day.

Very satisfactory results follow the feeding of velvet beans (in the pod or ground) alone as the grain part of a dairy ration, but it is more profitable to feed some corn meal (or corn and cob meal) and a small percent of cotton seed meal (not over one-fourth of each) with the beans. Experiments and practical experience show that velvet beans in the pod are worth practically half as much as prime cotton seed meal for milk production. They can be produced for $5.00 per ton or $10.00 for two tons—the equivalent of a ton of $40.00 meal.

Nowhere in the world is it possible to raise feed for dairy cows cheaper than in Alabama. And there is no place where the farmer who depends on bought feed will make much less than here.

Why not profit by recent experiences and "play safe" next summer and winter? Plan now for a plenty of raised-at-home feed—real pastures, good silage, and an abundance of velvet beans, corn, and hay. These mean PROFIT in the dairy business.

NEW BULLETIN OF FEEDING VALUE ON VELVET BEANS

The velvet bean is now one of the leading crops in South Alabama and is attracting considerable attention in other parts of the State. A bulletin on the feeding value of this crop has been prepared by G. S. Templeton, Animal Husbandman, and E. Gibbens, Assistant. It is issued by the Alabama Experiment Station as Bulletin No. 192, and is entitled "Cotton Seed Meal Compared with Velvet Beans for Fattening Steers."

The bulletin gives the result of an experiment to determine the value of the velvet bean as a concentrate for fattening steers, the experiment being part of the Local Experiment Work provided for by the Legislature of 1911.

Among other interesting conclusions it was found that the cost of 100 pounds of gain was practically equal, when cottonseed meal cost $35.00 per ton and unhulled velvelt beans $18.00 per ton.

The bulletin may be obtained free of charge by writing the Experiment Station, Auburn, Ala.

Dogs and the Dye-Pot.

The Chinese sleeve-dogs, called Pekinese, are so fashionable nowadays and fetch such high prices that breeders of them are making a lot of money in the business. Also dealers.

Unfortunately, the dealers are not always honest, and it is just as well to avoid buying such dogs from street venders and other nonresponsible persons. The animals may not be exactly what they seem.

The color specially desired for a Pekinese is a delicate shade of brown. Dogs of this kind are of various hues; but an unscrupulous dealer finds no serious difficulty in making them brown, to match any shade. He simply dips doggy into a pail of hydrogen peroxide a few times until his coat is well bleached and then dyes him, by like means, to the fashionable tint.

MOBILIZE TROOPS AT MONTGOMERY

He was pledged a hearty response from each member present. The feature of this session of the grand lodge was the resolution adjourning the grand lodge to the first Tuesday in August, 1919. GOVERNOR ISSUES PAROLES TO FOUR

CONDITIONED ON THE FUTURE GOOD CONDUCT OF THE CONVICTS.

NEWS FROM STATE CAPITAL

What the State's Servants Are Saying, Doing and Undoing—Official Acts Disclosed.

—Montgomery.

Four paroles were ordered issued by Governor Henderson. The governor announced that the paroles were conditioned on the future good conduct of the convicts and the observance of all laws in the future.

Those released are Clifton Trawick of Calhoun, convicted of grand larceny and sentenced to 15 months; Mattie Robison of Bullock, given two years for bigamy; Ed Gilchrist of Lowndes, sentenced to one year and one day for grand larceny, and Will Evans of Calhoun, convicted of grand larceny and given 15 months.

Rate Hearing Delayed 25 Days.

Decision in the petition of the Birmingham Civic Association, filed with the Alabama Public Service Commission and heard for the first time when J. J. Jackson, attorney for the association, sought to get from the roads a proportional freight rate from Birmingham to stations on the Warrior will be delyed for more than 25 days. The Commission allowed to the association fifteen days for filing its printed brief as amended to embody clearly the nine roads operating in the district, and to the railroads ten additional days for presenting their answer to this argument.

Every Convict Has Chance.

Governor Henderson paroled Will Dillis of Bullock county, charged with false pretenses on condition of his future good conduct. The records of the governor's office, recently reviewed, show that in the first two years of the Henderson administration, 500 state prisoners have been pardoned or paroled. The governor said when questioned on the subject ,that the number of paroles may be increased rather than diminished during the remainder of his term of office. Every individual that is within the walls, or under guard at the convict camps of the state, may cherish some hope of clemency, for the chief executive intends to make a survey of the record of each prisoner before he leaves the work to his successor, and those that are deserving of paroles will receive them.

Martin Rules on Licenses Cases.

In an opinion from the attorney general, State Auditor Allgood is informed that brokers in Alabama will not be required to pay the $14 per $1000 on their gross commissions, required under section 11 of the license act of 1915, provided the broker merely solicits business and sends his orders for approval to another state. A broker at Selma raised the question, having been required by the tax collector to file a statement for his commission. Auditor Allgood has also been advised that poolrooms are not entitled to a refund of any part of the license money paid the state, if they are put out of business by municipal ordinances during the time for which they have paid. The attorney general is of the opinion that section 18 of the license act, providing for a refund, in case any business licenses are stopped by law, does not apply, where it is stopped by ordinance.

School Fees Ruled Upon.

No school fees of any kind can be charged during the compulsory education period. This is an important decision rendered by the attorney general and given to Superintendent Feagin. "As the recent statute places the entire control of the public school founds of the county in the hands of the county boads of education and gives them the right to determine all incidental expenses, it results that whatever the county boards determine as to incidental expenses will be held valid; for in each instant they may examine what incidental expenses are to be paid out of the public revenue and what, if any, shall be assessed and collected from the pupils; provided taht any rule and regulation which they may invoke for the assessment and collection of incidental fees shall not place an assessment on those pupils whose circumstances are such that the imposition of the incidental fee would prove a hindrance," said the attorney general.

Prohi Violator Paroled.

Governor Henderson paroled Jim Williams, convicted in Clay County of violating the prohibition law.

Cases Taken Under Advisement.

The Birmingham packing house rate case and the Mobile molasses feed case were taken under advisement by the Alabama Public Service Commission and some decision in both of these petitions may be expected within the present month. The Heflin depot case was continued.

To Keep Tab on Housewives.

Housewives in the canton of Basel-City are in a fever of excitement, according to a Lausanne dispatch to the European edition of the New York Herald. The edict has gone forth that gendarmes in that canton can enter any private house on the meatless days, Tuesday and Friday, and inspect what is cooking in the "marmite!" One can imagine the welcome a gendarme will receive from a German-Swiss "frau" as he crosses the threshold of her kitchen.

There has been a perfect storm of abuse over it in the grand conseil of Basel-Ville, but the vote was 75 against 16. Cooking meat on Tuesday and Friday is punishable by fines up to 1,000 francs, and one month's imprisonment.

Not Her Drink.

Little Isabel's mother had very injudiciously allowed her to drink weak tea with her meals instead of milk.

One day Isabel was taken out to lunch at a friend's house, and the friend, never dreaming that a child could drink anything other than milk, placed it before her in a broad, low, fancy cup.

The child gazed at the milk in silence for a while, and then astonished her hostess by remarking disdainfully, "I ain't a cat."—Buffalo Express.

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

On the ground that no man ought to be unemployed at the present time, the guardians of an English town have decided to ignore the existence of tramps and to provide neither food nor lodging for them. They will have their reward, for the fraternity will give the place a wide berth.

AN OPERATION AVERTED

Philadelphia, Pa.—"One year ago I was very sick and I suffered with pains in my side and back until I nearly went crazy. I went to different doctors and they all said I had female trouble and would not get any relief until I would be operated on. I had suffered for four years before this time, but I kept getting worse the more medicine I took. Every month since I was a young girl I had suffered with cramps in my sides at periods and was never regular. I saw your advertisement in the newspaper and the picture of a woman who had been saved from an operation and this picture was impressed on my mind. The doctor had given me only two more days to make up my mind so I sent my husband to the drug store at once for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and believe me, I soon noticed a change and when I had finished the third bottle I was cured and never felt better. I grant you the privilege to publish my letter and am only too glad to let other women know of my cure."—Mrs. Thos. McGonigal, 3432 Hartville Street, Phila., Pa.

MINISTERS OF GOSPEL PUT TANLAC TO TEST

Well-Known Ministers of the South Come Out Openly and Fearlessly and Tell What They Know to Be the Truth About the Medicine That Has Helped Them.

RARELY will a minister of the Gospel indorse a proprietary medicine. The preacher's high calling, the influence he commands puts a grave responsibility on his every word. He will not jeopardize his reputation by commending a thing without first assuring himself it is all right. His word carries as much weight in the home, on the street, or in the public prints as in the pulpit.

When ministers of some of the greatest communions in the land indorse Tanlac their words carry conviction. They say what they know to be the truth. They have put Tanlac to the test of personal service and have not found it wanting.

The proprietors of Tanlac have received countless testimonials from people in every walk of life, earnestly commending it. Among them are a number from prominent ministers of various churches. A few of these are printed below.

Rev. W. C. Norton is pastor of the Wesley Memorial church of Jacksonville, Fla. He says:—"I suffered from chronic indigestion for years. I seldom slept well and had severe headaches. Since taking Tanlac I feel as well as ever I did—sleep splendidly and eat anything I want. Tanlac has restored my health and I feel it my duty to recommend it."

Rev. A. H. Sykes, pastor of Watkins Park Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tenn., says:—Mrs. Sykes suffered from stomach and kidney troubles and a nervous breakdown. Tanlac restored her health—she is gaining strength and flesh rapidly—her full restoration is but a question of time."

Rev. E. G. Butler, pastor of Central Baptist church, Muskogee, Okla., says:—"I had attacks of acute indigestion. Results from taking Tanlac have been most satisfactory—am glad to recommend it as the best medicine I have ever tried."

Rev. F. M. Winburn, Methodist, San Antonio, Tex., says:—"I had no appetite—suffered from weakness and general debility—could not work without quickly tiring. Found Tanlac just what my system needed. I consider Tanlac a good medicine to build up run-down systems."

Rev. R. J. Taylor, pastor St. Pleasant Baptist church, Franklin, Tex., says:—"Grippe left me in very bad shape—had indigestion, nervous headaches—could not sleep well. Tanlac gave me a good appetite, strengthened my nerves. I sleep well as ever—have gained five pounds."

Rev. A. L. Tull, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga., says:—"My granddaughter was a nervous wreck from indigestion. Tanlac gave her an appetite—she can eat anything. She is on the road to recovery."

Rev. Jas. H. New, Baptist, Clarkston, Ga., says:—My wife had severe cramps, headaches, and was very nervous, badly run down, weak and thin. Tanlac caused her troubles to disappear—she never complains now."

Rev. A. J. Vallery, former superintendent Bethany Home, Monroe, La., now of Memphis, Tenn., says:—"Three years ago I had a general breakdown with indigestion—had rheumatic pains in legs. Since taking Tanlac am relieved of indigestion—rheumatic pains have stopped—feel like a new man. I give Tanlac my unqualified indorsement."

Rev. John M. Sims, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga., says:—"I suffered from nervous indigestion and inactive liver—digestion badly impaired. Tanlac corrected these troubles entirely—gained ten pounds taking two bottles."

Rev. W. T. Roby, Pastor West Lonsdale Methodist church, Knoxville, Tenn., testifies from personal experience as to the great benefit he derived from taking Tanlac for disordered stomach.

No greater praise can be given a remedy than the unsolicited testimony of men whose lives are devoted to the betterment of their fellow men. Their integrity cannot be doubted. They serve their calling often at great personal sacrifice. Tanlac has helped them—they say so because they want to do you good.

There is a Tanlac dealer in your town.—Adv.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 20

THE IMPORTANCE OF SELF-CONTROL—TEMPERANCE LESSON.

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 28:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things.—I Cor. 9:25.

Wine in the Scriptures is spoken of under four aspects. First, social, that as illustrated by its use at the marriage in Cana. We must not, however, confuse this wine with the spirituous, strong drink of this present day. Second, medicinal (Prov. 31:6-7; I Tim. 5:23). These passages do not command us to use it as such, and God has very graciously revealed to us in modern medical research the futility of the use of alcohol in the matter of medicine as a remedy. Third, sacrificial wine (Matt. 26:27-29; Luke 22:17-20), and, fourth wine is spoken about as productive of the woes of men (See Amos 6:1; Heb. 2:15; Prov. 23:20). It is also mentioned by way of contrast (See Eph. 5:18).

The Scriptures speak of drunkards in four different ways: (1) They are to be stoned (Deut. 21:20); (2) Drunkards lead to poverty (Prov. 23:21); (3) Drunkards are to be separated from other men (I Cor. 5:11); (4) they are to be finally separated from God (I Cor. 6:9).

Abstinence from strong drink is enjoined in the Scriptures under three heads: (1) the priest and Nazarite (Num. 6:3; Luke 1:15); (2) the ruler (Prov. 31:4); (3) those who are to worship Jehovah (Lev. 10:3).

This particular lesson is taken from a portion of Isaiah's prophecy where he is anticipating what is about to happen to Samaria, and uttering his warnings unto Judah.

I. The Steps of Intemperance. First, Disgrace and Dishonor (v. 1). The city of Samaria is compared to a chaplet of flowers on a drunkard's brow, which shall be trodden under foot because of his inebriety. Drunkenness seemed to have been so widespread as to become a national sin. Second, Disease and Degeneracy (v. 2). The pride of beauty spoken of in verse one is to "fall to the earth." This glorious beauty was after all only a "fading flower" (I Pet. 1:24). The coming of the Assyrians upon Samaria is described in a three-fold way: (1) As a "tempest of hail"; (2) as a "destroying storm;" (3) as a "tempest of mighty waters overflowing." The thought contained is that of widespread and overwhelming destruction. Back of this work of devastation and destruction and desolation was the wrath of God against sin (Ch. 2:4-9). All earthly pride shall be trodden under foot. Samaria, "a fading flower," was to be greedily eaten up by the oncoming enemy.

II. Those Reached by Intemperance. Strong drink causes men to err in their conduct, in their moral insight, in their judgments. It reaches the beautiful (v. 1); it reaches the learned (v. 7); it reaches those in authority; in fact all classes. It leads men to the depths of degradation and to the loss of their wills (v. 8); it makes men to become beasts, wallowing in their own vomit. Not only Samaria, but "these also" (vv. 7 and 8), that is people of Jerusalem have erred through wine and strong drink. Even the priests and the prophets had and do so now (See Ch. 56:10-12; Micah 2:11). The priests were especially inexcusable because of the plain directness of God's word (Lev. 10:9-10; Ezekiel 44:21). The result of their intemperance was that they utterly failed in their official acts. They reeled in vision and stumbled in judgment. The use of wine and strong drink made their social gatherings filthy and disgusting. Temperance is the habit of abstaining from everything that destroys. It is the control and right use of God's good gifts for service. Intemperance is lack of control or the wrong use of God's gifts in self-indulgence.

III. The Lesson in Contrast. Jerusalem vs. Samaria. Samaria's crown of pride was not the glory of God. Its beauty was a fading flower (v. 4), his wisdom contemned through the ignorance of Samaria (vv. 6, 7, 12), his strength versus their weakness and wickedness (vv. 6, 13). God teaches by contrast as well as by direct precept. Verses nine and ten may be taken as a mocking answer of the people to God's prophet. Isaiah intimates that the time to begin our instruction is in childhood (v. 9), that precept must be upon precept, and line upon line, here a little and there a little. There never is a time when we can let up in this struggle against the mighty evil of intemperance.

Take as a reply (v. 9) this would seem to indicate that God took them to be babies just weaned. If the prophet, himself, is the speaker, then Jehovah is represented as teaching knowledge to babes and not to the self-sufficient. It is these whom he "makes to understand his message" (R. V.), and the method of his teaching is precept upon precept. If we will not hear God's loving and patient call to repentance he will speak to us through cruel enemies. If we will not teach our children, if we will not keep everlastingly agitating this question, he will use other means (v. 11).

SENATE PASSES ESPIONAGE BILL

SAID TO BE MOST DRASTIC EVER ENACTED IN CONGRESSIONAL HISTORY.

EMBARGO CLAUSE RETAINED

Efforts to Retain Provisions for Newspaper Censorship and Prohibition Are Defeated.

Washington.—After nearly three weeks of debate, ranging over innumerable problems of the war, the Senate, by a vote of 77 to 6, passed the administration espionage bill, pronounced one of the most drastic and all inclusive measures in American congressional history.

A similar bill has passed the House, and virtual redrafting of many of the most important provisions is expected in the forthcoming conferences.

During the final consideration, the Senate stripped the measure entirely of provisions for newspaper censorship and restriction upon manufacture of grain into intoxicating liquors; and rejected an amendment designed to curb speculation in food products, although sentiment obviously was overwhelming in favor of such legislation later.

As completed, the Senate bill's principal sections provide:

Authority for the President to embargo exports when he finds that "the public safety and welfare so requires" (not in the House measure);

Authority for the postoffice department to censor mails and exclude mail matter deemed seditious, anarchistic or treasonable, and making its mailing punishable under heavy penalties;

For punishment of espionage, defined in most detailed terms, including wrongful use of military information;

For the control of merchant vessels in American waters;

Punishment for conveyance of false reports to interfere with military operations, willful attempts to cause disaffection in the military or naval forces or obstruction of recruiting;

For the seizure of arms and munitions and prohibition of their exportation under certain conditions;

For penalizing conspiracies designed to harm American foreign relations or for destruction of property within the United States;

For increased restrictions upon issuance of passports, with penalties for their forgery or false procurement; and, for material extension of the power to issue search warrants for inspection of premises.

The clause giving the President power to embargo exports was retained in the bill virtually as drafted by administration officials. It was modified once, but the unqualified provision was restored after its necessity had been explained last week in a day's session behind closed doors.

FAMOUS DIPLOMAT DEAD

Joseph H. Choate, Former Ambassador to Great Britain, Dies Suddenly.

New York.—Joseph H. Choate, former United States ambassador to Great Britain, died at his home in this city.

Mr. Choate had been ill only a few hours. He had taken a very active part in the entertainment in this city of the British and French war missions and attended services at the cathedral of St. John the Divine with foreign minister Balfour.

Mr. Choate was referred to by Mayor Mitchell at one of the entertainments in honor of the war missions as "the foremost citizen of New York."

Mr. Choate was taken suddenly ill and was assisted to his bedroom and his personal physician, Dr. William G. Draper, was called, but Mr. Choate died before he arrived. With him at the time of his death were members of his family.

Dr. Draper announced that death was due to heart disease.

RECRUIT TO WAR STRENGTH.

Organization of 44 New Regiments. Total of 116,455 Men Needed.

Washington.—Orders to bring the regular army to its full war strength of 293,000 men were announced by the war department. Organization of 44 new regiments will begin with further efforts to stimulate recruiting and bring in the 116,455 men needed to fill up the ranks.

Since April 1, 67,443 men have accepted and officials are confident that the full number will have been enrolled as war time volunteers before June 15.

Cooperage Plant Destroyed by Fire.

New York—A four-story brick building, occupied by the Brooklyn Cooperage company, in what is known as the "eastern district freight terminal," was destroyed by fire with a loss estimated at $250,000. The flames were so menacing that all the fire fighting apparatus in Brooklyn and Queensborough, as well as 13 engines from Manhattan, was called out. The origin of the fire has not been determined.

The cooperage company makes all the barrels used by the American Sugar Refining company.

Muffin Recipe.

A few weeks after Mr. Newlywed was married he said to his wife one morning: "Martha, I wish you'd write to that old colored cook your folks have in Atlanta, and find out how she makes the splendid muffins that we used to have there for breakfast."

Mrs. Newlywed did so, and about a week later received the following reply:

"Dear Missy: To make the muffins you-all spoke about take as much cornmeal flour eggs molasses sugar salt and butter as you think you need, cording to the number of persons you think you're going to have stir them all together and bake in a hot oven."—Mrs. Estelle Goodfellow, Maine.

HAS NEVER BEEN NERVOUS

Since Taking Cardui, and Does Not Now Suffer Any Pain Writes Georgia Lady.

Trenton, Ga.—Mrs. Ella Gifford, of this place, writes: "I have always suffered from painful . . . but was worse after marriage. I would have . . . pains and misery in my stomach and hips. I would have a bad sick headache every time, which would generally last two days. I had always heard what a good medicine Cardui was, so I thought I would try it. I used two bottles and it helped me.

"Fifteen months later I began to be nervous and was worse at my . . . But at these times I did not have any pain and do not now suffer any pain. But I was very nervous, so nervous that my hands would shake. Any noise would make me jump. So I took two more bottles of Cardui. I have never been nervous since . . . and do not have any pain. I think this is all due to Cardui and Black-Draught."

Cardui, the woman's tonic, is composed only of pure, vegetable ingredients, which have been recognized for many years by standard medical books as of great medicinal value.

With a wonderful record of over 40 years to its credit, Cardui has proven its merits in the treatment of ailments peculiar to women.

If you are weak and nervous, and need a good, reliable, female tonic, try Cardui. At any drug store.—Adv.

Testing the Soil.

Test your garden soil for acidity. Procure a dime's worth of blue litmus paper at a drug store. Make a slit or incision in the damp soil, put in a paper two-thirds its length and leave it for a half-hour. If the change of color is to red or deep pink your soil needs heavy liming. If there is no change of color liming will be of little value.

BABIES AND GROWING CHILDREN need a tonic to tone up the system and regulate the liver. Mothers are constantly using with wonderful success, our "Plantation" Chill and Fever Tonic. Pleasant to take—contains no Calomel. Price 50c.—Adv.

NEW EXPLOSIVE BEING USED

Rochambolite, Introduced by French on Western Front, Has Terrible Effect on Enemy.

Rochambolite is a new and terrible explosive that has recently been introduced on the western front by the French and employed in the defense of Verdun, says the Argonaut. The explosive, when tested in action at Verdun, was found to possess a most terrible and demoralizing effect upon the Germans.

The explosive is a powder which, upon ignition, changes into a molten metal and a very large volume of gas in an infinitely small space of time. This sudden change in volume and the terrific heat which is generated cause an immense pressure on the walls of the vessel that contains it, shattering the walls and hurling the molten metal and wall fragments in all directions, spreading death and destruction in their path.

The effect of this molten metal on the Germans can hardly be imagined. Pieces of metal upon striking them immediately burn their way deep into the flesh, even to the bone, causing intense pain and suffering to the victim. So deadly and so demoralizing have the French found this explosive to be that they are now utilizing it on the entire front.

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

CLANTON, ALA.

SOY BEANS FOR PORK PRODUCTION

By J. C. Ford, State Pig Club Agent.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

Soy beans are not nearly so well known or so generally grown in Alabama as they should be. In some sections of the State they are largely grown and a few farmers here and there in nearly all parts of the state grow them, but they should be grown on practically every farm.

There are many varieties of soy beans, but without a doubt the one best variety for Alabama is the Mammoth, sometimes called the Southern Yellow. This variety grows large and yields heavily, though it is later maturing than most others.

Soy beans may be planted in April, May or early in June. Early plantings usually make heavier growth and larger yields of seed than late plantings. For pork production two plantings are desirable, one in April and the other possibly after oats. A half bushel of seed will plant an acre in drills wide enough to permit cultivation. Do not plant when the soil is very dry, as they must come up quickly or they will not come at all. After they are up, however, they are quite drought resistant. Shoot a few rabbits and hang them in the soy bean fields just off the ground, or poison the rabbits by spraying the young plants along the outside rows with Paris green or arsenate of lead. After they get well started rabbits will not bother them.

Unlike cowpeas, soy beans complete their growth before beginning to fruit. They then bloom from bottom to top at one time and the pods ripen at practically the same time.

For best results in pork production, the hogs should be turned in to graze the beans when the pods are very small, about three-fourths of an inch long. They will then eat the soy bean leaves for a few weeks without doing much damage to the crop, unless too many hogs are turned in. If the beans are three feet high, six to ten hogs weighing 75 to 100 pounds each may be grazed on each acre. Be sure to feed one good feed of grain each day, for hogs can not do well on leaves alone. Even when the seed mature some grain should be fed. Soy beans are extremely rich in bone and muscle building compounds and really need some corn to balance them properly.

At Auburn an acre of soy beans has been found to carry 10 hogs from 40 to 60 days, the hogs gaining a pound or more each per day. With hogs selling at 7 cents the soy beans proved to be worth from $25.00 to $40.00 an acre.

Hogs do not get as fat on soy beans as on peanuts, but the fat is quite soft like that produced by peanuts. If a half ration of corn is fed while the hogs are on the beans and they are then put in lots and fed for three or four weeks on a slop of corn meal and cotton seed meal, in the proportion of two parts of corn meal to one part cotton seed meal, the carcass will be much improved, though not as firm as a straight corn-fed hog.

Soy bean seed may be bought from any seed house, or any County Agricultural Agent can furnish information as to where they may be had.

A "MOTHERS DAY" PETITION

The following petition was presented and acted upon in each of the three churches of Thorsby Sunday, May 13, which was Mothers Day. Copies have been sent to the President, the two Senators from this State and the Congressmen from this District:

Thorsby, Ala., May 13, 1917.

On this "Mothers Day" the congregation assembled for worship in the (name of church) of Thorsby, believing that in no other way can we more truly honor our mothers or their memories, and the motherhood of the nation, than by taking action which aims to conserve the welfare of the children whom these mothers have borne, do hereby direct the officers of this church to petition in our behalf the president of the United States, or our representatives in Congress, or both for nation-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic, to be in force at least until the war shall end.

Our president has called upon us all to make great sacrifices for our country and for humanity. All must agree that in time of war the burden of sacrifice falls more heavily upon the mothers whose sons or whose husbands are bearing arms. The mothers have a right to demand and they are demanding, and we unite with them in demanding that our government give its largest protection to their boys and withdraw its protection from that business whose success means at the same destruction of millions of dollars worth of food products, and what is of infinitely greater significance the destruction of the moral character and of the physical welfare of the thousands of our own young men both within and outside of the army.

By vote of Church,

VOLUME VI. CLANTON, CHILTON COUNTY, ALA., MAY 24, 1917. NUMBRE 8.

JUNE 5 REGISTRATION DAY FOR SUBJECTS TO SERVICE

All men between 21 and 31 will be compelled to Register for Selective Draft by Conscript Law.

The President has designated the 5th day of June as the day on which all male citizens between the ages of 21 and 31 must register for selective draft of service for the United States army under the new conscription law recently enacted by Congress.

There is no exceptions to the operations of the registration provisions. All who are past their 21st birthday, and have not yet reached their 31st birthday by the day of registration, will be subject to registration. There are no exemptions from registration at all. Every man within the age limits prescribed must go to his voting place, where he will find a person officially designated to register him. One registrar will be stationed at each voting place in the county.

The applicant for registration will be furnished with the necessary blank or blanks, upon which he will place the facts and information asked for by the government.

There are no excuses for misunderstanding of the requirements of the details concerning registration. There is but one thing to it. All within the specified age limits will be required to register, and they had as well go and do so according to law, without any trouble.

It will not be wise, if anyone should be so disposed, to attempt to evade the duties of registering. Heavy penalties have been set for those who might attempt such a course and there is not one chance for them to fail to register and not be caught up with.

ALL MUST REGISTER

Despite the clear statements as to the registration for the war draft, there are constant debates and differences of opinion as to the registration ordered for June 5. There is no need to err as to the order, but men do err.

Every man who is 21 years old, and every man who is 30 and not yet 31 has to register. Whether he be white or red or yellow or black, he must show up at the registration place. Whether he has one arm or two, whether he has one leg or none, he has to register. Furthermore, he cannot escape it for more than a few days, and he will be punished for dodging. The United States government government is in earnest, and it will get every man within the ages. The man who is one day over 21 and the man a few days under 31 will be caught and brought in if they do not appear on June 5 in the precinct in which they live. It is the law, and the law will be enforced. Make no mistake about that.

A family doctor may tell you that you are unfit for military service, but that does not excuse you from registering. It will take a verdict of the army surgeon to excuse any man for physical reasons. Nothing excuses a man from registering except real sickness on that day.

Not all who register will have to go. There are more than ten million men within the age limits and the government only wants two million. At registration, a man has only two chances of ten in getting in, After the unfit are excused, and after the exemption of farmers, mechanics, and others needed at home, the chances will get down to about even that a young man will be taken.

All that is government matter, however. All must register. Then the proper authorities will decide about the qualifications. It is the duty of every man inside the ages to go and register, or he will have trouble. A man under 21 does not have to go the registration at all, neither does a man who is 31 or older.

IMPORTANT FACTS ABOUT FERTILIZING CORN CROP.

Farmers should notice what is Said herein by Mr. Wade State Commissionerof Agriculture.

It is evident that the acreage planted to corn in the state has been increased forty to fifty per cent and farmers are to be congratulated for taking such a forward step. A large yield of corn is the greatest need and probably the most profitable crop that can be grown under the present food and feed emergency. A great part of the increased acreage is poor upland, which will make a profitable yield only by the use of commercial fertilizer. Farmers should fertilize their corn within the next two or three weeks. It has always paid me to apply about two or three hundred pounds of fertilizer around my corn at the second or third plowing or when the corn was between one and two feet high. Ordinary 12-2 fertilizer will pay but nitrate of soda or sulphate of amonia is best. Nitrate of soda is hard to obtain and almost prohibitive in price and for that reason heavily amoniated fertilizer like 10-4-0 is recommended. We do not recommend side fertilization for cotton under present conditions.

Cultivation of Corn.

It often happens that a yield of corn is unprofitable on account of the wrong kind of fertilization. A deep cultivation is injurious and it should have been done before the corn was planted. Plowing too close to the corn with the point of the plow is also injurious. All cultivations should be shallow and the point of the plow run further from the corn with each cultivation. I have seen good corn ruined by the last cultivation being too deep or wrapping up the rows with a turning plow to cover vegetation. Such plows as turning plows pick up all the top soil and the corn roots and pile them up around the stalk only to dry out and subject the corn to a quick stunned condition just before or at the time of the fruiting. Such methods of laying by corn do more harm than good. Cultivation should be shallow, regular and the soil should be worked toward the corn gradually.

It is not too late to plant corn on damp rich bottoms. This kind of land can be found along the creeks and branches much of which may yet be put into cultivation. The largest yields and cheapest corn ever produced in the state have been made on this type of land, planted in May or any time up to the middle of June. We have many opportunities and a plenty of time to further increase the acreage in corn. It is not advisable to plant dry, thin upland so late.

THE CHILTON COUNTY SINGING CONVENTION

Musical Organization Held an Important Session on last Sunday.

The Chilton County Singing Convention met with Pleasant Grove on May 20th and spent the day singing which was the best we have had in some time.

UGLY BROS. MINSTRELS TO SHOW IN CLANTON

Famous comedians will be here at High School next Tuesday Night, May 29.

Arrangements have been made by which Clanton people will be accorded a rare treat on next Tuesday night by having the pleasant privilege of witnessing a performance of the famous Ugly Brothers Minstrels.

The entertainment is brought to Clanton through the activities of a committee working on plans to raise money to purchase a grand piano for the County High School. This is a worthy cause, and one that should command the support of everybody. But besides helping in this splendid work, you get the best entertainment possible at the same time.

"THE CANTROLLA"

The 1917 "Cantrolla," the Chilton County High School annual has just been received from press. This edition outclesses by far the former numbers of the publication, and much credit is due to the '17 Class for such a splendid accomplishment.

The annual contains 104 pages printed on first-class enamel paper, with sunburst cover. The matter consists mostly of halftone reproductions of the environments and contingents of the school, and of black-and-white descriptions of this year's work of the thriving institution.

The "Cantrolla" is scarcely equaled and never surpassed by any publication of its kind in the state. Copies may be had for 75 cents from Business Manager Joe Kanjutzky.

NEGRO MURDERER BURNT TO DEATH IN TENNESSEE.

Paid penalty for Brutal Murder of a Young White Girl after Confessing Guilt.

Memphis, Tenn., May 22.—While more than 10,000 persons looked on, Eli Persons, negro confessed murderer of pretty 16 year-old Antoinette Rappal, was burned to death by a mob of unmasked men.

The lynching took place in a steal cage, especially constructed for the burning of the negro, on the exact spot where the murder was committed.

Several hundred women and girls stood by and watched the death agony of the negro, who had confessed assaulting and chopping off the head of the young school girl.

After burning Eli Persons, a delegation of the mob left to capture two other negroes whom Persons implicated in his confession just before the match was applied to the funeral pyre.

Fifty men caught Dewitt Ford, one of the negroes implicated by Persons, and dragged him to the place where Persons had paid with his life for the crime. As he was about to be tied to a tree, a member of the mob rushed forward, attacked and mutilated the negro.

Is Delayed for Crowd.

The burning of the negro was delayed for several hours pending the arrival from Mississippi of a crowd of citizens who had sent word ahead that they desired to witness the ceremony. The city of Memphis was agog with excitement. Many business houses failed to open their doors and the newspapers closed their edtions early so that employees could go to the scene of the lynching.

Persons had been captured from a sheriff's party last night near Holly Springs, Miss. His arrival in Memphis was delayed by a storm which made the roads nearly impassible.

Once inside the steel cage, Persons was lashed fast to a stake. The fagots saturated with gasolins were piled so as to surround his legs and while the gathered thousands cheered the match was applied to the pyre.

As the flames reached into the air, the negro's screams could be heard for a distance of half a mile from the place of the occasion.

Mr. Armstrong is a big factor in the fraternal activities of Clanton, and particularly in the I. O. R. M. He has been for years a faithful and tireless worker in behalf or the Waxahatchie Tribe here, and is none other than justly deserving that he be given the high honor which has been bestowed upon him.

A bunch of past Sachems of the Waxahatchie attended the meeting of the Great Council on Tuesday, and in addition to the good news of Armstrong's election as Sachem, they report that Clanton will have the honor of entertaining and caring for the next meeting of the Great Council Three towns: Birmingham, Anniston and Clanton were bidding for the honor, but Clanton brought home the victory.

PRESIDENT SIGNS DRAFT MEASURE; TROOPS TO FRONT

Division Under Command of Major General Pershing.

REGULARS FIRST TO FRANCE

Executive Sets June 5 as the Date of Registration for All Men Between the Ages of 21 and 31—Rejects Roosevelt Volunteer Army—Declares It Would Interfere With Present Plans.

Washington, May 21.—Flatly rejecting that section of the measure which would permit Colonel Roosevelt to organize volunteer divisions, President Wilson signed the conscription bill.

The president signed the army bill just after dinner at 8 p. m. on Friday, without formality, and set June 5 as the date of registration for all men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-one for military service.

President Issues Proclamation.

President Wilson's proclamation, putting into effect the selective draft provision of the war army bill, signed last night, follows in part:

"A proclamation by the president of the United States:

"Whereas, Congress has enacted and the president has on the 18th day of May, one thousand nine hundred and seventeeen, approved a law which contains the following provisions:

"Section 5. That all male persons between the ages of twenty-one and thirty, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the president; and upon proclamation by the president or other public notice given by him or by his direction, stating the time and place of such registration, it shall be the duty of all persons of the designated ages, except officers and enlisted men of the regular army, the navy and the National Guard and naval militia while in the service of the United States, to present themselves for and submit to registration under the provisions of this act, and every such person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon the publication of said proclamation or other notice as aforesaid given by the president or by his direction; and any person who shall willfully fail or refuse to present himself for registration or to submit thereto as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year, and shall thereupon be duly registered; provided, that in the call of the docket precedence shall be given, in courts trying the same, to the trial of criminal proceedings under this act: Provided further, that persons shall be subject to registration as herein provided who shall have attained their twenty-first birthday and who shall not have attained their thiryfirst birthday on or before the day set for registration, and all persons so registered shall be and remain subject to draft into the forces hereby authorized, unless exempted or excused therefrom as in this act provided.

Registration on June 5.

"Now, therefore, I Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States, do call upon the governor of each of the several states and territories, the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia and all officers and agents of the several states and territories, of the District of Columbia and of the counties and municipalities therein to perform certain duties in the execution of the foregoing law, which duties will be communicated to them directly in regulations of even date herewith.

"And I do further proclaim and give notice to all persons subject to registration in the several states and in the District of Columbia in accordance with the above law that the time and place of such registration shall be between 7 a. m. and 9 p. m. on the 5th day of June, 1917, at the registration place in the precinct wherein they have their permanent homes. Those who shall have attained their twenty-first birthday and who shall not have attained their thirty-first birthday on or before the day here named are required to register, excepting only officers and enlisted men of the regular army, the navy, the marine corps and the National Guard and naval militia while in the service of the United States, and officers in the officers' reserve corps and enlisted men in the enlisted reserve corps while in active service. In the territories of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico a day for registration will be named in a later proclamation.

All Must Co-Operate.

"The power against which we are arrayed has sought to impose its will upon the world by force. To this end it has increased armament until it has changed the fa[illegible]. In the sense in which we [illegible]nt to think of armies the[illegible]nies in this struggle. The[illegible]nations armed. Thus, th[illegible]e-main to till the soil an[illegible] tories are no less a part[illegible] that is in France than the men beneath the battle flags. It must be so with us. It is not an army that we must shape and train for war; it is a nation. To this end our people must draw close in one compact front against a common foe. But this cannot be if each man pursues a private purpose. All must pursue one purpose.

"The nation needs all men, but it needs each man, not in the field that will most pleasure him, but in the endeavor that will best serve the common good.

"It is in no sense a conscription of the unwilling—it is rather selection from a nation which has volunteered in mass.

"The day here named is the time upon which all shall present themselves for assignment to their tasks.

"It is essential that the day be approached in thoughtful apprehension of its significance and that we accord to it the honor and the meaning that it deserves. Our industrial need prescribes that it be not made a technical holiday, but the stern sacrifice that is before us urges that it be carried in all our hearts as a great day of patriotic devotion and obligation when the duty shall lie upon every man, whether he is himself to be registered or not, to see to it that the name of every male person of the designated ages is written on these lists of honor.

"By the president:

"ROBERT LANSING,
"Secretary of State."

President Wilson directed that an expeditionary force of approximately a division of regular troops, under command of Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing, proceed to France at as early a date as practicable. General Pershing and staff will precede the troops.

A division contains approximately 28,000 men. It is understood that at least 20,000 will be infantry.

The war bill was carefully gone over during the day by Brigadier General Crowder, judge advocate general and provost marshal general.

It was announced that all existing regiments of the guard will be called into service by August 5, and officials estimate that with from a month to six weeks' intensive training these troops will be ready to go forward for final preparation behind the fighting lines in Europe for the fighting that is before them.

After the army bill had been perfected in both houses of congress and sent to President Wilson for signature the senate adopted an amendment to the war budget bill to put conscription out of force four months after the end of the war.

President's Statement.

The president issued the following statement at the White House:

"I shall not avail myself, at any rate, at the present stage of the war, of the authorization conferred by the act to organize volunteer divisions.

"To do so would seriously interfere with the carrying out of the chief and most immediately important purpose contemplated by this legislation:

"The prompt creation and early use of an effective army would contribute practically nothing to the effective strength of the armies now engaged against Germany.

"I understand that the section of this act which authorizes the creation of volunteer divisions in addition to the draft was added with a view to providing an independent command for Mr. Roosevelt and giving the military authorities an opportunity to use his fine vigor and enthusiasm recruiting the forces now at the western front.

"It would be very agreeable to me to pay Mr. Roosevelt this compliment and the allies the compliment of sending to their aid one of our most distinguished public men, an ex-president, who has rendered many conspicuous public services and proved his gallantry in many striking ways.

"Politically, too, it would no doubt have a very fine effect and make a profound impression. But this is not the time or the occasion for compliments or for any action not calculated to contribute to the immediate success of the war.

Seeks Advice From Both Sides.

"The business now in hand is undramatic, practical and of scientific definiteness and precision.

"I shall act with regard to it at every step and in every particular under expert and profession advice, from both sides of the water.

Says He Is Responsible.

"He named many of those whom he desired to have designated for the service and they were men who cannot possibly be spared from the too small force of officers at our command for the much more pressing and necessary duties of training regular troops to be put into the field in France and Belgium as fast as they can be got ready.

"The first troops sent to France will be taken from the present force of the regular army and will be under the command of trained soldiers only.

"The responsibility for the successful conduct of our part in this great war rests upon me. I could not escape it if I would. I am too much interested in the cause we are fighting for to be interested in anything but success.

"The issues involved are too immense for me to take into consideration anything whatever except the best, most effective, most immediate means of military action. What these means are I know from the mouths of men who have seen war as it is conducted, who have no illusions and to whom the whole grim matter is a matter of business. I shall center my attention upon those matters and let everything else wait. I should be deeply to blame should I do otherwise, whatever the argument of policy or of personal gratification of advantage."

RUSSIA WILL FIGHT TO RESCUE VICTIMS

Free Russia Will Not Leave Belgium, Serbia And Rumania Under German Yoke, Says Foreign Minister

NO DISHONORED REPUTATION

Armies Must Understand That Defeat Will Destroy Russia's New-Found Liberty

Petrograd.—Prince Lvoff, Russian premier, and M. Tereschtenko, the newly appointed foreign minister, has made long statements on the recent crisis and the policy of Russia. Prince Lvoff, after declaring that the nation had been brought to the edge of an abyss, said:

"The government considers that its first duty is to consolidate the fighting strength of the army, as well for safeguarding the conquests of restitution as for driving out the enemy and actively supporting the allies. The government considers that it is its duty to proclaim clearly and definitely its desire for the conclusion of a definite peace; but in speaking of peace without annexations or indemnities, the government declares it is not a question of passive defense. Free Russia will not consent to leave under the yoke of German militarism territories which were abandoned owing to the criminal negligence of the old regime. Neither can Russia remain indifferent to the fate of Belgium, Serbia and Roumania, nor forget its duties toward them. Russia cannot hand down to future generations a dishonored reputation.

"The existing armistice at the front, which gave the German chancellor a pretext to formulate his idea of a separate peace, dishonorable to Russia, must cease. The country must speak its imperious word and send its army out to fight."

Mr. Tereschtenko, in his statement of the policy of free Russia as outlined in the declaration of the provisional government, strongly emphasized the need of an indissoluble union with the allied democracies and the consciousness of the duty these ties impose upon her. He declared that it was a question of the honor of the revolution, which was more precious to Russia than ever.

Spain Is Menacing Toward Germany

Madrid.—The Spanish government's note to Germany concerning the attack by a German submarine on the Spanish steamer Patricio recalls that a number of notes of protest previously addressed to the German government still remain unanswered. It declares that the transaction of all diplomatic business with Germany will be suspended until replies are received to these, according to the newspapers.

It also demands the fulfillment of conditions agreed upon by the German government to prevent unwarned attacks by submarine on Spanish ships in safety zones and asks for an indemnity for the Patricio.

Does Not Mean Rupture

Paris.—Premier Prieto of Spain, speaking of the note addressed to the German government in connection with the submarine attack on the Spanish steamship Patricio, declared it was more energetic than has been customary, according to a Havas dispatch from Madrid, but that it does not mean a rupture of diplomatic relations.

SWEDEN IS BLAZING AGAINST GERMANY

Stockholm, Sweden.—News that the Swedish steamers Vesterland, Aspen and Viken, laden with grain from England, had been sunk by German submarines has been received here, and caused much indignation.

The arrival of the steamships, which were released under the recent reciprocal agreement freeing the entente allies' tonnage in the Bothnian gulf, had been eagerly awaited.

Former Minister of Marine Bostroem was the chief owner of the Vesterland while the Trans-Atlantic company of Gothenburg owned the Aspen and the Viken.

The message which told of the sinking said that eight members of the crew of the Viken and two of the men aboard the Vesterland had been lost.

U. S. Marines Will Go With Pershing

Washington.—Uniformed men, plotting America's war destinies behind barred doors, are hastening the labors that Old Glory might wave over France quickly and efficiently. Spurred by the fact that America's army raising is at last an accomplished fact, they planned the dispatch of the "first 25,000," under General Pershing's leadership and mapped matters of equipment and contingent forces. War wheels that had been stilled by congressional indolence whirred anew.

New York Germans Rush For Permits

New York.—New York Germans apparently believe the government is preparing for a wholesale internment of all enemy aliens. The rush for permits to enter barred doors around armories continues. If the present rate of 2,000 applicants a day continues, most of the Germans will soon be registered. Germans joining in the stampede for permits openly expressed fear that the restrictions will be extended until all are placed in internment camps.

RUSSIA GETS $100,000,000

U. S. Furnishing Powers At War With Central Empires With An Immense Amount Of Money

Washington.—The United States has loaned Russia one hundred million dollars.

The money was loaned to be spent as needed without stipulation or understanding further than Russia stand back of the obligation, that she will make it good and will spend the money in the country under the supervision of a representative of the treasury department or a commission to be named by the American government.

The latter stipulation was made in a spirit of co-operation, without intending to embarrass the Russian government or to curtail the purchasing powers, but with the end in view that Russia will secure the maximum result for the money she is to spend.

In this respect Russia stands on an equal footing with other entente governments to which the United States is making loans, the only distinction being that in application of the program Russia heads the list. Great Britain, France, Italy and other beneficiaries of American loans soon will follow, as plans mobilizing in American banks all purchases to be made here by the allies is rapidly nearing completion.

The purchasing board for all the allies, it was indicated, may be in operation within a month.

The loan to Russia, her first participation in the huge sum which the United States will lend the allies, was made, it was authoritatively stated, first to help the Russian government obtain supplies which she needs here and secondarily as an earnest manifestation to the Russian people that the United States places no credence in rumors that Russia is contemplating a separate peace with Germany.

A credit of forty-five million dollars to Belgium also was established by Secretary McAdoo, the sum to be withdrawn in six monthly installments of $7,500,000 each. The transaction brought the total of sums advanced and credits established by the government to entente nations up to $670,000,000 within weeks that have passed since President Wilson signed the war finance law.

UNITED STATES DESTROYERS ARE IN BRITISH WATERS

British Admiralty Reports One Of The American Vessels Has Encountered Submarine

Queenstown.—A squadron of American torpedo boat destroyers has safely crossed the Atlantic and is patrolling the seas in war service.

The American navy's actual entry into the war zone has already been productive of a bush between a destroyer and a German underwater boat, according to an announcement by the British admiralty, but the result of it has not been made public.

The destroyer squadron arrived in Queenstown after an uneventful voyage across the Atlantic, but almost immediately after a formal exchange of greetings with the British naval officials put to sea for the hard work that is before it.

A crowd of several hundred persons, some of them carrying tiny American flags, lined the water front and cheered the destroyers from the moment they first sighted the flotilla until it reached the dock.

ITALIANS ARE STRIKING AT THE AUSTRIAN LINES

Reported Considerable Ground Has Been Gained And Numbers Of Prisoners Taken

New York.—The Italians have assumed the offensive against the Austrians in the Isonzo region along a front of nearly 25 miles. Following extremely heavy bombardments the Italians loosed their infantry in frontal attacks and made considerable progress, at various points, according to the Italian official communication.

What had been everywhere thought to be a commencement of a strong offensive by the Germans against the British along the Lens-St. Quentin line and the French from the region northwest of Soissons into Champagne apparently was only one of the sporadic counter attacks which the Germans have been throwing against the fronts since the spring offensive began.

Losses By U-Boats Show Decrease

London.—The report of the week's losses through submarines is the most favorable in several weeks. The number of ships torpedoed is well below the average, while the number of ships escaping attack is very large. Those in touch with the anti-submarine campaign also are very cheerful over the results of actual attacks on submarines which have been pushed with the utmost vigor. According to one report, more submarines have been sunk in the last week than in the month previous.

Roosevelt Provision In Army Measure

Washington.—The war army bill will probably become a law within a few days, and the comprehensive plans of the war department for raising a force to fight Germany will be in motion. Conferees of senate and house agreed upon the bill deciding to retain the senate amendment under which Colonel Roosevelt may be authorized to raise not more than four divisions of infantry for service in France. The report will be taken up by the house, and its adoption there is expected to be followed quickly in the senate.

ATLANTA SWEPT BY FIRE; LOSSES HEAVY

SEVENTY-FIVE BLOCKS IN NORTH-EASTERN PART OF CITY IS DESTROYED.

MANY FAMILIES HOMELESS

Three Thousand Homes Go Up in Flames—Only One Fatality Reported.

Atlanta.—Fire that swept through approximately 75 blocks in the residence section of Atlanta, from Decatur street north and northeastward to Ponce de Leon avenue, caused a loss that Mayor Candler estimated at $3,000,000. One woman, Mrs. Bessie Hodges, died of shock and 60 were treated for minor hurts.

From 2500 to 3000 homes were destroyed, according to Mayor Candler and others who toured the littered zone around the burned district. The homes ranged from flimsy negro cabins to handsome residences along Ponce de Leon valued at $10,000 or more each. Many homes in this beautiful residence section were destroyed by dynamite which finally conquered the flames after the fire department, aided by fire fighters from half dozen nearby cities, had failed.

The burned area and a wide circle around it from which householders had been driven was guarded throughout the night by Georgia guardsmen and members of the officers' reserve training camp at Fort McPherson. Local police turned guard duty over to Colonel Noyes, U. S. A., in command of Fort McPherson training camp.

"German spies," was heard everywhere, and Fire Chief Cody intimated that he thought the flames might be incendiary. "I have made a thorough examinations of the entire section," Mayor Candler said in reply to questions on this subject, "and I can positively state the fire is not of incendiary origin."

Between Edgewood avenue and Decatur street at the start of the fire the flames confined themselves to the section between Boulevard and Hilliard street. At Edgewood they moved eastward as far as Prospect place in spots, wiping out a block now and then. Practically the entire section bounded by Hiliard street on the west, Prospect place in the east, Edgewood avenue on the north was laid to waste.

The blaze started in the Skinner Storage company's plant, which is almost surrounded by small frame houses.

When the flames had jumped across Edgewood avenue and were being driven with incrediable rapidity toward the better sections of the city, a general call for aid went out. Fire departments at Chattanooga, Macon, Augusta, Newnan, Ga., Marietta, Ga., and Griffin, Ga., were asked to send aid. Fort McPherson was called upon for all the men that could be spared; business houses were asked to send trucks to haul extra hose and any other supplies and private automobiles were offered by the score.

ANTI-TRUST SUITS HELD UP.

Supreme Court Orders Suits Against Big Corporations Reargued.

Washington—Anti-trust suits against the United States Steel corporation, the International Harvester company and the other big corporations were ordered reargued by the supreme court. As the court will adjourn for the term of June 11, court officials said it would probably be a year before decisions were returned.

The announcement apparently bears our reports current that opinions in the big antitrust suits would not be handed down at least until the country could readjust itself to war time conditions.

The other cases to be reargued are those against the United Shoe Machinery company and the Lehigh Valley and Reading railroads and affiliated coal companies, the so-called "anthracite coal trust."

PROPOSED COTTON TAX KILLED.

Under Rule Adopted Several Years Ago, Measure is Defeated.

Washington.—Congress will not tax cotton this year. The House, sitting as a committee of the whole, defeated the resolution of Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania. In regular session, on account of a rule of procedure, adopted under the leadership of Senator Underwood five years ago, the proposition cannot be reconsidered.

Wheels Used in Argentina.

Because some roads in Argentina have deeper dust in summer and deeper mud in winter than any others in the world, the wagons used on them have wheels from six to fifteen feet in diameter.

Work on Roads in 1915.

During 1915 the total road and bridge expenditures in the United States amounted to about $282,000,000, of which probably not over $15,000,000 represented the value of the statute and convict labor.

ROOSEVELT REFUSED FORCES

To Organize Volunteer Division Would Interfere With Purpose Of The Conscription Law

Washington.—President Wilson has accounted that Colonel Roosevelt will not be permitted to raise a division to go to France. He also announced at the same time that he will be unable to avail himself at this time of the authority given him by congress to organize volunteer divisions of any kind. This announcement was made after a conference with the French commission and American military experts.

Wilson's Statement

The president's statement is as follows:

"I shall not avail myself, at any rate at the present stage of the war of the authorization conferred by the act to organize volunteer divisions. To do so would seriously interfere with the carrying of the chief and most immediately important purpose contemplated by the legislation: The prompt creation and early use of an ineffective army would contribute practically nothing to the effective strength of the armies now engaged against Germany.

"I understand that the section of this act which authorizes the creation of volunteer divisions in addition to the draft was added with a view to providing an independent command for Roosevelt and giving the military authorities an opportunity to use his fine vigor and enthusiasm in recruiting the forces now at the western front. Politically, too, it would no doubt have a very fine effect and make a profound impression. But this is not the time or the occasion for compliment or for any action not calculated to contribute to the immediate success of the war. The business now in hand is undramatic, practical and of scientific definiteness and precision

"That advice is that the men most needed are men of the ages contemplated in the draft provisions of the present bill, not men of the age and sort contemplated in the section which authorizes the formation of volunteer units, and that for the preliminary training of the men who are to be drafted we shall need all of our experienced officers. Mr. Roosevelt told me when I had the pleasure of seeing him a few weeks ago that he would wish to have associated with him some of the most effective officers of the regular army. He named many of those whom he would desire to have designated for the service and they were men who cannot possibly be spared from the too small force of officers at our command for the much more pressing and necessary duty of training regular troops to be put into the field in France and Belgium as fast as they can be got ready. The first troops sent to France will be taken from the present forces of the regular army and will be under the command of trained soldiers only.

"The responsibility for the successful conduct of our own part in this great war rests upon me. I cannot escape it if I would. I shall center my attention upon those means and everything else wait. I should deeply to blame should I do otherwise, whatever the argument of policy or personal gratification or advantage."

Warships Manned By Picked Crews

Washington.—Formal announcement that American destroyers manned by picked crews have carried the flag into the war zones of Europe and are operating against German submarines with British and French war vessels was made by Secretary Daniels after the news had come from London. The number and names of the vessels were not disclosed. It was made clear, however, that the fighting power of the nation was to be exerted to its utmost to stamp out the U-boat menace.

Draft Slackers Can Be Easily Detected

Washington.—Slackers who seek to evade registration for the war army on the day to be set by President Wilson can be detected easily. A war department statement explains that lists of persons registered will be posted and all citizens who know of evasions are expected to report them. In failing to register, says the statement, a citizen "places himself cross-current to the overwhelming sentiment of the country as voiced by its representatives in congress. He casts doubt upon his courage.

British Troops Drive Bulgars Back

London.—British troops in Macedonia have made an important advance on the Doiran front and captured the village of Kjapri on the Struma front, it is announced officially. Advanced trenches on a front of 3,000 yards southwest of Ernekel also have been captured. Enemy trenches on a front of 5,000 yards to an average depth of, 500 yards, near Krastali, southwest of Lake Doiran, also were taken by the British and consolidated. On the Doiran front the British advanced southwest of Krastali 5,000 yards.

The Shielding Shadow

SYNOPSIS.

Adventurous Jerry Carson embarks in search of hidden treasure with the promise of Leontine Walcott to be his wife on his return. Her father favors Sebastian Navarre. Jerry's ship is burned, he is reported lost. Sebastian presses his attentions. Jerry suddenly turns up to confront charges of the Navarres against him. In a struggle for a forged paper Diego Navarre is killed and Jerry is convicted of the murder. He escapes, and finds the treasure and a wonderful chemical pellet. Leontine is forced to marry Sebastian. On the honeymoon, he attacks her in a rage. Suddenly he is confronted by a weird apparition. Ravengar forces a confession from Louie. Sebastian attempts to get it. An earthquake occurs; in the excitement Red Finn steals the confession and flees. He apears in New York as Romanoff and enlists the aid of Madame Bianca. Leontine confronts her husband in the gambling house. The Shadow battles for her and she escapes with the confession. One-Lamp Louie follows her and takes the paper from her. The Shadow saves Navarre from robbery. Romanoff attempts to kidnap Sebastian and Leontine, but Ravengar appears to thwart them. Bianca and her thugs are puzzled by Ravengar's repeated escapes and returns to his cellar prison. Leontine consents to accompany Hamilton on a balloon ascension. Sebastian drugs Hamilton and arranges to have Leontine set adrift in the balloon. The balloon bursts into flame and Leontine finds that her companion is Ravengar.

EIGHTH EPISODE

THE HAUNTED HAND.

Sebastian Navarre, seated in his study, took the clipping from the hand of Louie Lamb. It detailed briefly how a man and woman had been rescued from the wreck of a balloon by McQuarrie, the keeper of Pilot Light, five miles off the coast.

"It's them," said Louie, as Sebastian finished reading and handed back the clipping.

"Curse them!" said Sebastian with much feeling. "Why can't we ever get out of this tangle, Louie?"

Louie Lamb only looked at him quizzically.

"It's your wife and that man Ravengar," said Louie. "There ain't no doubt of it. The balloon caught fire, just as I had arranged, but they escaped. I guess they're immortal and there ain't no way of killing them off."

"Louie, you'll have to investigate this," said Sebastian.

"I guess I might," said Louie with a meaning smile.

"Well?" demanded Sebastian impatiently.

"But I ain't settling the overhead expenses of this partnership, senor. The price, if you please."

Sebastian pulled out his pocketbook and peeled off five one hundred-dollar bills. Louie looked at them, counted them, and slipped them into his pocket.

"I'll go and see," he said, rising.

"And if you find any way of getting rid of them, don't wait to telephone me first," said Sebastian sarcastically.

When Louie had gone he began pacing his study with feverish anxiety. Everything seemed going wrong. Since he had sent his rival, Jerry Carson, to prison, and married Leontine, he had regretted his participation in the crime times without number. He had tired of Leontine, but she had refused to divorce him until he had confessed to his share in the conspiracy against Jerry, her dead lover.

Then there arose before his mental [illegible] the face of Bianca, the beautiful [illegible] for whose sake he had aban[illegible] his hopes of reconciliation with [illegible]ife. Bianca! His face softened. [illegible] would help him out of his trou[illegible]s. He would ask her to come away with him somewhere where they could both start their lives anew together.

He put on his hat and made his way toward Bianca's house.

Bianca, meanwhile, was in the midst of one of those domestic scenes that were so harrowing to her followers.

It was several days since she had trapped Ravengar in her cellar. The man's mysterious disappearances and reappearances had seemed to her superstitious mind proof of some occult power wielded by him.

She had gone down to the cellar to make him a final proposition, not less than the entire offer of her heart and fortune. His love seemed to her the only thing in life just then.

And she had found the cell empty. Ravengar had escaped, in spite of locks and padlocks, and a triple guard of Chinese attendants.

She called her followers and overwhelmed them with her fury.

In the midst of the scene Sebastian's card was presented to her. Instantly she grew calm. Bianca's head ruled her heart. Though she loved Ravengar, she was well aware that she could bring Sebastian to her feet at any moment.

She dismissed Ravengar from her mind temporarily and, a few minutes later was greeting Sebastian with an alluring smile that conveyed, in a woman's subtle manner, the possibility of more than the conventionality of the welcome disclosed.

"I am in trouble," began Sebastian.

Bianca seated herself upon the lounge beside him. "Tell me your trouble, Senor Navarre," she said, bending toward him.

* * * * * * *

Through the terrific storm that beat about the lighthouse Leontine was conscious only of supreme happiness in Ravengar's presence.

Now, fully restored after their experiences in the burning balloon, Leontine and Ravengar sat together in the little round room on the bottom floor of the lighthouse, while Keeper McQuarrie and his wife busied themselves with the meal that they were making ready for their guests above.

Ravengar had taken Leontine's hand in his and he was looking into her eyes.

"I'm glad you trust me," he was saying. "Madame Navarre, I know more of your life than you suppose. I know that you are nominally married to a man you detest, whose conduct has been unbearable. I know that he won your hand by fraud."

The tears streamed down Leontine's cheeks. "I have nobody to trust but you. I am always grateful to you for your kindness," she answered.

"Kindness?" asked Ravengar. "Dear Leontine, I am conscious of stronger feelings than those you attribute to me. I love you, Leontine."

She could not help but listen to him. There was that in his manner which robbed his words of insult, though she was a married woman. She knew that Ravengar would be faithful unto death, would be content to give all and to ask nothing.

Gently she withdrew her hand from his.

"Mr. Ravengar, you know that I am married," she said. "Unhappily married—yes, but legally bound. And I have a mission to perform. Until the memory of Jerry Carson is cleared I cannot even take the first steps toward securing a divorce from my husband. He alone can aid me by confessing the part he played in that tragedy. The clearing of Jerry Carson's memory means everything in the world to me, more even than life itself."

Ravengar remained silent for a moment.

"Leontine," he said presently, "I think I love you the more because of your loyalty to that lost sweetheart of yours."

Suddenly Leontine's eyes wandered toward the little slit of a window which gave upon the raging seas. In a blinding flash of lightning she distinctly saw the face of Louie Lamb pressed close against the pane.

She screamed. Ravengar ran over to the window. Nothing was to be seen there.

"Find him!" cried Leontine. "It is one of my husband's spies. He has tracked us here!"

With a bound Ravengar was at the door. He rushed out into the raging storm, slipping and stumbling over the sea-washed rocks. But there was nothing except the whipping wind and the raging sea. He turned back and reentered the lighthouse. Leontine was crouching, trembling, against the wall.

"It was nothing, Leontine," he said. "You were overwrought. There is nobody outside. There could be nobody."

Leontine had not been mistaken. Louie had started in an open boat from the mainland before the storm reached its height.

He beached his boat in a dry cave and started to investigate the lighthouse. A brief glance through the window had shown him that those whom he sought were inside.

Fascinated, he saw Ravengar take Leontine by the hand. This amused Louie. He watched them till the sudden flash of lightning revealed him to the girl.

Louie saw that he was discovered, and bolted for the cave. Fearing Ravengar, he crouched low there, hearing him pass and repass upon the rocks outside.

Suddenly he heard a rending noise without. In spite of his terror, Louie crawled through the wet shingle at the mouth of the cave to investigate. A bolt had struck the upper portion of the lighthouse, which had fallen into the water. And the lightning played about the ruined structure, in the basement of which Leontine cowered at Ravengar's side.

Suddenly another bolt hit the displaced stones and mortar at the top of the shaft. For an instant there was a profound silence; then Louie saw that the entire structure was leaning toward him.

He shrieked and dived for his cave. He was just in time. For, with a mighty roar the ruins of the lighthouse toppled, collapsed, and went crashing to the rocks, a mass of shapeless debris.

At dawn Louie stretched himself and went out of the cave.

He started to investigate. The lowest story of the tower was still intact. The bolt which had struck the lighthouse had snapped it off above that point bodily. But if anyone survived within that sealed chamber, escape was impossible for him.

Then Louie came upon the crushed bodies of Keeper McQuarrie and his wife, lying half-buried beneath the debris.

He was quite satisfied now. Leontine and Ravengar would trouble him no more.

* * * * * * *

"You swear that you saw their bodies in the ruins?" asked Sebastian of Louie eagerly.

"I saw them lying dead together," answered the little crook.

"Good Lord! It's terrible!" muttered Sebastian.

"Make yourself at home, Louie," cried Sebastian in exultation. "Help yourself to the cigars. I've got to go out. I'll be back in a couple of hours, and then we can go a little deeper into matters."

Sebastian hastened to Bianca's house. A little surprised at another visit from him so soon, Bianca nevertheless put on her prettiest dress and entered the reception room in which he was waiting.

"Bianca, I am free," he cried, catching her by the hands. "My wife has just been killed in an accident. Will you marry me now?"

"Yes, I will be your wife, Sebastian," she answered, putting her arms about his neck. Her head drooped forward upon his shoulder. She raised her face and smiled into his. Sebastian caught her in his arms and kissed her madly.

Suddenly a look of terror came over Bianca's face. She was staring into a far corner of the room. "Look there!" she almost screamed.

Sebastian started round. He saw a pair of eyes and a white hand that had apparently arisen out of nothing. The eyes were glaring at him, and the fingers of the hand, raised threateningly, were outstretched toward him. Then, as he watched, the vision was dissolved.

For a moment the man and the woman cowered in terror.

Bianca staggered to his side. "What does it mean?" she whispered, shaking with terror.

Sebastian put his arm about her. "I don't know, Bianca," he answered. "But I'm not afraid of it, whatever it is. It hasn't harmed me yet, and I guess it never will."

"Then—you have seen it before?" Bianca whispered.

"And you?" demanded Sebastian in astonishment.

And, as they looked at each other, the past of each rose up and confronted them, and the two lives seemed to be linked in the same destiny.

* * * * * * *

Louie was not in the house when Sebastian returned. Tired of waiting, the little crook had gone to his hotel. And there he, too, was linked in with the web now being swiftly woven about his confederate.

It was on the next night that Louie received a brief note from Sebastian announcing the latter's marriage on the following evening to Bianca, and inviting him to attend at his bride's house. Louie read the note and grinned.

"I guessed as much. Well, he ain't lost any time," he said to himself.

Nevertheless, he felt pleased at the invitation.

Suddenly his eye caught something in the opposite corner. It was the mystic hands and eyes, and the eyeballs moved as if strung on wires.

Louie rushed frantically into the corner, striking out right and left with his fists, dashing them fruitlessly against the walls. The eyes and hands had disappeared. He drew back and stared in amazement at the wallpaper.

Suddenly he saw the hand again—the hand, no longer the eyes. It seemed poised in the air above the table at which he had been seated. It descended, picked up a pen, and began to write something upon the letter from Sebastian.

Louie rushed over to the table. As he reached it the pen was flung down and the hand vanished. Louie picked up the letter. In a different writing he found the following postscript:

"If Sebastian marries Bianca you will die."

Louie shrank back in overwhelming terror. Then, assuming an air of bravado, he picked the letter from the table and crumpled it in his hand.

Suddenly a hand inserted itself in the back of his collar and forced him to his knees. Louie screamed as he fought in vain in the grasp of his invisible assailant. And as suddenly he was released and sent sprawling upon the floor.

As he tried to raise he saw the finger pointing to the postscript of the letter.

He rose from his knees and stood staring like one bereft of reason at the supernatural writing.

* * * * * * *

Nobody had missed Louie at Bianca's house, or thought anything of his absence. The invitation which Sebastian had flung to him in the exuberance of his happiness had already passed from Sebastian's mind. He was about to start with Bianca and the wedding party for the church when Louis Lamb was announced; and Bianca waited in poorly concealed impatience for the little man to enter.

"You two ain't going to get married," he announced truculently.

"Why not Louie?" inquired Sebastian, thinking that the crook had already begun to celebrate the occasion.

"I got my reasons, that's all," Louie replied. "If you try it I'll split everything. You're a forger, and you'll go to jail. See?"

Louie thrust his jaw forward almost into Sebastian's face. Sebastian took him by the arm.

"What's the trouble, Louie?" he inquired. "Go home, my boy. Take my advice, now, and go home."

"I tell you, you two ain't going to get married," shouted Louie.

Instantly Sebastian's anger was kindled in answer to the other man's. He seized Louie by the throat and flung him to the floor.

Bianca laid her hand lightly on Sebastian's arm.

"Let us be starting, dear," she said. "There is no need to pay further attention to this fool."

Then, seeing that Sebastian hesitated, she added:

"What is the matter? You don't really think he means any mischief?"

"He—he means what he says," answered Sebastian.

For the first time Bianca sensed some purpose in Louie's folly. She was a woman of determination. She glanced at the little crook and made a swift decision. She turned to one of her attendants.

Louie, glancing at her, saw a slight movement of her lips and fingers. Criminal as he was, and versed in the ways of crime, he knew what that sign meant. It was the death sign. Bianca was taking no chances on the threshold of her marriage.

Louie, staring at the man, saw him nod in answer to Bianca's signal. Bianca turned to Louie once more.

"Did you mean what you said?" she demanded, "about sending Senor Navarre to jail if he marries me?"

"Yes," snapped Louie.

The two men came forward and took Louie by the arms. He went with them quietly into the next room. One of them released his prisoner to open the secret panel. Instantly Louie struck the other in the face, felling him to the ground. Free for the moment, Louie drew a revolver and fired at the second man point blank.

The party in the inner room rushed in to see one of the two men struggling to his feet and the second writhing in his own blood. Louie had escaped through the open panel.

He found himself in Bianca's boudoir. He dashed for the door. But Sebastian was quicker. Before he could turn the handle he was upon him.

Louie was not a brave man, but had seen the sign, and fear rendered him desperate. He dashed his fists into Sebastain's face, knocking him to the floor. He bounded toward the window and flung it open. As Sebastian regained his feet the party, entering, saw Louie spring to the window sill.

Bianca, standing at the doorway, placed her fingers upon a little knob, apparently an electric bell. Instantly a huge shutter of steel snapped down into place before the window, blocking Louie's escape. Another inch or two, and Louie would have been decapitated.

"Get him now!" commanded Bianca in crisp tones of command.

Louie leaped for the nearest man and, with a strength which he had not known he possessed, swung him before him as a shield against the half-circle of revolvers covering him. He edged toward the door again, the man struggling helplessly in Louie's grip.

They fell to the floor together, clawing at each other like wild beasts. None of the others dared to shoot, so violent were their movements.

Bianca calmly watched the performance. The men were working their way toward the center of the floor, where was the trap door which had shot Ravengar into the cellar below. Bianca pressed another button, and the door disclosed a yawning cavity in the middle of the floor.

The watchers held their breath as the two men, still engaged in their furious struggle, neared the cavity. Louie was nearer, and it seemed incredible that he could escape. But he, maddened by the double fear that held him, seemed to have a hundred eyes and senses. With an adroit leap he bounded from the very edge of the cavity and pushed his companion down.

He rose with one eye blackened, bleeding and disheveled. He was covered by a circle of revolvers. Escape now seemed impossible. All waited for Bianca's signal to fire.

And the little crook, fairly cornered, stood defiant in the middle of the room, beside the open door, which would at any instant become the roof of his burial vault. There was only one chance in a million of Louie's escape.

But the one chance arrived. For, as Louie stood there, his eyes shifting from face to face, he became aware of an extraordinary phenomenon which nobody else perceived. A hand, and nothing but a hand, marble-white, mansize, was approaching the switch which controlled the electric lights in the room. And Louie, watching it out of the corner of his eye, was coolly calculating whether it would snap the button before Bianca dropped her hand.

He saw Bianca straighten herself. The hand wavered. An then, before it fell, the lights went out with a click that sounded like a pistol shot.

The pistol shots themselves followed the sudden plunging of the room into darkness. Louie heard them crack around him, heard the hiss of the bullets, and then he made with almost noiseless, catlike steps for the secret panel.

A moment later Bianca had found the switch, and the lights went on again. Louie was not in the room.

"To the panel!" she shouted furiously.

Louie, gaining the adjacent house, had slipped behind the curtains that hung beside the doorway. Crouching there, he saw the chase go past him.

One man had not followed the others in their fruitless chase through the gambling house. That man was Sebastian. He came out behind the others, and his mind was hard at work. What madness had animated Louie?

At any rate, the same madness had made his continued existence a constant peril to him.

Therefore Louie must die. And, leaving the chase to the others, he passed slowly through the panel after them, wondering whether Louie might not have found refuge in the inner room.

At that moment he saw fresh bloodstains on the wall, and the position and shape of the splashes indicated clearly the direction from which they had come.

He turned and opened the curtains, disclosing Louie crouching behind them.

Again Louie was too quick for him. As Sebastian stood there the little crook leaped forward, tearing down the curtains, flinging them over Sebastian, and winding them about his body.

Then, in a flash, while the shouts of the pursuers still echoed through the empty gambling rooms, Louie had darted up the stairs. At the head of the flight he paused and looked back for an instant, to see Sebastian freeing himself, and the party of his pursuers, headed by Bianca, appear from the gambling rooms. He saw Sebastian point after him.

A revolver cracked and a bullet chipped a piece of plaster from the wall beside Louie's head. Then Bianca's harsh voice sounded from below:

"Put back that gun! Do you want to draw the police down on us?"

They dashed upstairs, but Louie had the start of a whole flight, and fear lent him wings. He was on the top story now, and ascending the ladder which led to the scuttle in the roof. He had reached the scuttle when his pursuers arrived at the foot of the ladder.

Louie emerged into the open air. Without stopping to replace the scuttle he dashed across the roof. The night air beat upon his face and gave him courage. Below him he heard the myriad-voiced hum of the city. Freedom seemed assured at last.

The building was perhaps eighteen stories in height, one of the tall and ancient mansions of the past which still abound in the districts between the residential and the encroaching shops. It was separated from that adjacent by about twenty feet. This was not too far to leap, had Louie opportunity to make a running start. But as he looked back from the edge of the roof he saw Bianca leap to the top of the ladder.

Then Louie's eyes fell upon a long and narrow girder that ran from roof to roof. It was about four inches wide, a bridge, but such a bridge as tradition says the pious Moslem must cross after death on his journey heavenward.

It could hardly be negotiated by anyone but a steeplejack. And it could not be negotiated slowly. A man, to cross that bridge, must cross like a somnambulist, rushing it, so to speak, before giddiness overcame him.

Louie hesitated and glanced back. The little group of those pursuing him had begun to emerge. A man dashed past Bianca and toward him. It was Sebastian.

Louie dashed for the girder and began to cross, planting his feet sidewise, like a balancing acrobat.

Sebastian wavered half as long as Louie had done. In that moment he saw the entire situation. If he could stop Louie from crossing, the future was assured. If Louie crossed, he would be a ruined outcast.

Sebastian rushed at Louie across the girder.

Bianca and her companions stood like statues at the sheer horror of the scene. Upon that frail and narrow pathway, oblivious of their danger, the two men were fighting out their quarrel. It was their very heedlessness of the danger that for a few moments lent them security. They swayed and staggered, lost their footing and recovered it, balancing themselves in the most marvelous way; and all the while their hands sought each other's throats, and their bodies swung and clung and twisted.

Sebastian had Louie by the throat, and, forgetful of everything but his need for safety, was trying to fling him to the street below. Louie, of slighter build, was struggling desperately for life, trying to force away Sebastian's hands. And neither of them seemed to know where he was fighting.

For once Bianca was at a loss. There was nothing that she could do except to watch hopelessly. For it seemed impossible that either of the two men could return across that razor edge in safety.

She did not love Sebastian, but she respected him in a way, as far as one criminal can respect another; and she coveted the wealth and the position that he could bring her.

The seconds seemed hours, and still the furious battle raged. Louie had got Sebastian's hands from his throat, and, with an expression of the utmost frenzy, was endeavoring to trip him with his knee.

He jerked it upward spasmodically, standing on one leg like a crane; while Sebastian, with feet planted firmly, and a little outspread, was rocking backward and forward, balancing himself by his grip upon his enemy's body.

If he succeeded in throwing Louie over he must inevitably overbalance himself and fall likewise, even if Louie did not drag him with him.

A scream forced itself from Bianca's throat. She ran to the edge of the roof. "Sebastian!" she cried. "Sebastian! Louie! Come back, both of you. Louie, you shall come to no harm, I swear!"

Neither of the men heard her. There they wrestled, their faces set like those of marionettes. And yet the struggle seemed an even one, Sebastian's superior strength balancing Louie's fury.

Once Sebastian staggered, and both his feet seemed to slip from the girder; but he regained his purchase in time, and renewed his effort to force Louie's legs from under him. Then Louie suddenly doubled himself and shot his head forward like a battering ram. It struck Sebastian full in the chest. He gasped, staggered, swayed, and suddenly collapsed.

His both feet left the girder. He was falling through the air. Then with a miracle of dexterity, he caught at the girder with one hand, found it, pushed the other upward and tightened the fingers of this one too about the steel.

There he swung, high above the deserted street, moving to and fro with the rhythmical movements of a pendulum.

Now the way was free for Louie to cross. But the little crook saw and knew nothing except the face of his enemy beneath him. He stood still in the center of the girder, as calmly as if he were on level ground. He grinned into Sebastian's face and, very deliberately, raised his heel and stamped on Sebastian's fingers.

Sebastian's hands shifted as Louie's heel came down on them again and again. Fortunately for him the blows had little effect, for Louie's strength of muscle was absorbed in the unconscious maintenance of his balance. Sebastian's hands moved, and he would swing first by one hand and then by the other.

His brain alone seemed clear, and all thoughts for his fate had disappeared. It mattered nothing to him now what happened; his supreme desire was to fling Louie down, even if he died with him.

Suddenly he realized that the movements of Louie's foot had become perfectly automatic. Louie did not know whether he was stamping on Sebastian's hands or not, the heel always descending in the same place. Louie had, in fact, hypnotized himself, as is well known to be frequent among rope walkers. That accounted for his strange rigidity of body, the ease with which he sustained his purchase upon the girder.

Sebastian swung by his hands a little distance further along the beam. Louie had not moved to follow him, and always the heel went up and down.

Sebastian crooked his elbow and drew himself up. He gained the girder, got his foothold, and crept like a panther toward Louie. He seized him in his arms.

Louie awoke too late. A piercing cry left his lips. The next instant the body, flung from Sebastian's arms, hurtled through the air and rushed down toward the street below, while Sebastian tottered across the girder, reached the roof of the gambling house, and sank exhausted at Bianca's feet.

Bianca, who had been near to swooning, rushed to him, kneeled down, and bent over him.

"Well done!" she said. "Well done!"

At the sound of her voice Sebastian rose to his feet, glaring at her.

"I have killed a man tonight," he snarled. "If it had not been for you I should never have added murder to my other crimes."

"It was self-defense, Sebastian. We can swear to it if ever suspicion falls upon any of us. It is nothing, Sebastian."

But he broke down, sobbing, and the tears streamed down his face. In the reaction from the nervous tension Sebastian's emotional nature found full expression. "I have killed a man," he moaned, wringing his hands.

Bianca slipped her hand through his arm. But he shook her roughly away and gained the ladder, descended it, passed down the stairs, and found himself upon the street.

Now the episodes of the evening seemed like a dream to him. He had gone there to be married, a little more than an hour before; he was leaving as he had come, and, in the interval, he had committed murder.

He tried to brace himself, but he staggered drunkenly along the street toward his home. In that short walk all the man's past life seemed to walk in procession before him. There were women whom he had betrayed, men whom he had wronged; and, above all the rest, the most deeply implanted, the proud and loving face of Leontine whose life he had ruined.

The love upon that face had never been for him. It had been a dead man's love, and the thought had maddened him and driven him on and on in his career. Now Leontine was dead, and every scheme of his had come to ashes.

"It almost makes me believe in God," he muttered, as, gaining his house at last, he set his key into the door.

A single light burned in the study. The servants had been sent away, except the caretaker; Sebastian's baggage was awaiting him at the station with Bianca's. A bitter jest!

He flung himself down in his library chair and his mind went roving over the situation. Murder in place of forgery! Which was the worse?

Suddenly he started up, trembling violently. Out of the brilliance of the electrically-lighted room a white hand had appeared, the fingers holding a note scribbled on a sheet of his own writing paper. The hand laid down the message and disappeared.

Trembling in every limb Sebastian took up the paper and read:

"Think not your guilt will go unpunished."

He sprang to his feet, at bay now, as Louie had been. It seemed beyond reason, the fantasy of a brain disordered by all that had occurred that night. But had it occurred? Might he not be going insane? Might he not have dreamed it all? Was Leontine dead, or had he dreamed that too?

He tore the note to pieces and flung the scraps into the waste basket. He made his way to the library door and opened it, to recoil with a scream of terror.

In the chair beside the fire Leontine was seated, bending forward in a thoughtful attitude. As he entered she turned her face toward him.

Sebastian sprang forward toward her. "Leontine!" he screamed.

She raised her eyes to his.

"You are dead! You died when Pilot Light was struck by lightning!"

She shook her head, and Sebastian, incapable of speech, fell into the chair beside her.

Here is betting that Teddy can whip any three of the men who are keeping him out of war.

And still the government departments make announcements that they are making plans to begin preparations. It is to be hoped that the Germans will wait for us to get ready.

We are glad of the haul made by the Clanton bunch of Red Men at the Great Council meeting in Birmingham Tuesday. They did things in real spirit of Waxahatchie Tribe No. 9, viz: "Go after what you want, and don't stop till you get it." As the result of such a spirit instituted in the Tribe a long time ago, aside from many other things of merit, that have been accomplished from that time, our representatives to the Great Council return with the gratifying news that W. J. Armstrong was elected Great Sachem of the Order of Red Men in Alabama, without opposition. And also, they report that the next annual meeting of the Great Council was secured for Clanton. These two attainments are worth much of the long, streneous efforts that have been put forth here in the interest of the order. Clanton in general and the Red Men most particularly, are and should be proud of these two most remarkable destinctions.

MISJUDGED DURING LIFE.

Kinder judgment attended Joseph B. Foraker in death than followed him in life. He retired from tthe Senate under an unjust imputation that he had mingled his Senatorial position with his activity as a lawyer. There was no truth in it; but the charge came at a periood when to have been employed in any capacity by the Standard Oil Company was to receive the implication of illegality. The years have brought us a better knowledge, which while it did not benefit Senator Foraker politically, has nevertheless had a good effect upon the habit of hasty judgment of which he was a victim.

NO ROOM FOR JEALOUSY.

It is probable that Joe Leiter's distinguished brother-in-law, Lord Curzon, now a member of the British government, will not agree with Joe in his opinion that Col. T. Roosevelt should not take an American division to France. Both French and English are anxious to have American co-operation in the trenches at the earliest possible moment. There are military and moral results to be derived from American participation in the war; and it is axiomatic in warfare that moral and military advantages should be seized upon and utilized at the earilest possible opportunity. And the Colonel presents such an opportunity. Our Allies ask for it. Why should jealousy be permitted to stand in the way?

WISE END BY UNWISE MEANS

Senator Sheppard of Texas, a very good man in most ways, and a very loyal Democrat, recently introduced in the Senate a resolution starting out with the declaration that "development of manufacturing processes is one of the most important and powerful means of increasing the nation's efficiency, wealth and prosperity." because of which he asks for the creation of a 'Bureau of Manufactures.'

What Senator Sheppard says about the importance of manufactures is true—absolutely true. Quite likely there is need of a bureau of manufacturing. But the remarkable circumstance is that, although Senator Shep pard is impressed with the importance of manufacturing enterprises at the present time, he overlooks it at times when tariff laws are under consideration. The great purpose of a protective tariff is to develop not only manufacturing enterprises, but all other enterprises suited to the climate, resources, and other conditions prevailing in the United States.

It has been frequently remarked, and is undoubtedly true, that the Dem ocratic party exhibits little interest in any movement or legislation unless it promises to provide new offices for deserving democrats. It is not surprising therefore, that Senator Sheppard, who as above marked, is always a loyal Democrat, should turn to new offices as a means of aiding manufactures.

That ought to be the last recourse, for obvious reasons. In the first place, if we are to have such a bureau, it should be under the control of men who know manufacturing from the standpoint of successful experience. But men who have made a success in manufacturing are not likely to be attracted by the public payroll. Neither is the Democratic party, judging by its past record, likely to place on the payroll, men who have made a success in private productive industry. Moreover, if a man has demonstrated his capacity for successful management of manufacturing enterprises, he should be encouraged to continue therein, and teaching his subordinates how to be successful at similar undertakings of their own.

In the accomplishment of such a result, there could be nothing more effective than the re-establishment of a protective tariff, which would guarantee the American producer against ruinous competition from the cheap labor and materials of countries in which lower standards of living prevail.

A protective tariff would not require any new offices. It would require no aditional public building for the housing of public bureaus. It would take nobody out of the productive industry. It would help fill the public treasury. It would insure American workmen more constant labor. It would assure the stability of large investments in manufacturing. It would as Senator Shepherd desires, "develop the most important and powerful means of increasing the nation's efficiency, wealth and prosperity."

All these things are obviously true. The only reason why Senator Shepard and his colleagues in congress will not admit them and act accordingly is that the protective tariff is peculiarly a Republican doctrine and the Democrats are too intensely partisan to accept truth from Republican sources.

FEAGIN'S NEWSLETTER NO. 69

War and Education.

There is a new compelling and unanswerable argument for education in the method of selecting commissioned officers for the new army. We trust that this object lesson will not be lost upon Alabama boys. No matter how wealthy a boy's parents might be he could not be admitted to the training school for officers unless he was educated. No matter how much influence his people might have a boy could not get in unless he had at least a high school education. And no matter how poor or obscure a boy might be, the first door was open to him if he could prove his education.

In these days to lead other men, a man must be educated.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Definitions of Education.

Sitting around a table not long ago was a group of school men from several different states. In discussing the objects of education, the following statements were made by different men:

"Education is that which trains us to do what we ought to do when it ought to be done, whether we want to do it or not."

"Education is the gumption one has when he has forgotten."

"Education is what trains us to do the right at the right time without thinking of it."

"Education is to train us to get along without a teacher."

"Education is to enlarge opportunity; to give capacity for work, not to relieve the necessity for it."

"Education is to train us to live among civilized people. Social efficiency is the test."

"The great exclusive end of high school education is to help the student to find his place in the world and to use that place as the vantage ground from which to make that world over into a better and fairer one."

"Every bit of education should be to make us more intelligent about the life we are to live."

"The supreme object of education should be to make the next generation better than the living generation."

"We must have ideals if our work is to lead anywhere. Have you any ideals or are you just 'keeping school' for the salary?"—High School Quarterly.

Montgomery, Ala., May 10, 1917—

Hon. W. F. Feagin, Supt. of Education, Capitol.

Dear Sir:

In reply to your inquiry of April 26th, as to whether or not pupils may be required to pay a reasonable incidental fee in the public schools during the compulsory attendance period, when the compulsory attendance law becomes effective, December 31st next, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

In the case of Bryant V. Whisenant, 167 Ala. decided May 12, 1917, the Supreme Court had under consideration a rule or regulation adopted by the County Board of Calhoun County, authorizing the district trustees of public schools "to assist an incidental fee from each pupil of not less than twenty-five cents, nor more than one dollar; provided the children of indignant parents may be excused from paying this fee." In commenting on the power to enforce this rule, Chief Justice, Anderson, speaking for the court, said:

"And when the statue makes no provision for a fund for this purpose, the county boards have the right to prescribe a reasonable method for the raising and collection of this fund, and to delegate the authority to the district board and teachers to enforce such rule. We also think that the requirement of a reasonable incidental fee for this purpose, as a condition precedent to attendance, is contemplated by the statute, in the absence of any special provision for same."

And the court further held that the provision in question was a reasonable one.

At this time this provision was adopted, there was in effect, as part of Section 1776 of the code of 1917, the following:

"And no school monies distributed to the various counties from the state school revenue shall, either directly or indirectly, be paid for the erection of schoolhouses, for the use of school room furniture, or any other contingent expenses of the schools."

But under the compulsory attendance statute, approved September 15, 1915, (Acts 1915, p. 534), after Oct. 1, 1917, the public policy of the state will be to compel attendance at a school of children who are within the school age; so that, after that time, any rule or regulation which will prevent the attendance of children, within the school age, from attending the public school, will be imperrative against the public policy of the state.

But it cannot be said that such a rule or regulation as that considered on the Bryant V. Whisenant case, supre, would have the effect of nullifying the compulsory attendance statute, because the rule of regulation there considered is saved from being inimical to the compulsory attendance statute by the proviso that children of indignent parents may be excused from paying incidental fees.

However, it must be remembered that when the supreme court held that a reasonable incidental fee might be charged, there was no provision of law providing the necessary fund for incidental purposes out of the public revenue; and that, when the compulsory attendance statute goes into effect, instead of the law prohibiting the use of any state school revenue for contingent expenses of schools, there will be in effect the act approved August 16, 1915 (Acts 1915, p. 281), which provides that county boards of education shall "erect, repair, and furnish schoolrooms, fix the wages of employees, determine all incidental expenses and have control of the public school funds of the county, except as otherwise provided for by law."

The authority of the county board to assess and collect an incidental fee, cannot therefore be passed for this purpose as in Bryant V. Whisenant case, supre.

Finally, as the recent statute places the entire control of the public school funds of the county in the hands of the county boards of education and gives them the right to determine all incideltal expenses, it results that whatever the county boards determine as to the incidental expenses, will be held valid; for in each instance they may determine that incidental expenses are to be paid out of the public revenue and what, if any, shall be assessed and collected from the pupils; provided that any rules and regulations which they may invoke for the assessment on these pupils, whose circumstances are such that the imposition of the incidental fee would prevent attendance.

Yours very truly

DURING the past sixteen years the L. & N. has hauled through the South 133,796,950 tons of coal, for industrial and domestic purposes. If this vast tonnage were loaded into L. & N. modern, all-steel 50-ton coal cars it would require 2,675,939 such cars to hold the coal. If these cars were coupled they would make a single train extending practically around the world. Good service at remarkably low rates was rendered on this enormous volume of traffic which involved millions of detail and supplied lucrative employment and support to hundreds of thousands of people of the South. Increased facilities are added as fast as L. & N. earnings permit.

Coal is essential to industry and personal comfort. It is therefore a commodity carrying an extremely low freight rate. And yet during sixteen years 32.5 per cent of L. & N. freight service was rendered to the people of the South on this necessity at an extremely low rate. This is practical, constructive co-operation.

In addition to distributing this enormous amount of coal, the L. & N. paid $43,082,955.39 for fuel which has afforded employment and financial revenue to the coal mines of the South, and has been the means of distributing millions of dollars among the merchants and manufacturers.

Physicians all over the World are prescribing Phosphates to build up run-down enemic conditions and those who have treated their patients with Argo-Phosphate are changing thin enemic women

Lowest cost per pound of real roughage

OLD style hulls cost more per pound of roughage than the price per ton indicates. This is because they are one-fourth lint which has no food value. To know how much each pound of roughage in this form is costing you, you must divide the price per ton by 1500—not by 2000.

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

cost exactly what you pay for them. Every pound is all roughage—no useless lint. To really know the difference in cost between old style hulls and Buckeye Hulls you must know the cost per pound of real roughage.

Even though Buckeye Hulls do sell at a much lower price than old style hulls, you can't realize how much less they are costing you until you consider how much more real roughage a ton contains.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls go farther.
They allow better assimilation of other food.
No trash or dust.
Sacked—easy to handle.
They mix well with other forage.
Take half as much space in the barn.

Mr. Dan Wolf, Hammond Bldg. & Mfg. Co., Hammond, La., says:
"I am feeding Buckeye Hulls to milch cows and find them a satisfactory filler when mixed with cottonseed meal and other concentrates. At the present price of feed stuff, Buckeye Hulls are the cheapest roughage on the market."

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

RAILROAD ENGINEERS OUT WITH STATEMENT

Men in the Cabs From Many States Declare That Tanlac Conserves the Health of Railroad Men and Makes Them Fit for Responsible Duties in Most Nerve-Racking Service.

NO calling demands a clearer brain, steadier nerves, a more perfect state of health than that of a railroad engineer. The safety of thousands depends on guarding his health, which is as important to the public as the efficiency of his engine. Every engineer realizes this enormous responsibility, he dares not take chances with so important a matter. That is why so many of them are using Tanlac—it steadies the nerves, clears the brain, corrects indigestion, strengthens the arm, insures the safety of the traveler, and keeps him on his job.

Railroad engineers everywhere indorse Tanlac because they have tried it and know. Read what they say.

W. L. Nabers, Atlanta, Ga., engineer Southern Railway, says: "I had lost appetite—liver and kidneys deranged—since taking Tanlac haven't had a pain—gained 14 pounds."

L. C. Bowers, 910 First avenue, south, Nashville, Tenn., engineer Tennessee Central, says: "Stomach trouble and nervousness overcome—nothing too good I can say about Tanlac—gained 8 pounds."

D. A. Middleton, 1717 Chenovert Street, Houston, Tex., engineer Southern Pacific, says: "Was in bad shape—couldn't walk—Tanlac built me up like new man—gained 11 pounds."

T. G. Ayers, 107 Raines avenue, Nashville, Tenn., engineer Louisville and Nashville, says: "Kidney trouble, nervousness, poor appetite—Tanlac put me in good shape—gained 7 pounds."

J. T. Toy, Atlanta, Ga., former engineer Seaboard, says: "Nervous indigestion—kidneys in bad shape—pains in back—am satisfied with what Tanlac has done for me."

R. H. Owens, 2700 Avenue G, Birmingham, Ala., engineer, says: "Run-down—indigestion—palpitation of heart—had to give up job—since taking Tanlac eat anything—have gone back to work."

T. G. Burrows, 3915 McKinney avenue, Houston, Texas, engineer St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico, says: "Catarrh of head and stomach—headaches—nervous—Tanlac is railroad man's friend—feel like new man."

Lynn Sills, 440 North Bellevue avenue, Memphis, Tenn., engineer, Louisville and Nashville, says: "Headaches—pains in back and kidneys—strained every nerve to keep up—Tanlac relieved me entirely."

S. T. Watkins, Birmingham, Ala., engineer Southern, says: "Suffered 27 years—stomach troubles—Tanlac has ended my troubles."

G. G. Geiger, 133 East Linden street, Atlanta, Ga., engineer Georgia Railroad, says: "Tanlac relieved my wife of rheumatism—she gained 25 pounds from using it."

C. J. Weeks, 2139 Lydia street, Jacksonville, Fla., engineer Seaboard, says: "Suffered 20 years from nervous indigestion—Tanlac entirely relieved me—gained 20 pounds."

Jeff D. Riggs, 2020 Pearl street, Vicksburg, Miss., engineer Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, says: "Was nervous and physical wreck—since taking Tanlac am strong and active as ever—gained 25 pounds."

B. F. House, R. F. D., No. 5, Box 61, Atlanta, Ga., engineer Seaboard, says: "Lost weight and strength—was badly under the weather—Tanlac set me up—gained 22 pounds."

Jack Petrie, 54 Lindsley avenue, Nashville, Tenn., engineer, says: "Was pulled down till I had to give up my engine—Tanlac put me back in the cab—it's the best medicine I ever tried."

P. F. Hammill, 1192 Dunnavant street, Memphis, Tenn., engineer, says: "Rheumatism—tried everything, including trip to Hot Springs—Tanlac did more good than everything else combined."

P. C. Hooks, Rome, Ga., engineer Southern, says: "My wife was almost complete nervous and physical wreck—Tanlac set her crutches aside—she gained 16 pounds."

J. B. Watson, Mobile, Ala., engineer on Southern Railway between Selma and Mobile, says: "Was completely broken down—couldn't work—since taking Tanlac am working regularly—gained 68 pounds."

O. B. Hanes, Nashville, Tenn., engineer Louisville and Nashville, says: "Gave up engine account accident, bad health—Tanlac is fine—gained 8 pounds—sleep and eat fine."

G. T. Newman, Dalton, Ga., engineer Western and Atlantic, says: "Was tired and worn out—nervous—Tanlac only thing that gave me relief."

H. M. Telford, 617 Third avenue, Birmingham, Ala., engineer Louisville and Nashville, says: "Wife had nervous indigestion—splitting headaches—gave up all housework—Tanlac gave her new life and energy—she gained 7 pounds."

Evidence from such sources as these is unassailable. These men are exposed to all conditions of weather as no others are. Their runs take them from mountain to seashore, from swamp to highland through rain and storm, cold and sleet, and they never falter in their duty. They must always guard against disease. These men speak from personal experience; no wonder they pin their faith to Tanlac, for it has served them well.

Patents for Poets.

"You are a spring poet, I believe?" began the intruder.

"I am," sadly responded the gentleman of the third-floor back; "although I must confess—"

"Exactly!" broke in the intruder. "That is why I called."

"You are a publisher?" cried the spring poet.

"No, sir," responded the caller; "but I am general agent of one of the greatest money-saving inventions of the age!"

"Alas! I have no money to save!" moaned the man of sonnets.

"But listen," replied the caller. "My invention is bound to suit you. It is a little rubber-stamp with the words 'Declined with thanks' upon it. You write your poem, put it in an envelope, slip in a piece of paper with those words on it, address the envelope to yourself, open the envelope, read the slip, throw the whole business into the waste-paper basket, and by these very simple means," concluded the man of genius, "you may save ten times the cost of my invention in a single week!"

"Well?"

Little Willie, although not much of a singer, has the spirit all right. He was rendering an especially erratic version of "Columbia, Gem of the Ocean," the other evening, and an entirely new, though suitable, interpretation of the words of the song. He began:

"O Columbia, gem of the ocean,
The home of the brave and the free—"

The listeners withstood several painful lines of this and there wasn't a break.

"A world offers homage to thee," he screamed.

Then came the triumph of the song:

"Thy banners make Germany tremble."

And the little group of listeners broke out into cheers.—Indianapolis News.

CALHOUN CAPITAL MILITARY CENTER

WORK ON ARTILLERY RANGE AT ANNISTON WILL BE BEGUN WITHIN TEN DAYS.

IS OFFICIALLY CONFIRMED

Announced That War Department Has Purchased Over 15,000 Acres for This Purpose.

Washington.—The transaction between the Chamber of Commerce of Anniston and the government, whereby the latter acquires for military purposes more than 15,000 acres of land lying between Anniston and Jacksonville, in Calhoun county, is officially confirmed.

Col. Charles P. Summerall, representing the war department, returned from Anniston. He admitted that the deal had been consummated and stated that within 10 days work would be initiated toward the completion of two artillery ranges on the site purchased. When the ranges are ready for service divisions of the regular army will be stationed in Anniston for the purpose of instructing southern units of the National Guard in the use of field guns.

Anniston.—Col. C. P. Summerall, U. S. A., formally closed the deal with the Chamber of Commerce for 16,000 acres of land adjoining the city limits and north of the city to be used as a training camp site and range grounds for artillery, infantry and machine gun companies of the army.

This means that at times there will be as many as 50,000 men encamped adjoining Anniston. And it is permanent. The property was purchased outright by the government.

Ashland.—The entire plant of the Crucible Flake Graphite Company, eight miles west of Ashland in the graphite district, was destroyed by fire, according to reports reaching here. The plant carried only $2,000 insurance, and it is understood, it was valued at between $15,000 and $20,000. The fire is said to have originated in the dryroom.

Red Tape is Removed.

Montgomery.—Dr. J. N. Baker, of Montgomery, has been appointed a major in the Medical Reserve Corps, and president of a board to examine applicants in that branch of the service. All of the red tape has been eliminated. Doctors licensed to practice medicine, who are between the ages of 22 and 35 years, can be accepted and commissioned within a week.

Negro Officers to be Designated.

Washington.—Representative Huddleston was informed by Adjutant General McKain of the army that the War Department had decided to designate Negro officers for Negro regiments to be recruited. Alabama's quota of officers will be about 200. An officers' reserve camp later will be located in some central portion of the country.

Red Cross Unit Formed.

Decatur.—Declaring that they will go to the front as war nurses if their services are required, women prominent in the social circles of Albany have formed a local unit of the Red Cross and have made application for a charter to the American Red Cross. Officers of the new organization are Mrs. W. E. Crawford, President; Mrs. William Watson, Vice-President; Mrs. Frank Lide, Secretary. Instruction will be given by Dr. Fonville, of the Medical Corps of the Alabama National Guard.

State Federation of Labor Meets.

Anniston.—State Federation of Labor held a busy session here. Several questions of momentous interest to organized labor were discussed at the sixteenth annual convention of the Alabama State Federation of Labor, which convened May 21, for a three days' session. The effect of the war on the labor and labor's part in the war was brought out in the speeches made by some of the leading orators of organized labor in the South. The meeting was held in the Woodmen's Hall. About 150 delegates were present.

400 Enlisted to Date.

Montgomery.—Recruiting in Alabama has taken on considerable impetus in the last few days, according to Capt. H. J. McKenney, recruiting officer for the army in Alabama, and by May 26 approximately 400 recruits will have been sent from the state since April 1. Capt. McKenney declared that he would like it to be known that the examinations for clerkships and other clerical positions in the army were the same as for regular enlistment as privates, and that promotion came to clerks just as it did to enlisted men—only by the enlisted man showing ability.

Farmer Burns to Death in House.

Opelika.—Home Colquitt Gullatte, aged 28, a farmer, of Beat Nine, Lee County, was burned to death when his house was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Gullatte and her two children, who were sleeping in a separate room from Mr. Gullatte, barely escaped. After Mrs. Gullatte had gotten her children out of the house she went back to awaken her husband but on account of the intensity of the fire could not get to his room. She could see him walking around in a dazed condition, unable to find a door or window by which he could get out. The roof was falling in before the screams of Mrs. Gullatte brought any of the neighbors.

Class is Graduated.

The policies of the brigade commanders is to give commissions to men, who went into the trials of border life at Nogales and Camp Wilson.

Cold Damages Cotton.

Oeplika.—Cotton is dying in this section to a great extent on account of the recent cold weather. This, in connection with the boll weevil, has caused the prediction that little cotton will be made in Lee County this year. Last year the boll weevil did much damage and already reports from various sections of the County say that it has made its appearance.

Curtail Social Life as War Saving.

Decatur.—In urging rigid measures for aiding America in the war with Germany, the Federated Missions of Albany and Decatur, in annual meeting, adopted a resolution pledging the women of the Twin Cities to curtail social entertainment, to spend less for dress, to plant gardens, to guard against the waste of food and to serve plain and inexpensive meals.

Robbed of $1,000.

Centerville.—Sheriff J. S. Ward received a telephone message stating that robbers had broken into the house of P. D. Lee trusted his sock as safety deposit, preferably to placing his money in the bank.

One of the largest mills in the United States will be erected by this company. Work will be pushed and it is planned to have the mill in operation by the end of Summer. The Goodwater Graphite Company, the other concern here erecting a mill has practically completed its plant, and will by the first or by the middle of June, have it in operation.

A Babylonian Epic.

In the midst of it all, a man in Philadelphia, a professor, is calmly translating a Babylonian epic. He has before him certain tablets which were buried in Mesopotamian ground thousands of years ago, upon which, in the time of Abraham, certain queer cone-shaped characters were inscribed. Not many years ago the key to these character was discovered, in the form of an inscription in two languages, one of which was known, and the meaning of the queer characters slowly emerged. The Philadelphia professor has discovered that the tablets bear an epic poem. He is translating the epic and finds it to be the story of the way in which a half-barbarous chieftain, named Enkidu, was redeemed from a career of tyranny and violence by the love of a woman. And day after day, while the papers are full of woes and wickedness, and the drums of war beat on the streets, indifferent to all the uproar this patient man goes on translating into good English the poem of Enkidu and his love.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

STATE COUNCIL OF DEFENSE IS NAMED

COMMITTEES NAMED BY GOVERNOR TO LEAD WORK—R. M. HOBBIE, CHAIRMAN.

NEWS FROM STATE CAPITAL

What the State's Servants Are Saying, Doing and Undoing—Official Acts Disclosed.

—Montgomery.

Carrying out the suggestion of the national government, Governor Henderson by proclamation created a state council of defense and appointed prominent citizens from all sections of the state as members of thec ouncil. Richard M. Hobbie of Montgomery was made chairman of the executive committee of the council and associated with him will be L. M. Hooper of Selma, L. M. Bashinsky of Troy, Ray Rushton of Montgomery, M. J. McDermott of Mobile, Oscar M. Wells of Birmingham, and J. M. Duggar of Auburn. W. E. Henderson, Governor Henderson's secretary, was named executive secretary of the council.

The state council will have charge of the campaign for the growing of more foodstuffs and for the protection of the people during war times. County councils will be organized in all counties and will make reports to the state council while district councils will make reports to the county councils.

Cullman Cashier Winner on Appeal.

Efforts of the state to keep Joseph H. Kramer, former assistant cashier of the German Bank of Cullman, in prison for embezzlement of funds of the bank before it failed were defeated in the court of appeals when the court overruled the state's application for rehearing. Kramer's case was reversed and remanded to the Cullman circuit court for another trial last month and he immediately returned to his home at Cullman to await further efforts of the state.

Kramer came to the penitentiary after his conviction and served on his sentence during the time the case was being considered by the court of appeals.

Convicts Not So Eager to Be Free.

The present number of Alabama convicts shows an increase of 19 during the last month, according to the files in the office of the state convict inspector. Many of the convicts, whose total number is something over 3000, are employed in the various projects leasing convict labor, and calls have been made on the department several times this year for more men than could be supplied for work in the mines and in the turpentine camps. Comparatively few requests for pardon or parole have been made since the declaration of war, and the supposition is that the desire for freedom is tempered by a fear of conscription. This fear, however, has not been voiced except by one convict, whose representative inquired of the convict department as to the likelihood of his being called for service in the army in the event of his release.

High Court Rules on Capital Cases.

The supreme court decided that the amendment to the state constitution, placing the Montgomery county probate judge on a salary instead of a fee basis was legally adopted and is in force.

The case of R. H. Jones, president of the board of revenue of Montgomery county vs. W. R. McDade, clerk in the probate judge's office, is reversed and remanded. This decision dismisses a bill to enjoin the board of revenue from paying out funds under the prohibition of the amendment proposed by the legislature of 1915. The purpose of which was to put the judge of probate, the sheriff and tax collector and assessor on salaries, and requiring that the fees of these officers be converted into the county treasury. The manner in which the bill of amendment passed the legislature was the chief ground for the suit.

To Treat Victims of Mad Mule.

Several heads of animals sent to the state laboratory showed on test to have been afflicted with rabies and patients have arrived for treatment as the result of bites from the maddened animals. A mule's brain from Cullman and a dog's head from Vinemont showed positive signs of rabies and W. S. Beck of Vinemont and a small boy from Cullman who were victims of the rabid animals will be given the Pasteur treatment.

Manslayer Paroled.

Bailey Miller, a Calhoun county convict, under a 10-year sentence for first degree manslaughter, was given a parole by order of Governor Henderson.

Two Are Paroled.

James Driggers of Barbour county and James Johnson of Madison county, both under sentence for grand larceny, were granted paroles by the governor, according to recommendations from various county officials.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MAY 27

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND HIS WORK —(PENTECOSTAL LESSON).

LESSON TEXT—John 15:26-27; 16:7-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—He shall teach you all things.—John 14:26.

This lesson follows chapter 15:1-4. The emphasis Jesus placed upon the new and deeper intimacy into which the disciples were about to enter, and which involved participation in persecutions (v. 20). However, as a garrison and helper when this persecution should come, the believers are to have in their lives the Holy Spirit.

I. The Believer and the Spirit (vv. 26-27). The "paraclete" (helper) was to proceed from the Father, but Jesus was to send him. He is called the "Spirit of Truth" because it is his work to reveal the truth, and it is through his teachings only that anyone may know the truth. Jesus is the truth (ch. 14:6), and the Spirit of Truth is to enable believers to testify concerning Jesus. It qualifies them for such testimony. The disciples also had the added qualification of experience for "ye have been with me from the beginning." The disciples were eye witnesses of what he did and what he was, and heard and knew all that he claimed for himself and what his life proved itself to be.

II. The Believer and Persecution (16:1-6). This section has not been selected by the committee, but as a part of the lesson we cannot overlook it. In it the Master enumerates specifically things that were to come to the disciples and that they might "remember." He also mentions the fact that these things are to come after he has gone away. As a relief from sorrow (v. 6), the Master goes on to show the relation of the Spirit to the world.

III. The Holy Spirit in the World (vv. 7-11). It was profitable for the disciples that Jesus should go, that another Divine friend was to take his place. This is the best section in all the Bible to teach the personality of the Holy Spirit. The personal pronouns in this section are very significant, there being seven in the thirteenth verse alone. The word "Comforter" here used means that and much more. It is the same word translated "advocate." In I John 2:1, it means one who is called upon to stand beside another as a helper, counselor, guide and friend. Jesus had been this to his disciples thus far, but he was going away, and another Friend was coming, who should not only be with them, but should dwell in them (Ch. 14:16, 17). The Comforter has come, and without him we can do nothing. He is the one who convicts the world "of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." Of sin, not because they have broken the moral code, but because they do not accept Jesus Christ as the Messiah (Hebrews 10:28. See ch. 3:18-20). In the second place, he is to convict the world of righteousness. The Holy Spirit has no other channel through which he can get at the world except through those who are already saved. He shows the world its error about righteousness; also that Jesus is the only righteous one, and righteousness is only possible to us in him (Phil. 3:9 R. V.). Because he has lived the right life, having fulfilled all righteousness, and gone on high, he therefore convicts men, but the Spirit does his work through the agency of the word. Man needs to know first of all that he is a sinner; second, that Jesus "the righteousness of God," has provided for us, and it is the Holy Spirit who alone can show these two things to men. In the third place, he convicts the world of judgment because "the prince of this world is judged." This judgment is past (see John 12:31), for Jesus has conquered Satan. Certainly this is a truth that needs to be emphasized in this day. The judgment of sin and punishment for sin, due to unbelief or rejection of Jesus Christ, is seldom preached in our day.

IV.—The Spirit and Truth (vv. 12-15). There was much more that the Master might say to the disciples, but they were not ready to bear it (v. 12). He, however, looks forward to the day when the Spirit shall come, and they will be ready to receive these things. The Spirit will guide them into truth, all truth, for he shall not speak of himself (he will not bear witness unto or speak "from" himself) but the things that he will speak of will be concerning Jesus. The real evidence of the presence of the Holy Spirit in a believer or in a congregation is the degree of exaltation given to Jesus Christ.

There is a progressive intimacy in John. Jesus first calls those who are at his side, servants (Ch. 13:13). He next calls them friends (Ch. 15:15), and lastly he calls them brethren (Ch. 20:17). This is the law of Christian experience.

Sunday school teachers should certainly take advantage of this lesson to bring out the work of the Spirit (vv. 8, 9, 10); the gifts of the Spirit (I Cor. 12); and the fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22, 23). Let us be sure that our scholars know what it means to have a definite, intimate, personal relation with the all powerful one.

Girls! Use Lemons! Make a Bleaching, Beautifying Cream

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It naturally should help to soften, freshen, bleach and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is simply marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands. Adv.

An Unlooked-For Present.

Among little Willie's numerous birthday presents were a toy tomahawk, an air gun and a lasso—these being sent by a sport-loving uncle who knew the youth's proclivities.

Shortly after breakfast Willie's mother heard a crash in the greenhouse at the foot of the garden, and went to investigate. On the way she passed a few uprooted bushes and a flower-bed trampled out of recognition, and in the greenhouse itself many lassoed flower-pots. Following the trail she found Willie hiding behing a tree stump.

"What are you doing, Willie?" she cried in horrified tones.

"Looking for Redskins," replied the youngster.

With a grim look she took Willie by the ear and led him indoors.

"Looking for red skins!" she repeated ominously, as she took up a cane. "Well, I'll give you one."

DEATH ON DELIVERY
(By R. A. Smith)

No longer can we discuss the fly with a contemptuous "shoo". He is an influence to be reckoned with. Black as he is painted, We must concede with him certain virtues.

From a worldly standpint, he is a hustler "from away back", perpetually on the job, and always delivers the goods.

He distributes samples of pestilence with a lavish hand, and the goods always match the samples, whether you have ordered them or not, and are marked: D.D.D.—Death on delivery.

We may admire the fly for his industry, pertenacity, and business enterprise.

We may even love him lukewarmly as one of God's creatures, but we had better wipe him gently but firmly out of existence, just the same.

The fly is the best traveling salesman known to humanity; carries a grip on his head.

His lines of samples is the most extensive and longest known, and will last you not merely from one year to next, but from time to eterity.

A fly in the house is as dangerous as a rattlesnake, as filthy as a louse and as disagreeable as a bedbug.

The time will come when any modern, clean home will feel itself shamed and disgraced by the presence of a fly, and when every householder upon whose premises a brood of flies is detected will be heavily fined or sent to jail.

Now is the time to wage war on the pests. Everybody can help. Destroy breeding places, clean up the corners, keep garbage cans covered.

When the baby takes too much food the stomach turns; the result is indigestion, sourness and vomiting. Frequently the bowels are involved and there is colic pains and diarrhoea. McGEE'S BABY ELIXIR is a grand corrective remedy for the stomach and bowel di orders of babies. It is pure, wholesome and pleasant to take. Price 25c and 50c per bottle. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

Get at The Source of Your "Skin Diseases"

Don't be misled by this term, for the appearance of pimples, boils or rashes indicate something more serious than a mere "breaking out" of the skin. These eruptions are, in reality, signals from nature that the blood is impoverished, debilitated and in need of help. Of course you can sometimes drive away the infected places by applying a salve or lotion, but unless you treat them through the medium of the blood, they will occur again and again.

S. S. S. has proven its wonderful building and tonic properties in thousands of cases arising from disorders of the blood. It washes the poisons from the system and aids the blood in its work of cleansing and invigorating the body organs, throwing off waste matter, and keeping the body in a normal, healthy condition.

Prove these facts for yourself by taking a bottle of S. S. S. and write to our Medical Department for information about your case. Swift Specific Co., 304 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

NOTICE TO CANNING CLUB GIRLS

Thorsby Institute desires to co-operate with the young people of Chilton County who are anxious to secure an education for themselves by using their home products. I should like very much to hear from any member of the canning clubs who desire to pay part of their expenses in school next winter by means of her canned products. I should also like to learn of any groups of young people who are desirous of making arrangements to keep house and use home products while in school. In either case we will be glad to cooperate in making necessary arrangements.

FEEDING OUR ENEMIES.

Exports to the four German gateways—Denmark, The Netherlands, Norway and Sweden—for the first nine months of the current fiscal year ended March, were $23,000,000 in excess of the record for the same period of the preceding fiscal year, and nearly $100,00,00 in exces of the of the normal nine months period of 1913. That $100,000,000 excess diverted to our allies wold have been of great assistance to them as it consisted in the main of food products. And there seems to be no good reason why we should be solicitous of the stomachs of the Scandinavians and the Sutch so long as they persist in the giving of aid and comfort to our enemies, the Germans.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT THE COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL

The first program of this year's commencement was put on at the county high school auditorium last Thursday night.

Both Thursday night and Friday night of last week were occupied by Prof. Tinsely's music class, the first being the graduation recital of the music pupils and the second the undergraduates musical entertainment.

On Monday night of this week, the annual undergraduates play was presented under the direction of Miss Mary C. Key.

Tuesday morning was the Seventh Grade Commencement, in which all the seventh grade pupils of the county were allowed to take part.

The Series of entertainments was closed Tuesday night, when the members of the graduating class had the charge of the stage. There were ten graduates, six of which were literary, two literary and music and two in music alone.

This is the largest number that the school has ever graduated before, there being only nine last year.

CENSORSHIP ESTABLISHED.

Without waiting for action by Congress, Secretary Lansing has instituted a censorship of news from the State Department which clamps down a lid far stronger than any which is to be found at any foreign office in Europe. Not only are under officials of the State Department forbidden to talk to any newspaper men about any matter, however insignificant of fact or detail, but any of them who utters a word upon which a criticism of the administration's war policy may be based will be instantly dismissed. The prevailing atmosphere in Washingtton just now is not conducive to the development of freedom. It is small wonder that when a Senator met a Congresman the other day and said, "How are you," the Congressman replied, "I would like to tell you, but the censorship forbids it."

COMMENCEMENT AT THORSBY INSTITUTE

Closing of Eleventh Year of Work of the Institution. Big Active Program.

The eleventh year of Thorsby Institute closed with the commencement exercises of last week. The year has been in many ways the best in the history of the school, and although the commencement exercises were prepared on short notice, being somewhat earlier than had been planned, they were by no means inferior in quality. The baccalaureate sermon as mentioned in last week's paper, which was preached by Rev. Arnald Nelson on Sunday evening, May 20th. Examinations were the order of the day Monday and Tuesday and tennis tournaments were played Tuesday night and Wednesday, the results of which were: a victory of the seniors over the sophomores, and victory for the Lowells over the Longfellows.

On Wednesday at eleven o'clock the audience of 150 people gathered for the flag raising. After music by the band and prayer by Rev. J. M. Graham and a brief response service, the flag was raised to the top of the pole by the members of the graduating class, Agnes Gerald and Raymond Carlson.

The address by Rev. George Eaves of Birmingham was very impressive and appropriate. During the exercises several songs were sung by the students and music furnished by the band.

After the flag raising a goodly number enjoyed dinner on the ground and remained for the exercises of the afternoon, which consisted of tennis games, flag drill by fourteen girls under the direction of Mrs. C. M. Williams, and stories for the little folks by Miss Stoddard and Miss Akard.

For the evening exercises the auditorium of Thorsby Institute was full. The graduates each presented an essay showing original research and careful preparation. The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Dwight S. Bayley, associate pastor of the Independent-Presbyterian church of Birmingham. His subject was "The other Man" and he emphasized the need in all life, not considering simply ourselves but the other man.

Following the address prizes for excellence in scholarship during the second semester were awarded to Luella Winslow and Waldemar Lefstead as having made the best record among the girls and boys respectively. Honorable mention was made of Odie Lee Arthur and Rosco Maddox, who were close seconds. Announcement was also made of the result of the essay contest in which ten members of the Institute had participated, the judges giving the first place to Raymond Carlson and second to May Bell McJunkin.

The following young women were awarded honor "T" pins for points won in athletics: Annolie Jowers, Olga Soberg, Lovie Jowers, Anna Rasmussen, Anna Erdahl, three girls, Lois Abernathy, Agnes Gerald and Etta Crowson, having earned honor "T" pins of previous years, were awarded "Red Cross Manuals" because of added points gained during the year.

Announcement was also made of the awarding of free tuition scholarship in Piedmont College to Miss Agnes Gerald and partial scholarship in Washington and Lee University to Mr. Raymond Carlson. Announcement will be made later of the awarding of full tuition scholarship in Augusta College, Rock Island, Ill.

It was announced that school would open Tuesday, September 11th, and that a catalogue giving the full announcement for next year would be issued within the next few days.

ALL DAY SINGING

Mr. J. A. W. Mims requests the Banner to announce that there will be an all day singing at Walnut Creek on next Sunday. All singers are especially invited to come. Bring your dinner with you.

"MODERN NURSERY RHYME"

(By R. A. Smith.)

Baby by, here's a fly!
Let us kill him, you and I,
Ere he crawls up the walls,
And dire ill befalls.
I believe on those six legs
Are a billion Typhoid eggs!
There he goes on his toes
Tickling baby's nose!
Now we must run right away,
For the antiseptic spray,
To sterilize where the fly's
Little microbes stray;
Only think, neath his two wings,
Lurk all sort of hard-named things!
Every fly a fresh supply
Of these horrors brings!
So we have to analyze,
Naturalize and imminize,
Vaporize, Sterilize,
Just to fight the flies.

CLANTON COLORED PEOPLE LOYAL TO UNCLE SAMMIE

Resolutions adopted at a Public Meeting at Court House.

The colored people of Chilton County met in mass meeting May 28th, 1917 at the court house, Clanton, Ala. The meeting opened at 8:30 p.m. with Rev. R. C. Mixon as Chairman. Choir led in singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee." Chairman read for scripture lesson 28th Chapter of Duteronomy. Rev. J. S. Prentice led in singing "All hail the Power of Jesus' Name". He also led a fervent and timely prayer, followed with a selection by the choir. The next on program was a welcome address by Hon. Victor J. Heard, but Mr. Heard being absent, Chairman asked Mr. Curry to give words of welcome, which he did. Among the many things Mr. Curry said was that this meeting was the best thing the colored people of this county have ever done. Everyone enjoyed Mr. Curry's remarks.

Subject for discussion,—"Should the Negro be Loyal to the U. S. Flag, and why?" First speaker was Prof-K. N. Draper of Clanton, who made a timely talk which was enjoyed by all. Prof. A. M. Pope, of Calera was the next to speak. He also made a good speech. Next was Rev. J. S. Prentice, who made a strong and quite interesting talk, which was applauded by all. Rev. W. S. Turrentine, Rev. A. H. Gordon, and Bro. Ben Brown all made laudable talks. The program was concluded with a writing, namely a poem, which was fine.

Judge Reynolds was to respond, but he being absent the Chairman rose and thanked the speakers in Judge Reynold's stead.

This was one of the most interesting meetings of its kind ever had in the county. Resolutions were read and adopted at this meeting and ordered to be recorded on county record in the court house and also a copy sent to Montgomery to be recorded, and one to Washington, D.C. Resolutions are as follows:

Whereas, the intimate relation that formerly existed between the Imperial German Government and the Government of the United States, and

Whereas, the Government at Washington, D.C. and the United States Congress has declared that a state of war now exists between the aforesaid German Government and the Government of the United States of America and the same to be proclaimed by the president, whos eproclamation has gone forth to the world, and

Whereas, the president and Congress promoted the life and prosperity of her citizens on the land and sea, and,

Whereas, the president did exercise great patience in hope of peace and prosperity of the nation and all its citizens.

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the negro people of Clanton, Chilton County, Ala., desirous of expressing sympathy with and loyalty to our government and the flag of the nation and our love for America, do, unreservedly offer our services to be used in what ever way it can best be utilized by the government, whether it be industrial, military or otherwise,

Be it further resolved that we denounce as untrue, unfounded, and unwarranted any report to the effect that the negro, is in any way, in sympathy with the Germans, or any other foreign foe.

This ended an enthusiastic meeting.

Rev. R. C. MIXON, Chairman.
Rev. J. E. SLAUGHTER, Secy.

UNION SPRINGS

Had a much needed shower Sunday night. The gardens and crops are very backward, but wheat thus far is apparently good.

Elzie Brazwell and Miss Marjie Brown were happily married Sunday, then motored to Randolph leaving on No. 20 for Birmingham.

Rev. Mr. Abercrombie delivered a fine address here on the20th, on the subject, "Take ye away the Stone," naming different stones of obstruction—indifference, intemperance, etc. He will be here again the 3rd Sunday in June, when he will deliver a special message to the children. The parents will please have the children present at 10:30 o'clock.

Rev. Price of Montevallo delivered a good talk here on the 13th to a large crowd.

Singing next Sunday afternoon.

We are informed that a Baptist Sunday School will be organized for this place next Sunday, in the forenoon, we presume. Our people have been woefully indifferent along this line. We expect, however, the clear, searching preaching of our visiting ministers is causing our people to awake to the need of the hour.

Indifference is just horrible. Rev. Chilton of Montgomery has pronounced indifference the enemy's last resort.

Mr. Charles Glass has opened a new grist mill at his store.

Mr. Fisher is associated with Mr. Russ in the Turpentine work here.

THE FOURTH SUNDAY MAY SINGING AT SALEM

Eighteenth Year of Occasion Without Missing Session.

The eighteenth annual singing was held at Salem May 27, and the day was spent in singing, which we think was the best we have ever had.

T. L. Robinson led the opening song, after which we were led in prayer by S. M. Yates. T. L. Robinson was reelected Chairman and J. W. Cleckler Secretary.

By motion the Chairman appointed a program committee and was as follows: Messrs. H. A. Collins, D. S. Robinson, Lee Robinson,.

The following directors were placed on the program for fifteen minutes each: W. M. Devaughn, J. R. Robinson, J. C. Jones, L. F. Cleckler, followed by ten minutes recess; G.C. Culp, L. T. Grant, Jim Gulledge, A. C. Collins, J. A. W. Mims, and adjourned until 1:30 for dinner. Refreshments were then served in abundance by the good ladies of the community. The afternoon directors consisted of Lee Robinson, S. M. Yates, O. L. Devaughn, J. W. Cagle, Recess ten minutes; T. L. Robinson, J. W. Cleckler, C. H. Robinson, Elmer J. Raines. We also had one quartet by Bros. Lee Robinson, W. M. Devaughn, L. F. Cleckler, H. C. Collins, which was fine. Mr. H. C. Collins made us a good talk which we were very proud of. If everyone would go with an open heart, and go to work like Mr. Collins did we could go away realizing the fact that we had done something for the people to be proud of.

Organists for the day were: H. C. Collins, Lee Robinson, C. H. Robinson, Misses Beatrice Mims. This was a day spent in song service for the Lord. We had a good class of singers all day and a house full of attentive listeners. There was good order in the house all day for which we thank everybody present.

We were led in closing song by Chairman, "God Be with you till We meet again" and were dismissed with prayer by Bro. Ethen Jones.

J. W. CLECKLER. Sec'y.

BUY A CANTROLLA

The management of the 1917 Cantrolla reports that the sales are rather slow and are not measuring up to their expectations. The quality of this annual should not be ignored this way. The boys have worked hard this year trying to make for us the most up-to-date high school annual in the state, and we should not allow the task to become a burden upon them by refusing to buy their splendid product.

It is the duty of at least every family in the county who had children in the high school this year to purchase a copy of this book, for every pupil in school is represented in it, and would surely be interested in looking over the things that happened in their respective classes as well as in the whole school.

Let us not allow the boys who labored so untiringly in getting this annual out to get "stuck" by neglecting our duty toward it, namely:—buying at least one copy.

Those who cannot see Joe Kanjutzky, the business manager, at his father's store to buy a copy, respond to your duty by sending him 75 cents plus 8 cents for postage and ask him to mail a copy to you. It will be appreciated and you will never regret it.

ALL ABOUT REGISTRATION

Read page 2 of this issue of the Union-Banner, and you will get all the essential facts and details about Registering for military duty on next Tuesday, June 5.

GIRLS PLAY BASE BALL

The American Athletic Girls Base Ball Club, a distinct novelty, and the foremost attraction in the line of baseball that will be presented to us this season, will be played at Clanton on Monday, June 4, at 3:00 o'clock, p.m., against the local boys on the home diamond.

This club, according to their press notices are fast enough to give any semi-pro team a run for their money, and if the boys expect a "look in" they will have to get busy.

The American Girls team is composed of athletic girls who have made base ball a study and profession and know the game from A to Z.

The Club is organized in Chicago, and they make a tour of the country each year, and this is their first season in the South as they have been playing the past four seasons in Canada and the northwest, defeating some of the strongest semi-pro teams in that section.

Anyone expecting to see a burlesque on the game will be sadly disappointed as these girls play ball.

A large crowd will surely be on hand, and no one can afford to miss the chance of seeing a real ball club in action.

We want to see all the fans and fanettes there to root for the girls or the boys as they choose.

VARIETIES OF PEANUTS

By E. F. Cauthen, Associate Agriculturist, Alabama Experiment Station

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

The common varieties of peanuts may be divided into two great classes—those having an upright bushy habit of growth and those having a low spreading habit. The upright varieties are White Spanish, Red Spanish, Tennessee Red, Virginia Bush, and Bunch Jumbo. The running varieties are North Carolina Runner, sometimes called African, and Virginia Runner.

The bunch varieties may be planted in rows from 2½ to 3 feet wide—just wide enough for easy cultivation with ordinary cotton implements. They may be dropped from 4 to 8 inches apart in drill. The running varieties should be planted in 3 to 3½ foot rows and dropped from 12 to 15 inches apart in drill. To secure large yields it is necessary that they be planted thickly.

From 200 to 300 pounds of acid phosphate and from 500 to 1000 pounds of slaked lime per acre for most sandy soils seem advisable. However the lime should not be applied in the same furrow with the acid phosphote. Nitrogenous fertilizers do not seem to increase the yield of the peanut, which is a legume, in sufficient quantities to justify their use.

The practice of growing peanuts in the middle of wide corn rows has the advantage of making a peanut crop with no additional expense except for seed and planting. This system of farming is followed extensively where the crop is grown for hog feed, the hogs being allowed to harvest the crop If they are grown for oil mills, they should not be planted with crops that interfere with harvesting.

The planting of peanuts on high ridges is not desirable. A low bed or a flat surface secures good stands of plants and permits easy cultivation. Frequent shallow tillage by working a little soil around the growing plants until pods begin to form usually gives satisfactory yields.

The amount of seed of the White Spanish and the Red Spanish varieties required to plant an acre when the rows are 2½ feet wide and the hills 6 inches apart varies from 1½ to 2 bushels of unshelled peanuts.

For further information on varieties and fertilization of peanuts, ask for Bulletin 192 Alabama Experiment Station, Auburn.

BILL GOODGAME

MANY OF BEST TEACHERS ENLIST IN THE U. S. ARMY

Effect of the War upon Our Public School System.

A large number of our school men will be out of the profession next year on account of the war. We may also expect to lose many of our high school boys who have taken a leading part in the various school activities. The loss of these young men coupled with the fact that all minds will be turned toward the East, will tend to cause our schools to become unnecessarily disorganized. The fact remains however, that boys and girls must be educated and there is going to be even a greater demand for educated minds during the period of readjustment that will follow after the close of the war in which we are now involved. Our problems will be greater problems; national problems will become international, and Americans as never before will need to think of world welfare. Many of those who would ordinarily be entrusted with these problems will have sacrificed their lives on the battle fields. Their places must be filled by young men with trained minds.

Effect of Economic Conditions.

Then, too, the economic conditions confronting us challenge the schools to prove their efficiency, to show their ability to meet an immediate need in time of crisis. Agriculture, domestic arts and sciences and all kindred subjects must be given especial emphasis. For those who are not prepared to meet this new condition, the various summer schools will prove a great help in the matter of training, while love for country in a time like this should inspire interest, enthusiasm and stick-to-it-iness so essential to the accomplishment of the best results. No true and loyal American citizen who has the opportunity for rendering patriotic service offered by the teaching profession, can fail to throw his heart, mind, and soul into the work.

Patriotism in the School.

The time is especially opportune for the teaching of genuine patriotism in our public schools. An American flag should grace every school building in the state on the opening day of school, and the principles that the flag represents should be enstilled in the minds of the pupils throughout the entire term. This is a time when the American people should think together. Unity of action and thought can be attained only by controling influence of a common ideal. The school must discover and teach the American ideal—the true spirit and principle of democracy.

School Men Should Redouble Efforts.

In spite of the natural tendency of educational work to lag on account of war, we should have an awakening of interest and enthusiasm. Every Superintendent, principal and teacher should redouble his efforts next year and thus prove his patriotism and loyalty to the state and nation. The present is no time for "slackers" in the teaching prifession.

SINGING AT WEAVERS

There was an all day singing at Weavers School House, four miles east of Jones on May 20 and a large crowd attended. The meeting was opened with prayer by F. A. Weaver at 10 o'clock and J. D. Huett was elected president. The singing began immediately led by Mr. O. B. White with Miss Bessie Wills at the organ followed by Mr. E. W. Patterson with Miss Willie Simmons acting as organist. Mr. R. W. Kendrick with Miss Bessie Wills, Mrs. Willie Simms with Miss Bessie Wills. Everyone present were invited to the long table and partook of a bountous dinner prepared by the good ladies of the community. The crowd was called back to the house at 1:30 and the singing was resumed. The leaders for the afternoon were: R. W. Kendrick, J. D. Huett, Miss Pearl White. The singing then closed with "Gid Be with You", and a short talk by Rev. J. L. Deramus. We are very grateful to the community for their generous hospitality and progressive spirit.

Respectfully submitted
G. M. WILLS, Secy.

UGLY BROTHERS RENDER SPLENDID MINSTREL SHOW

Best Evening of Entertainment At Clanton in long time.

The common saying is that if you don't see so and so, you just missed half your life; but speaking of the Ugly Brothers Minstrel Show, you missed a heap more than half your life if you did not see it. We do not hesitate to say that it was the most pleasing performance a Clanton audience has had the pleasure of witnessing in a long time.

The program was unique, original and interesting, consisting of songs, ballads, choruses, essays and declamations ranging all the way from the ridiculous to the sublime—from the veriest wit and humor to the profoundest and most sentimental patriotism.

While the whole company of players, about thirty in unmber, acquitted themselves with much favor at the hands of the audience, a few in particultr struck the highest response of their listeners. Henry Vance would indeed make the best nigger preacher in the world, and Tom Akers could never be better at himself than when he shouldered his budget of rags and starts on his journey "Alabama Bound."

Beauregard Vinston elicited the loudest cheers of the evening. But the reason is the old saying that a fellow gets out of a thing just what he puts into it. This talented and most accomplished player certainly gave the audience an abundance of his own laughter, and he in turn got much of the same thing from those to whom he gave it.

This is the best ameteur minstrel show that ever came down this pike, and there's no doubt about it.

A nice sum was realized, which will go toward the County High School Piano Fund. Over $45 was cleared.

STORM SWEEPS OVER ALABAMA

TORNADO VISITS JEFFERSON, WALKER OTHER COUNTIES. 32 DEAD.

VILLAGE SPRINGS WRECKED

Bradford, Sayre, Majestic, Grantt's Quarry and Sylacauga Hit. 100 Injured.

Montgomery.—A toll of approximately 32 lives, and more than 100 people injured, some of them fatally, is the result of tornadoes that visited portions of Walker, Jefferson, Shelby and other counties, while property damage will go above $150,000.

The greatest damage was done at Sayre, in the extreme western part of Jefferson county, where dozens and dozens of houses were blown down, eight lives taken and many hurt, and at Bradford, in the upper part of the county, and Village Springs, a short distance away, where 17 people are reported to be dead or fatally hurt and half a hundred hurt. The mining camp at Majestic, in the upper part of the county, was literally wiped off the map, and while no one was killed outright, several were very seriously injured.

Village Springs, the little town that nestles on the border line of Jefferson and Blount Counties, one side of the town in Jefferson and the other in Blount, was also swept off the map. A little colored baby was killed and thirty-five people were injured, some of them seriously.

Gantt's Quarry was struck by the tornado, and Sylacauga felt some of the effects, with one killed. Carbon Hill, in the extreme western part of Walker County, felt terible effects of the tornado, and four people were killed, one fatally hurt and several more or less seriously injured. Cordova, Dora and other places in Walker County, Edgewater in Jefferson County all felt the effects of the great wind.

Out of the mass of information that comes in. Figures on the number of dead and injured make the following showing:

Dead: Carbon Hill, four; Sayre, eight; Village Springs and Bradford, seventeen; Sylacauga, one; Gantt's Quarry, one; Bibbville, one.

Crop Report for Alabama.

Montgomery.—The Department of Agriculture has issued the following reports on crop condition in Alabama. The warm weather has been favorable, but all crops need rain. Cotton is growing slowly, the stands are generally poor; and much replanting is necessary. Some has been replanted in corn. Chopping is finished in some sections. Corn looks well, the stand being fair, but the growth is slow. Budworms are bad in some sections. Oats are poor. Pastures are fair. White potatoes are generally good. Sweet potatoes have progressed slowly. Velvet beans, peanuts, truck and gardens have improved.

Close Meeting.

Birmingham.—After clearing the docket of routine business, after the conclusion of several spirited fights over big church questions, and after the appointment of various committees to serve during the year, the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church finished its fifty-seventh session and has adjourned to meet next year at Durant, Okla. Moderator John Miller Wells of Wilmington, N. C., dissolved the Assembly.

Will Accept Canned Goods as Tuition.

Thorsby.—Prof. S. H. Herbert says that Thorsby institute desires to cooperate with the young people who are anxious to secure an education for themselves by using as far as possible their home products, and says that he should like very much to hear from members of the canning clubs who desire to pay part of expenses in school next winter by means of canned products.

Development to Start on River.

Dothan.—Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars will be spent in the next twelve months by the South Alabama Power Company in hydro-electric developments on the Omussee Creek about seventeen miles east of Dothan, near Columbia.

Birmingham Wins Next Convention.

Montgomery.—James B. Morton, of Bessemer, was elected President of the Alabama Retail Hardware Dealers Association in session at Montgomery. Birmingham was designated as the next convention city and the attendance is expected to exceed that of the Montgomery meet.

Red Cross Unit Formed.

Demopolis.—At a meeting of the local Red Cross branch the enrollment of 110 members was completed, Mrs. A. R. Smith is chairman and Mrs. L. W. George, secretary.

Ceremonial Planned.

Selma.—The Selma Shrine Club is getting ready for a big ceremonial here about the middle of June. They will have a class of fifteen to twenty-nine unregenerated novices, who will seek to become nobles at that time.

PROMOTIONS FOR ALABAMIANS.

Thach Goes to Aviation Corps—Five Get Lieutenancies in Army.

Montgomery.—Alabamians occupy a prominent place in the latest military announcements from Washington. Robert Thach, of Birmingham, has been accepted for the Aviation Corps, Charles Heyward Barnwell, son of Dean Charles Barnwell, of the University of Alabama, is gazetted as provisional lieutenant, as are the following Alabamians:

Oscar Blunt Ralls, Jr., and John Cooper Adams, Field Artillery, and John Downing Hill and Ashley Taylor, infantry.

Another announcement from Washington is that Francis G. Caffey, former Alabamian, has been appointed United States District Attorney for the Southern New York District.

Dr. James Kenan, of Selma, has been commissioned in the Medical Corps for immediate service in France.

Herbert Steiner, of Birmingham, has tendered his services to Food Administrator Hoover.

To Start Work on Practice Range.

Anniston.—Work on preparation of the second machine gun and field artillery ranges for the National Guard will begin at once at Anniston, Ala., according to an announcement by the war department. Quarters will be erected for six machine gun companies. The Anniston tract is one of the six artillery and machine gun ranges, each covering at least 25 square miles, provided for in the military bureau's plans for developing these two important arms of the National Guard. The ranges will serve as machine gun and artillery schools under instructors selected from regular officers and men who have graduated from the Fort Sill schools of the regular service. Care has been taken to clear each tract so that there will be no danger to civilians and in addition, the ranges are laid out so that low hills will catch wild shots. National guard artillery and machine gun companies will be sent from cantonments in the region of each range to get their firing practice at the nearest range.

Assistants to be Used.

University.—As a result of the numerous inquiries that have been made and the expectation of a heavy demand for military training during the Summer school of the University of Alabama, Captain Minnigerode has arranged for additional assistants besides the two sergeants who have been with him since the beginning of the work. The students who have captained the four companies organized a few months ago will likely remain through the Summer school to help in drilling the students, many of whom will come only for military training.

River Boats Are Stolen.

Florence.—All boats from Elk river, which enters into the Tennessee river at the eastern end of Lauderdale county to Muscle Shoals, have been stolen, presumably by the moonshiners who have their haunts in the islands of the Tennessee river along that route. These illicit distillers are preparing to satisfy the thirst that will fall on Alabama after July 1, and the removal of the boats is to prevent officers of the law from reaching the islands.

Hailstorm in Huntsville.

Huntsville.—Thousands of dollars' damage has been reported from various sections of the city and county, resulting when Huntsville was the victim of a terrific bombardment. The bombardment came in as a hailstorm, in which the hall stones were as large as marbles.

Uniforms Must Be Worn.

Montgomery.—No uniform but the olive drab service uniform may now be worn by any officers of the regular army or the national guard, and all must wear the uniform of their branch whenever they appear in public. The new order does away with all use of the blue uniform for dress and the white uniform for semi-dress.

Water Mains Being Laid.

Troy.—The city of Troy is endeavoring to take care of all portions of the city and furnish ample fire protection. Since the disastrous fire it has been made plain that additional piping was needed on Park and Thompson Streets, so the city is placing in an additional four-inch main along Thompson Street connecting with Park Street.

Much Interest in Crops.

Russellville.—It appears that Russellville and Franklin County is very much interested in the "feed yourself at home" spirit, as yards, lots and every vacant place available is being planted in some kind of eatables. Also the Commercial Club has a good sized lot in the main part of the city planted in tomatoes, pumpkins, corn and different other vegetables.

100 Bales of Cotton Destroyed.

Marion.—One hundred bales of cotton on the outside of the warehouse here were destroyed by fire. It is thought that a spark from a passing train was the origin of the fire.

Bargainer Heads State Federation.

Anniston.—Tuscaloosa was chosen as the next meeting place of the State Federation of Labor at the closing session of that body held here. M. E. Bargainer was chosen president, and Louis Bowen was elected secretary.

NO ONE EXCUSED FROM REGISTERING

All of Specified Age Must Respond on June 5 to Call of Nation.

QUERIES TO BE ANSWERED

Government Has Issued Circulars Making It Easier for Those Who Register to Respond to Interrogations That Will Be Made.

There is but one answer to every question asked regarding registration, and it is this:

"Every man between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years, inclusive, whether native born, an alien, or even an alien enemy, must register June 5. This applies also to invalids and persons who are ill. A man is thirty until his thirty-first birthday anniversary."

The government has adopted a plan to facilitate and simplify the filling in of conscription registration cards June 5. Circulars containing the twelve questions to be asked and advice as to how they should be answered have been prepared for distribution.

Answers to the Questions.

The circular, which bears the heading, "How to Answer Questions on Registration Cards," reads as follows:

"Questions will be asked for you to answer in the order in which they appear on this paper. These questions are set out below with detailed information to help you answer them.

"Do not write on, mark or otherwise mutilate these instructions. Do not remove them. They should be carefully read so that you will have your answers ready when you go before the registrar.

"All answers will be written on the registration card in ink by the registrar, who should be careful to spell all names correctly and to write legibly.

"1. Name in full. Age in years, ——

"This means all your names spelled out in full.

"State your age today in years only. Disregard additional months or days. Be prepared to say 'nineteen' or 'twenty-five,' not 'nineteen years three months' or the like.

"2. Home address.

"This means the place where you have your permanent home, not the place where you work. Be prepared to give the address in this way: '232 Main street, Chicago, Cook county, Illinois;' that is, give number and name of street first, then town, then county and state.

Have Birthday Date Ready.

"Date of birth.

"Write your birthday (month, day and year) on a piece of paper before going to the registrar and give the paper to him the first thing. Example: 'August 5, 1894.'

"If you do not remember the year, start to answer as you would if someone asked you your birthday, as 'August 5.' Then say, 'on my birthday this year I will be (or was) —— years old.' The registrar will then fill in the year of birth. Many people do not carry in mind the year they were born. This may be obtained by the registrar by subtracting the age in years on this year's birthday from 1917.

"4. Are you (1) a natural born citizen; (2) a naturalized citizen; (3) an alien; (4) or have you declared your intention to become a citizen (specify which)?

"(1) If you were born in the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii, you are a natural born citizen, no matter what may have been the citizenship or nationality of your parents. If you were born in Porto Rico you are a citizen of the United States, unless you were born of alien parentage. If you were born abroad, you are still a citizen of the United States, if your father was a citizen of the United States at the time you were born, unless you have expatriated yourself.

"(2) You are a naturalized citizen if you have completed your naturalization; that is, if you have 'taken final papers.' But you are not a citizen if you have only declared your intention to become a citizen (that is, if you have only 'taken out first papers'); in the latter case you are only a 'declarant.'

"You are also a naturalized citizen if, although foreign born, your father or surviving parent became fully naturalized while you were under twenty-one years of age, and if you came to the United States under twenty-one.

"(3) You are a declarant if, although a citizen or subject of some foreign country, you have declared on oath before a naturalization court your intention to become a citizen of the United States. Receipt from the clerk of the court of the certified copy of such declaration is often called 'taking out first papers.' You are not a declarant if your first paper was taken out after September 26, 1906, and is more than seven years old.

"(4) You are an alien if you do not fall within one of the three classes above mentioned.

5. Where were you born?

"First name the town, then the state, then the country, as 'Columbus, O.;' 'Vienna, Austria;' 'Paris, France;' 'Sofia, Bulgaria.'

"6. If not a citizen, of what country are you a citizen or subject?"

"This need be answered only by aliens and declarants. Remember that a 'declarant' is not yet a citizen of the United States. If an alien or declarant, state the name of your country, as 'France,' 'Japan,' 'China,' etc.

What Is Your Job Right Now?

"7. What is your present trade, occupation or office?

"This does not ask what you once did, nor what you have done most of the time, nor what you are best fitted to do. It asks what your job is right now. State briefly, as farmer, miner, student, laborer (on farm, in rolling mill, in automobile, wagon or other factory, etc. If you hold an office under state or federal government, name the office you hold.

"If you are in one of the following offices or employments, use one of the names hereafter mentioned: 'Custom house clerk, 'employed in the transmission of the mails,' or 'employed in an armory, arsenal or navy yard, 'mariner actually employed in the sea service of citizen or merchant within the United States.'

"8. By whom employed? Where employed?

"If you are working for an individual, firm, corporation or association state its name. If in business, trade, profession or employment for yourself, so state. If you are an officer of the state or federal government say whether your office is under the United States, the state, the county or a municipality. In answer to the question as to where you are employed give the town, county and state where you work.

"9. Have you a father, mother, wife, child under twelve or a sister or brother under twelve solely dependent upon you for support (specify which):

"Consider your answer thoughtfully. If it is true that there is another mouth than your own which you alone have a duty to feed do not let your military ardor interfere with the wish of the nation to reduce war's misery to a minimum. On the other hand, unless the person you have in mind is solely dependent on you do not hide behind petticoats or children.

"10. Married or single (which)? Race (specify which)?

"This does not ask whether you were once married, but whether you are married now. In answer to the question as to your race state briefly whether Caucasian, Mongolian, negro, Malayan or Indian.

Must State Past Military Service.

"11. What military service have you had? Rank? Branch? Years? Nation or state?

"No matter what country you served, you must give complete information. In answering these questions first name your rank, using one of the following words: 'Commissioned officer,' 'noncommissioned officer,' 'private.' Next, state branch in which you served in one of the following words: 'Infantry,' 'cavalry,' 'artillery,' 'medical,' 'signal,' 'aviation,' 'supply,' 'marine,' 'navy.' Next, state the number of years' service, not counting time spent in the reserve. Finally, name the nation or state you served. If you served under the United States or one of the states of the United States, name your service in one of the following terms: 'National Guard' (of such and such a state), 'militia' (of such and such a state), 'volunteers of United States' or 'regular army (navy) of United States.'

"12. Do you claim exemption from draft? Specify grounds.

"Because you claim exemption from draft, it by no means follows that you are exempt. For the information of the war department you should make a claim now if you intend to prosecute it. Some persons will be exempted on account of their occupations or offices, some on account of the fact that they have relatives dependent upon them for support. Your answer touching these things will be important in supporting the claim you now intend to make in your answer to the present questions. Be sure, therefore, that the grounds you now state are in conformity with your answers to questions 7 and 8.

"In stating grounds you claim as exempting you use one of the following terms: If you claim to be an executive, legislative or judicial officer of the state or nation, name your office and say whether it is an office of the state or nation. If you claim to be a member of a religious sect whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form, simply name the sect. If you are employed in the transmission of the United States mails or as an artificer or workman in an armory, arsenal or navy yard of the United States, or if you are a mariner employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States, so state. If you are a felon or otherwise morally deficient and desire to claim exemption on that ground, state your ground briefly. If you claim physical disability, state that briefly. If you claim exemption on any other ground, state your ground briefly."

Only One Day to Register.

The war department wishes to impress upon the people that there is only one day for registration. All males between the designated ages must register on the day set. The fact that five days were allowed for the placing of the necessary blank forms in the hands of registrars appears to have misled some headline writers. One day only—the day fixed in the president's proclamation—will be devoted to registration.

States in Rivalry for Honor.

Not only has the individual citizenry of the country made a remarkable response to the registration call, but the states through their official heads have indicated such zeal that there is great rivalry among some of the commonwealths for the honor of making the first complete registration returns.

ONLY THOSE IN MILITARY SERVICE ARE EXEMPT FROM REGISTERING

All Between Ages of 21 and 30 Inclusive, Must Register.

Washington.—The following order covering those of the ages between 21 to 30, both inclusive, who are exempt from registering on June 5 has been issued from the office of the Provost Marshal General:

The President holds that Selective Service Act of May eighteen and proclamation and registration regulations of same date do not require registration of members of any duly organized and recognized force, military or naval, subject under other laws of United States to be called ordered or drafted into military or naval service of United States; and in order that this construction may be made plain he directs that Sections four and sixty-one of Registration Regulations of May eighteen be construed as if second sentence in each section read as follows:

"The only exceptions are persons in the military or naval service of the United States which includes all officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Regular Army Reserve, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the National Guard and National Guard Reserve recognized by the Milita Bureau of the War Department, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Naval Militia, Naval Reserve Force, Marine Corps Reserve and National Naval Volunteers, recognized by the Navy Department."

Proclamation of May eighteen will be construed accordingly.

CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General

PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO REGISTER.

Washington.—The penalty for failing to register on June 5 is pointed out in the following from Provost Marshal General Crowder:

"Failure to register on June 5th renders one liable to a year's imprisonment. The fact that one is not entitled to vote does not excuse him from registration.

White and colored, between the ages of 21 and 30, both inclusive, must register on June 5th.

E. H. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.

The Immediate Duty.

The plain duty is the near duty. A very common weakness keeps many people from finding what is near them interesting; they see that only on its paltry side. The distance, on the contrary, draws and fascinates them. In this way a fabulous amount of goodwill is wasted. People burn with ardor for humanity, for the public good, for righting distant wrongs; they walk through life, their eyes fixed on marvelous sights along the horizon, treading meanwhile on the feet of passers-by, or jostling them without being aware of their existence. Strange infirmity, that keeps us from seeing our fellows at our very doors!—Charles Wagner.

Cutting Makes the Hair Grow.

According to Dr. William Allen Pusey, the hair grows a half an inch a month until it reaches its natural length. With men the natural length is from eight to twelve inches. With women it grows anywhere from eighteen inches to their heels.

The hair grows faster in summer than in winter because of the greater activity of the skin in warm weather. The hair also grows faster when cut off. The reason for this is based upon the general principle that whenever tissue is called upon to make up a deficit it generally comes to the rescue with added energy. If you cut off your hair there is the stimulus of increased demand placed upon nature to make your hair reach its natural length.

Refining Influence.

To be thoroughly imbued with the liberal arts refines the manners and makes men to be mild and gentle in their conduct.—Ovid.

And Pay Dearly.

The road to ruin is kept in good repair at the expense of those who travel over it.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

When the Fox Naps.

The fox nearly always takes his nap during the day in the open fields, along the sides of the ridges or under the mountain, where he can look down upon the busy farms beneath and hear their many sounds.

Cancer Not Contagious.

That cancer is not contagious and not hereditary is the opinion based on statistics carefully compiled by six of the largest life insurance companies in the United States.

EXEMPTION BOARD FOR EACH COUNTY

REGULATIONS TO GOVERN EXEMPTION BEING CAREFULLY WORKED OUT.

CIVILIANS TO COMPOSE BOARD

Every Man Between the Ages of 21 and 30, Inclusive, Must Register.

Washington.—Regulations to govern exemptions under the selective draft are being worked out by Provost Marshal General Crowder with a number of prominent lawyers. Although the plans are not yet complete, it is probable that the jury wheel system will be followed in selecting those who are to go into the first army of 500,000, and not until the names have been drawn and each registration district has provided the number apportioned to it, will exemptions be considered. As each individual drawn reports, his claims for exemption will be passed upon and if he is exempted, another will be drawn to fill the vacancy.

The law provides for local exemption boards in each county and for each 30,000 in city population. Boards of review also will be established on the basis of one or more to each federal judicial district. All the board will be composed of civilians, Secretary Baker said the process of selecting them had not been worked out.

General Crowder said that only confusion would result from the reported intention of men above the fixed age to register on June 5.

"This is mistaken patriotism," he said, "and registrars will be instructed to accept cards only of men between the ages of 21 and 30 inclusive."

Men will not necessarily be excluded from draft because they are married, General Crowder explained. "Only those whose dependents must rely solely on them for support should claim exemption," he said, "and of course all married men between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, must register whether or not they propose to claim exemption.

"The act establishing the selective draft authorizes the President to exclude or discharge from the draft 'those in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable.' The census estimate shows that almost half the men available for draft are married and any sweeping exclusion of married men would therefore be inadvisable."

NINTH EPISODE

The Incorrigible Captive.

In the attic of Sebastian's house Leontine kneeled beside an open trunk, a package of letters by her side.

They were Jerry's letters, written to her in the old days, years before, when they were lovers and their lives seemed destined to run smoothly together, when they expected to tread the path of life, hand in hand, until its close.

Memories of Far-off Days Revived in Her.

Then again she began thinking of Ravengar, the mysterious man who seemed to come so opportunely into her life. In many ways he reminded her of Jerry. She knew that if it had not been for the memory of her dead lover, she could have cared for Ravengar. But when she turned to Jerry's letters Ravengar faded into a phantom.

No, it was Jerry who possessed her heart, and soul, and memory, and must until life ended. But she thought tenderly of the other, too. He had saved her life when the lighthouse was struck, and that established a bond between them. If she could keep that bond one of friendship only!

And she began living over again those awful hours in Pilot Light, and the scene rose up vividly before her again.

The flash which had shaken the structure from its base and buried the lighthouse keeper and his wife deep in the ruins had passed them by owing to an extraordinary chance. While Leontine and Ravengar were seated in their room the lamps began to go out. Ravengar went down into the cellar to get more oil.

Reaching up for a can, he had inadvertently knocked down another can, and this brought down a third and a fourth. They fell into his arms, and he was caught like a man in the story with an armful of eggs. He could neither replace them nor set them down.

Laughingly, he shouted up to Leontine to come and assist him. She heard him, and went down to his aid, took the cans from him and placed them upon the shelf. As they turned to go up the stairs the lighthouse was struck.

As they crouched under the shock, Ravengar shielding Leontine with his arms, a huge piece of masonry came down, blocking the exit. The whole lighthouse was going to pieces. Then followed a final rending, and they were thrown to their knees and pinned under the wooden shoring.

Hours must have passed in the complete darkness. Leontine was half stunned by the fall of the props; she recovered consciousness under the ministrations of Ravengar, to realize that death by starvation was imminent. He had groped his way about the cellar again and again, seeking in vain for the smallest chance of egress. At last he seemed to abandon hope. He kneeled beside Leontine and they waited together for what seemed the inevitable end.

Perhaps it was twelve hours later when the rumbling was renewed. The structure was settling down again. Stones began falling about them; and suddenly there came a gleam of daylight, striking with blinding force upon their unaccustomed eyes.

They started up, to see a narrow chink in the roof, and, through that, immeasurably far away, the white wisp of a cloud floating against the blue.

In an instant Ravengar had motioned Leontine away, and was scrambling up the debris and pulling at the stones. At first he could accomplish nothing; after a long while, however, he succeeded in dislodging a small stone which held back another. The mass fell crashing into the cellar.

Leontine, seized by Ravengar's arms and thrust upward, caught at the opening. He pushed her through, and she found herself under the blue sky, beneath her the rocks, and the sea round about her. A minute later Ravengar joined her.

Their return to the mainland in one of the boats that came to investigate the disaster was untroubled by further dangers. Leontine had gone home; and that was how Sebastian happened to see her when he returned from the ghastly episode at Bianca's house.

She rose from her knees with a sigh and put away the letters. Jerry was dead, and she must not brood over the past.

As she rose she was startled to hear Sebastian's tread upon the stairs. She waited for him, but she could hardly bear to meet him.

He came into the attic and stood looking at her curiously. It was nearly half a minute before he spoke.

"Leontine," he said, "you have not told me how you and the handsome Ravengar escaped from the burning balloon and the lighthouse accident."

"Why do you wish to know?" she asked, shrugging her shoulders. "Is it not enough for you that your dastardy scheme failed, and must be tried again?"

"What do you mean by that?" he asked.

"I mean," replied Leontine, "that I am not unaware of your attempts upon my life. The balloon that landed us at Pilot Light was set on fire by you."

"If you think that," he answered, "why don't you accept my proposition and secure a divorce from me?"

"When you have confessed to the forgery that sent Jerry Carson to prison and to his death," she answered.

Sebastian shrugged his shoulders, sneered and moved toward the door. He passed out, and Leontine heard something click as the door closed.

She was trapped. She sank down helplessly into a chair and stared wildly about her.

Suddenly she started and gasped convulsively. Across the half-darkened room, seated in a chair, she saw the ghost of Jerry. It rose and smiled sadly at her.

It might have been an optical illusion, but never had Jerry seemed so real to the girl. A little older, sterner, yet he was the same as of yore; and Leontine, overcome, tottered toward him, weeping.

But as she drew nearer the specter held out its hands.

"Come no nearer," it said, "but have no fear. No harm shall come to you. Trust in the love of my memory."

Leontine hesitated only a minute, unable to obey, she ran toward him. As she drew near, the specter vanished. She saw only the empty chair.

With a wild cry Leontine fell swooning to the ground.

* * * * * * *

In her house, at that moment, Bianca was receiving a telephone message from Sebastian. She heard it with amusement, then with embarrassment.

"All right, I'll do it for you, Sebastian," she said, and hung up the receiver. She pressed a bell, and two of her followers came in.

"Go to this address tonight," she said, telling them the number, "and bring back the girl you'll find there in your auto. Pay no attention to anything she says. She's dippy."

* * * * * * *

Leontine had fallen asleep in her chair in the attic, hopeless of escape, and yet encouraged by the vision, which she did not doubt was that of Jerry himself, come back from the grave to solace her. She awakened with a start, to hear the bolt of the door withdrawn.

Three masked men were coming into the room.

They beckoned to her, without speaking. Leontine hesitated for a moment. Then she went bravely forward. She felt that she was safer in the hands of the three than in those of Sebastian.

One man preceded her, the others ranged themselves on either side of her as they went down the wide stairway. As they passed along the passage outside Sebastian's room, the door opened, and Leontine saw him standing there, watching her, a look of satisfaction upon his face.

And suddenly she saw the figure of her dead lover again. He was standing at the top of the stairs, gazing directly at her. At the same instant her captors and Sebastian saw the ghost, also, and they staggered back, leaving Leontine for the moment alone.

Jerry Carson's hand was upraised, as if to warn the party to proceed no farther.

One of Leontine's captors had a revolver in his coat pocket. He placed his hand to the trigger and fired through the cloth at the ghost.

The figure of Jerry staggered and then fell down the stairs. It tumbled over the balustrade and disappeared. Instantly the three, together with Sebastian, hurried in pursuit.

But when they reached the bottom of the stairs there was no sign of Jerry.

Leontine had not moved from where she was at the top of the stairs. They returned and led her, not ungently, down into the hall, and into the automobile that waited outside in an alley.

A few moments earlier a speeding auto had been held up by two policemen. The discussion waxed warm. The offender was about to be taken to the station when a figure came running out of Sebastian's house.

"Somebody wants help in there!" it cried to the policemen. "I heard a shot fired. Better go and see!" And he pointed toward the rear entrance.

Dropping their captive, the policemen leaped into the auto and drove to the rear entrance around the corner of the block, just in time to see the auto with the men and Leontine emerging.

The police yelled to the driver to stop. The auto sped faster. A wild chase followed through the suburban streets and toward the river, along the edge of the high cliff.

For a few moments the fugitives seemed to gain; then the police auto leaped forward and began to overhaul them.

"Stop or I fire!" yelled one of the policemen, standing up in his seat.

A bullet from the fleeing auto answered him. The chauffeur screamed, and his hand dropped from the wheel. The policeman fired in answer, but the car swerved and the bullet went wild.

Leontine, gazing back in terror, saw the police auto swerve toward the edge of the cliff. The chauffeur had fallen to the bottom of the car. One of the policemen tried to catch the wheel. But it was too late. The car was rushing on toward the precipice. It toppled over, the front wheels churning up the chalky edge of the cliff, hung there a moment, and suddenly went plunging downward into the depths below.

Leontine sank shuddering back in her seat, while the auto drove back, by devious ways, toward Bianca's house.

"Be gentler with her!"

The men who were leading Leontine into Bianca's boudoir, somewhat roughly, released their captive and took off their masks.

"It's all right for you to say that, Madam Bianca," sneered the man whom she had addressed. "But that's what you said about your last pigeon—that guy Ravengar—and where is he today?"

"Right here, friends," came Ravengar's crisp tones from a chair beside the fireplace.

All turned in terror at the sound and saw him seated in the chair.

With an oath the man who had spoken to Bianca leaped back. On Bianca's face were two expressions—terror at Ravengar's powers, joy that he had returned.

"Take her to the room upstairs and lock her up for the present," she said.

When she was left alone with Ravengar she looked at him in wonder.

"I am glad you have come back to me," she said softly.

An amused smile hovered about Ravengar's face. "I'm glad you are glad, little one," he answered lightly.

"I'll warrant you won't leave again in a hurry!" cried the woman in fury, which was accentuated by Ravengar's mocking bow. She pressed her bell. Two attendants entered promptly.

"Lock him in the strong room," she announced.

They frisked Ravengar hurriedly for weapons, but found nothing. Then, seizing him, one by either arm, they hurried him toward the door.

The strong room was in the hallway outside Bianca's boudoir. In this room were stored Bianca's stolen goods until they could be disposed of. As her plunder was considerable, it was a large room. It was built into the wall, and was, to all appearance, one with it, so that its discovery on the part of anyone who did not suspect its existence would be practically impossible. But the wooden exterior of the door was lined with a steel jacket, the walls were of steel, and the ceiling also. There was, in short, no possibility for anyone, securely shut in it, to escape.

"This time I've got you," soliloquized Bianca as the men went upstairs with their prisoner.

Meanwhile Ravengar accompanied his captors quietly to the door of the strong room. They thrust him inside.

"I guess this will hold him," said one to the other, leisurely turning the knob to the proper combination.

"If it won't, there's nothing will," answered the other.

They locked the door and went back to announce to Bianca the fulfillment of their mission.

* * * * * * *

Upstairs Leontine found herself a prisoner in an ordinary bedroom. It was preferable being here to being a prisoner of Sebastian.

She loathed him, and she would never set eyes on him again, save at the moment when she could wring the secret from him. And more and more she was coming to believe that in Ravengar lay the key to the mystery.

He had come back, he had been in Bianca's house when she was brought there. He would come to aid her. Unconsciously she spoke his name.

"At your service, Leontine," answered the well-known voice; and Ravengar stepped out from behind the curtains that hung before the window.

"Be brave and all will come out well," he said. "The play is nearly ended. I may have to leave you alone again, but never fear. The memory of Jerry will support you in every danger."

Suddenly the door opened. On the threshold stood Bianca. As she caught sight of Ravengar her eyes blazed with passion, and her voice shook as she asked:

"What are you doing here? How did you get here?"

Ravengar made his courtly, mocking bow, and replied: "My dear lady, to be here is the only reason why I returned to your hospitable house."

Bianca turned to her men, who were behind her. "Take him away!" she cried, stamping furiously.

They seized Ravengar and ran him down the stairs toward the strong room again, Bianca following, pouring out her wrath and fury against them.

"How did he get away?" she cried.

"We locked him in."

"You are lying. There is no way of getting out of the strong room if the combination is set properly."

One of the men turned upon her. "Say, madame, I guess you know there ain't no locks can hold him," he retorted.

Ravengar, meanwhile, thrust into the dark room, leaned back smiling against the wall. His mockery made Bianca almost frantic.

"You are a pack of fools!" she cried. "I'll set the combination this time."

And, slamming the heavy door, she adjusted her lock and clicked it. She called her men to her room.

"See that there is no further trouble with that woman upstairs," she said significantly. "Make a clean job of it, and, when you are through, you can carry her out of the old waterway gate."

Without compunction the two men nodded and started up the hall stairs.

The waterway was an old subterranean sluice under Bianca's house, which was very ancient and had been a country home before the advance of the encroaching city enmeshed it in its tentacles, together with the other scattered residences of the street. This water-duct had long ago become disused, and its existence forgotten. Bianca, in the course of the reconstructions which she had made, for the purpose of storing stolen goods, had come upon it and followed it down to the river, half a mile distant. She had discovered also that there still existed a connection with the city water supply by means of a large pipe in the wall of her cellar.

She had fitted a connection between this pipe and a bathroom on the floor where was her bedroom. Just outside the bathroom she constructed a trap-door with an iron ladder leading down to the sluice, in order to furnish herself with a safe and sure escape in case of need.

The switch in the bathroom was open, leaving the sluice full. But a turn of it would at once begin to empty it into the river beyond.

Bianca waited near the trap door for the accomplishment of her servitors' errand.

But presently she found the strain too much for her. She went into her boudoir and sank down upon a couch.

"Bring her down," said one of Bianca's men to the other. "I guess madame doesn't want it done in the bedroom."

"Who's going to do the trick?" the other retorted.

"I'll do it if you'll get her. Bring her along this way, without letting her suspect, and I'll be behind this curtain."

The second man made his way upstairs. He unlocked Leontine's door and stood for a moment hesitating.

As he stood there an arm slid round his neck and a hand was pressed over his mouth and nostrils, his knees gave under him and he fell unconscious to the floor.

Ravengar released him and looked into her purple face. He opened the door. Leontine, who had heard the lock unfasten, was waiting in the middle of the room. Ravengar entered, seized her hand, and kissed it.

"Come with me, Leontine," he said. "There is not a moment to be lost. Will you promise to keep composed and do exactly as I tell you?"

She gave a swift look at him, and nodded. Ravengar gave her his arm and led her out of the room, past the man on the floor, who was already beginning to recover consciousness.

He led her down the stairs hurriedly. Fortunately nobody was on guard. In her boudoir Bianca, whose keen ears heard the sound of footsteps, thought it was the men coming to tell her that the job was done.

Meanwhile the second of the murderers waited behind the curtains. He heard Ravengar descending with Leontine, but he thought the man was his confederate.

Ravengar, in his comings and goings, had learned all about the sluiceway. He stopped with Leontine outside the bathroom and hastily raised the trap-door, which lay beneath a piece of carpet, apparently one with that which ran along the passage, but in reality separate.

"Go down there," he whispered. "It leads to a sluiceway that opens upon the river. When you reach the bottom wait till the sluice empties; then run as fast as you can till you see daylight. Then you will be free."

Leontine looked at him. "You?" she whispered.

"I shall turn off the water; then I may follow. But don't wait for me."

The girl stepped down hurriedly, felt for and found the upper rungs of the ladder, and descended. Ravengar closed it, stepped into the bathroom, and shut off the supply. Then he emerged, just as the second confederate came from behind the curtain.

His mouth opened in amazement; then, with an oath, he whipped out a revolver and leveled it. Ravengar, smiling at him, waited. At that instant the half-strangled man came slowly down the stairway. He saw Ravengar and shouted. At the cry Bianca came running out of her room.

She stared at Ravengar as if she could not believe her eyes. Then, letting them fall for a moment, she saw something which arrested her attention. It was a fragment of Leontine's dress, caught in the trap door. And immediately the meaning of his presence there dawned on her.

She rushed into the bathroom and pulled the switch hard. Then she came back, breathing hard, but with a forced smile on her face.

"Well, I stopped that game in time," she said to Ravengar.

Leontine groped her way to the bottom of the ladder and saw, by faint light which filtered in through the cellar, the sluiceway before her. A great flood of water was pouring out through the pipe, filling the dark tunnel.

As she watched it the water gate went down. The flood of water, gurgling and rumbling on its way to the river, rapidly grew less. It was only a minute before the tunnel lay, empty and black, before her eyes.

She ran wildly, her feet splashing in the water. Once, reaching up, she felt the roof of the tunnel overhead.

Meanwhile Ravengar, above, was smiling into the face of his captor. He knew that every second gained was precious, and the man had not wits enough to think that he might have closed the watergate.

Leontine made her hurried progress below. It was a long time after she had started before she saw the tiny glimmer of light ahead of her which denoted the end of her journey.

But suddenly she heard a rumbling sound behind her. A rush of water almost swept her off her feet. Bianca had thrown over the lever.

Leontine guessed what had occurred. There ought to be time to gain the entrance.

The water was up to her waist. She almost despaired. A hundred yards to go, and every yard was made through deeper water. It swirled against her chest, it was up to her shoulders; it touched her chin.

Gasping, choking, struggling for life, Leontine suddenly became aware that she had been swept through the tunnel; a moment later she opened her eyes, to find herself cast upon the muddy bank of the river.

* * * * * * *

Ravengar had disappeared once more!

As Bianca ran back triumphantly from the bathroom, in which she had pressed the switch, she saw the two men staring about them in astonishment.

Bianca stamped her foot furiously. "Where is he?" she demanded.

"He's gone," muttered one of the men in awe-struck tones.

"Down the trap-door, you fool! Go down and bring him up. You," she continued to the second man, "stand at the top of the stairs and see that he doesn't pass you. I'm going to search the rooms."

Suddenly the man on guard at the head of the stairs screamed loudly, and Bianca came running out of one of the rooms. He cried again and pointed toward the bathroom. Bianca saw the head and shoulders of Ravenger as he leaned over the switch. She darted after him. The switch had been reversed.

She sprang at him, but he laughed and, catching her by the shoulders, pushed her back into the passage, slamming the door upon her. Every second was precious now.

That was the moment when Leontine, in the tunnel, was suddenly swept from her feet and carried out into the daylight.

Bianca raved and hammered at the door. For the second time he had thwarted her. She felt her love for him turn into deadly hatred.

"Open that door!" she called to her subordinates; and just then the head and shoulders of the man whom she had sent below emerged through the trap door.

"He isn't down there, and the sluice is full of water," he said lugubriously.

"Fool!" shouted Bianca, "he's in the bathroom. Open that door! Break it down, the pair of you!"

There was a key in the door, but it was on the outside, and Ravengar could not turn it. The two men dashed themselves against it. Their united strength was too great for Ravengar. They forced him back, still struggling desperately, and dragged him from the room.

"Hold him on your lives!" said Bianca, and, entering the bathroom, threw the switch over the second time.

It was too late. Leontine had recovered consciousness and staggered away just as the renewed flood began to pour through the tunnel.

Bianca darted back. "Now we've got him," she cried. "We'll put him where he won't be able to play any more of those tricks upon us."

"Back into the strong room," asked the first man.

"Shall I croak him?" inquired the second.

Bianca looked at Ravengar and nodded. The second man raised his revolver and aimed it at Ravengar's head; however, he waited upon the sign from his mistress before pulling the trigger.

Bianca hesitated, too. She watched Ravengar's face like a cat watching its prey. At the least sign of fear she would have nodded to the man who held the revolver; but Ravengar only smiled at her. She felt overawed; the man's moral power was something that she had never encountered before.

"Why don't you get away now?" she demanded tauntingly. "You seem able to go where you want to. Are you tired of your life or what?"

"Dear madame," answered Ravengar easily, "did I not come back to you of my own free will? I must say that this reception is the reverse of hospitable."

The mockery upon his face daunted her. If he were dead he would die triumphant, his will would have conquered.

"Stop!" she cried; and the men lowered their revolvers.

They stepped back, growling; their mistress' whims were inexplicable to them.

Ravengar bent down and kissed Bianca's hand. "I knew that you were too kind to kill a helpless prisoner."

There was still the mockery in his tone, and Bianca could bear it no longer. She burst into helpless tears, while her followers looked at her in amazement, and then at each other significantly.

She turned upon them. "Get out—the pair of you!" she cried.

Meanwhile Leontine, drenched by the flood, waited upon the river bank for the coming of the man who had saved her.

The minutes passed into hours. Still she crouched there. At last, however, a little hope began to dawn in her. If Ravengar had been in the tunnel he would have been swept out by the flood.

He was alive, unless he had been murdered in Bianca's house. She must find out and help him without a moment's delay. With renewed strength she gathered her draggled skirts about her and ran up the river bank.

Every man who has goods on a freight car can help in the war by unloading the car as quickly as possible so that it may be loaded again and sent on its way.

It is remarkable what reliance the democrats place on the views of the general staff with respect to send-T. R. to Europe, and how little the advice of the staff was heeded before war was declared.

"Strike while the iron is hot" is an old adage, so old that some people overlook it. But it is a slogan that might well be adopted in our war policy. Bonds will never again sell as readily as they would immediately after the declaration of war, Enthusiasm wanes with "watchful waiting."

"It is usually a poor workman who begins by complaining of his tools". If the Bureaus at Washington would use the powers they have, without delay, there would be more inclination to listen with sympathy to their pleas that they haven't power necessary to make them efficient.

During this time of scarcity of tin cans the frugal housewife can help out a lot by sun-drying many products that have heretofore been preserved in tin and glass. A few vegetables and many fruits can be cured by spreading in the sun, or by use of some simple process of hot air drying. The use of dried instead of canned fruits will make a big difference in the supply of tin.

Those people who think it is improper to discuss administration policies during the war should write a letter of commendation to Chairman Claude Kitchin, of the House Ways and Means Committee, who admits that his revenue bill contains provisions so ill-advised that he will vote for them "with his eyes shut."

TOO THIN-SKINNED

Some mollycoddles and a few dyed-in-the-wool Democrats are over fearful that something may be said that may be construed to be opposition to the administration war policy, and there is the intimation that such action and such criticism may be sinisterly pratisan on the part of the Republican Editors and speakers.

There is no ground for such fears, no cause for intimations.

Man for man, newspaper for newspaper, congressman for congressman, the support of Woodrow Wilson has been proportionately larger and undeniably stronger from Republicans than from Democrats. While the latter, many of them with an eye single to the loaves and fishes, were yelling their heads off to "stand by the president" during the last campaign, because "he kept us out of war," and were in great wrath when it was truthfully stated by the opposition press that a little more vim and vigor at the very outset of the Mexican troubles would have ended them speedily, and at the same time would doubless have been such an object lesson to Germany as would have prevented her numerous aggressions and insults that have led up to present war condition between Germany and the United States, it is mainly democratic congressmen and editors who have been leaders in the opposition to the administration war plans.

It is ill-timed as well as untruthful for anybody at this time to make a charge of unfair politics. There is nothing unfair in just and honest criticism. If an injection of partisan politics is introduced in the management of war affairs with an evident design to create a bureaucracy; to make additional places and jobs for "deserving democrats;" to reject the proffered services of a distinguished and patriotic citizen, an ex-president on account of political prejudices; to ask for unlimited public money to be used without special congressional authority and without any adequate board or commission on the conduct of the war to prevent the possible inefficiency, leaks, wastefulness, extravagance and perhaps dishonesty that have not been unknown in former years—the calling attention to these matters constitutes no element of opposition to the administration, no exploiting of mean partisanism and no disloyalty to government.

Directing attention to any inefficiency, any narrow partisanism, any apparent disposition to make the horrors and cost of war contributory to partisan advantage, or any evident attempt to anybody to profit dishonesty through war contracts, is so far from being dishonorable or disloyal that it is patriotic duty and a "standing by the president" that is worth while.—Mansfield (Ohio) News.

NOTES FROM W. H. CONWAY ON WHEAT, OATS, AND SO ON

Harvest all wheat and oats as soon as they get in stiff dough. Do not wait for it all to get dry. Shock all grain in the field till danger of molding is past then house same till it can be thrashed.

Do not leav egraininthefieldshlq,e Do not leave grain in the field any longer than necessary, as it is likely to be damaged and some lost by storms and rain.

Save all the Alabama Blue Stem wheat possible for planting seed. It is earlier, more resistent to rust, usually makes better yields and makes better flour than the later and bearded wheats.

If you have bearded wheat, try to exchange enough for seed with some neighbor or with some one operating a thrash, in order that you may secure Blue Stem wheat to plant your crop with this fall.

Seed wheat will be scarce and high this fall, so secure yours now if possible.

Fulghum oats will also be scarce and very high this fall, and all these genuine oats grown in our county should be saved for seed purposes, even if you should have to buy oats to take their place.

One bushel of genuine Fulghum seed oats will sell for enough this fall to pay for from one and a half to two bushels of feed oats.

Do not neglect the gardens, continue to plant butter beans, poll beans, peas and sweet and Irish potatoes.

Save all the fruit and berries possible as we need them worse than usual and they will help out the food shortage very much.

Wet Buckeye Hulls carry the feed perfectly

ROUGHAGE is of little value if it allows the concentrated foods to sift to the bottom of the trough and become separated from it. There is no danger of this with

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

when they are wetted down a half hour or so before using. Then they combine more thoroughly and uniformly with the other forage than the old style hulls.

Use Buckeye Hulls properly and you will find them a better roughage than old style hulls and far more economical.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls cost much less than old style hulls.
They allow better assimilation of food.
No trash or dust. No lint.
2000 pounds real roughage to the ton—not 1500 pounds of roughage and 500 pounds of lint.
Sacked—easy to handle.
Take less space in the barn.

Mr. E. W. Leonard, Ellendale, Tenn., has been feeding Buckeye Hulls to three milch cows. He says that the cows are giving more milk and butter and are in fine condition. He prefers Buckeye Hulls.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

IN MEMORIAM

Last Tuesday the death angel came and took away Tolley Baker, the son of Mr. John W. Baker,

He was a boy whom we all loved dearly, and whom we were ever glad to be with.

He was about 21 years of age, and belonged to the Missionary Baptist Church at Liberty Hill.

Tollie Joined the army last October so as to be patriotic to his state and country. He went to the border of Mexico, where his health began to fail. Later he was sent to a hospital in Fort Sam Houston, Tex., where he died with endocarditis.

His remains were sent home and buried at Liberty Hill Church about 11, a.m. Saturday. Services were conducted by Rev. A. L. Foshee.

The love andf riendship toward Tollie was proven by the number that was present and by the beautiful wreathes that were presented at the grave. We know that Tollie has gone to an eternal place of rest to rejoice with the angels, but we cannot ever cease to be lonesome without him to love, cherish and have him show his kindness toward us.

EARLY VARIETIES OF COWPEAS

By J. F. Duggar, Director Alabama Experiment Station and Extension Service.

Prepared by Extension Service, Auburn, Ala.

Unfortunately, cowpeas for planting are scarce and high priced. Yet ever more than the full acreage of this legume is needed this year, largely for human food.

For this year, with high priced meat and meal, we need a large increase in the supply of human food grown on the farm. We need these substitutes at the earliest practicable date.

Early cowpeas is one of the crops that should be grown for this purpose. Moreover, early varieties have special advantagesin a year when seed are expensive. This is because two crops of early cowpeas can be grown in a single season in the central and southern parts of the Gulf States. That is, a bushel of some early variety planted in drills on 2 acres or more late in April should ripen a part of its crop by the middle of July, at which time, with fair yields, the mature half of the crop should amount to about 16 bushels. This in turn would be sufficient to plant about 30 additional acres in drills for seed production, or half that amount broadcast for hay.

The Experiment Station at Auburn has repeatedly picked mature New Era cowpeas about the middle of July, has sunnned them for about a week, and then planted on other land in time to obtain mature peas before a late fall frost, or a hay crop before an early frost.

Another early variety is the California Blackeye, also called Six-weeks and Ramshorn, which is less productive than New Era, but which, being white, sells at a higher price for table use.

Let us not forget that green cowpeas constitute one of the most nutritious vegetables, and at less expense for seed than either English peas or snap beans.

NERVOUSNESS AND BLUES

Symptoms of More Serious Sickness.

Washington Park, Ill.—"I am the mother of four children and have suffered with female trouble, backache, nervous spells and the blues. My children's loud talking and romping would make me so nervous I could just tear everything to pieces and I would ache all over and feel so sick that I would not want anyone to talk to me at times. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills restored me to health and I want to thank you for the good they have done me. I have had quite a bit of trouble and worry but it does not affect my youthful looks. My friends say 'Why do you look so young and well?' I owe it all to the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies." —Mrs. ROBT. Salted Fish Popular Food.

How to conserve the fish supply is one of the subjects receiving careful attention by the British board of trade, in conjunction with the board of agriculture. One of the methods which will probably be adopted is the drying or salting of a much larger proportion of the daily catch than at present, so as to prevent waste by the fish getting out of condition. Salted haddock are already being placed on the market in considerable quantities as an experiment. They sell at about 12 cents a pound retail, and are very palatable. One method of preparing is to boil the fish, throw away the water, and boil up again, but if it is washed to get rid of practically all the salt the haddock should also be soaked in cold water for 24 hours before cooking.

DEADLY STORMS IN MANY STATES

Over 200 Dead And 1,000 Injured By Tornadoes Which Sweep Through Various Sections

PROPERTY LOSS $5,000,000

South Dyersburg, Tenn., Ravaged And Six Killed And 32 Injured—Nine Killed In Arkansas

Chicago.—More than one hundred and fifty persons were killed, a thousand or more injured and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed by tornadoes which swept through Kansas, Illinois and Indiana and parts of Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Kentucky and southern Illinois. Reports indicate that a large number of farm implements, needed to produce the bumper crop desired this year, were ruined, although the spasmodic wind struck onlp here and there in its frightful play through the rural regions. Crop damage is said to be not heavy in grains.

The heaviest toll of life was taken at Mattoon, Ill., a city of 10,000 people, in the broomcorn country of central Illinois, where 54 are known to be dead and 500 injured, with a property loss of $2,000,000.

Charleston, Ill., ten miles east of Mattoon, was also partly wrecked with a loss of of thirty-eight lives and one hundred and fifty injured. The property loss there is a million dollars.

The next most serious loss was at Andale, Kans., where twenty-six were killed and a score injured. Dublin, Kentucky, suffered three dead and seventeen injured.

South Dyersburg, Tenn., was reported to have lost six killed and thirty-two injured in a tornado that swept Dyer county. Near Blytheville, Ark., nine persons were reported killed and a dozen hurt and reports receivd in Birmingham said several were killed and many injured when a tornado struck Sayre, Ala.

Reports from Indiana show at least seven persons killed at Hebron, Kouts and other places and the death list may reach twenty. More than two hundred were injured in the Indiana territory swept by the storm.

Smaller towns in Illinois lost a dozen dead and two score injured.

U-BOAT OUTRAGES HURRYING BRAZIL INTO WORLD WAR

President Braz Sends Message To Congress Declaring Measures Must Be Taken Against Germany

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.—The committee on foreign relations in the Brazilian congress drafted a measure recommending the cancellation of the decree of April 25, 1917, which declared the neutrality of Brazil in the war between Germany and the United States. President Braz, under the bill, would be authorized to take necessary steps for carrying out of this law and to put into practice the acts which result from the cessation of neutrality.

The Brazilian foreign minister presented to congress a message signed by President Braz in which it is stated that the sinking of Brazilian merchantmen by German submarines obliges the government to take measures against the Teuton U-boats. The utilization but not confiscation of German vessels interned in Brazilian seaports is suggested.

Criminal To Urge Non-Registration

Washington.—Criminal prosecution awaits persons who attempt to prevent registration under the war army bill by propaganda or otherwise. Attorney General Gregory announces that his attention has been called to the circulation of propaganda designed to discourage registration, and he states that the government will deal vigorously and summarily with all such cases.

Drastic Move To Lower Coal Prices

Washington.—Drastic action will be taken by the government at an early date to bring down to a fair basis the soaring prices of coal and to punish under the criminal sections of the anti-trust statutes and the national defense acts the operators who are proven guilty of undue inflation of prices.

German Airships Raid England Again

London.—German airships to the number of about sixteen raided southeast England, according to an official statement issued here. Seventy-six persons were killed. One hundred and seventy-four persons were injured. Three of the German airships were shot down. The raiding aircraft which were brought down were airplanes. Nearly all the damage occurred in one town where some bombs fell in the streets, causing casualties among the civilian population, killing many women and children.

133 Lives Are Lost When Ship Sinks

London.—Forty-eight passengers and 85 members of the crew of the Spanish steamer Ci de Eizaguirre, 4,376 tons, are reported to have perished as a result of the sinking of the vessel. A dispatch says that, according to the second officer, the steamer sank in five minutes. He was awakened by a great noise and rushed to the deck and tried to get passengers into his boat, but the boat was swept away and almost simultaneously the steamer broke in half, and went down.

PRESIDENT STATES POSITION

Impossible For U. S. To Stay Out Any Longer And Maintain Self-Respet, Says Wilson

Washington.—No nation that respected itself or the rights of humanity could longer have borne the overwhelming wrongs that Germany inflicted on the United States, President Wilson declared in a letter re-stating the reasons for this nation's entrance into the war, written to Representative Heflin of Alabama and made public at the white house.

Mr. Heflin had written to the president, saying some of his recent utterances on the war apparently had caused confusion over the issue with Germany. In re-stating his position, the president again made it clear that the United States has no quarrel with the German people, but with an autocracy "which acts upon purposes to which the German people have never consented."

President's Letter

The letter follows:

"It is incomprehensible to me how any frank or honest person could doubt or question my position with regard to the war and its objects.

"I have again and again stated the very serious and long continued wrongs which the imperial German government has perpetrated against the rights, the commerce and the citizens of the United States. The list is long and overwhelming. No nation that respected itself or the rights of humanity could have borne those wrongs any longer.

"Our objects in going into the war have been stated with equal clearness. The whole of the conception which I take to be the conception of our fellow countrymen with regard to the outcome of the war and the terms of its settlement, I set forth with the utmost explicitness in an address to the senate of the United States on the 22d of January last. Again in my message to congress on the 2d of April last those objects were stated in unmistakable terms.

Disloyal To Becloud Issue

"I can conceive no purpose in seeking to becloud this matter except the purpose of weakening the hands of the government and making the part which the United States is to play in this great struggle for human liberty an inefficient and hesitating part. We have entered the war for our own objects, clearly stated, and shall forget neither the reasons nor the objects.

"There is no hate in our hearts for the German people, but there is a resolve which cannot be shaken even by misrepresentation to overcome the pretensions of the autocratic government which acts upon purposes to which the German people have never consented."

No American Warships Have Sunk

Washington.—A categorical denial that any American naval vessels have been sunk in the war was issued by Secretary Daniels to counteract a "campaign of vicious rumors that is being carried on so industriously by persons unknown." It was the first official notice to be taken of a flood of reports of naval disasters that started almost as soon as it was known that American destroyers were in the war zone. "It is with deep regret," said the secretary in a formal statement, "that I note the daily stream of false reports with regard to the sinking of American ships."

Goethals Says Wooden Ships Hopeless

New York.—Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, speaking informally at the annual dinner of the Iron and Steel institute, declared that the proposal to build one thousand 3,000-ton wooden ships in eighteen months "is simply hopeless." For that reason, he said, it has become necessary to turn to steel as well as wood. "As I need assistance and co-operation in my work," said General Goethals, "I concluded to tell you my troubles and ask your help. On the principle of the selective draft, I have been again called to build 1,000 3,000-ton wooden ships.

Claims Cure Found For U-Boat Evil

New York.—Hudson Maxim announces that he has invented and perfected a device which will make ships immune from the dangers of the submarine. He says that torpedoes, even when fired at close range and striking their targets, will explode harmlessly against the hulls of their intended victims.

Sweeping Powers For Food Control

Washington.—The second of the administration's food bills, revised to create an emergency agency to control, under the president's direction, distribution and sale of the necessaries of life, was introduced in the house by Chairman Lever of the agricultural committee. The first bill aims at stimulation of production and calls for a general survey of the country's food resources. The regulatory measure was redrawn after President Wilson had held a series of conferences with Herbert C. Hoover

$50,000 Is Subscribed For Relief Work

Atlanta.—Almost before the ashes of the fire were cold, plans were being made in Atlanta for the rebuilding of the burned area along lines of great civic beauty, and for replacing the destroyed residences with even handsomer homes than those that stood in this district before the fire. At the same time steps were taken to help the sufferers from the flames, and with this end in view a relief fund was started attended by prominent business men, which, in one day, had exceeded fifty thousand dollars.

GERMAN SPIES GET U. S. WAR SECRETS

Kaiser Knew Flotilla Was Coming Four Days Before American Destroyers Arrived In British Waters

MINES PLACED BY U-BOATS

Before Vessels Steamed Into Queenstown Submarines Had Mined Harbor Entrance

Washington.—Four days before the American destroyer flotilla arrived abroad Berlin knew it was on the way and to what port it was going and the day before the little vessels steamed into Queenstown German submarines had strewn mines about the harbor entrance.

This startling information, revealing that German spies not only still are at their work in this country, but that they have a swift and sure means of communicating America's war secrets to Germany, came to the navy department in a cablegram from Admiral Sims at London.

Information Is Positive

The admiral said his information was positive. His dispatch was not made public and for obvious reasons nothing will be given out concerning how the news came into his possession nor about the precautions which defeated the German plans and enabled the flotilla to speed safely through the mine fields.

Immediate publicity was given the salient fact, however, the department making clear that its purpose was to let the people know of the activity and success of Teutonic spies and to emphasize the necessity for absolute secrecy in connection with naval operations or shipping movements.

The destroyers, now aiding in the hunt for submarines in European waters under the direction of Admiral Sims, put into port at Queenstown on May 4. How long they were in crossing the Atlantic and from what port they sailed never has been announced and until word of their arrival came by cable only a few people in the United States even knew of the government's decision to send warships to Europe.

ITALIANS SMASHING AT TRIEST DEFENSES

Austrian Troops Making Counter Attacks, But Repulsed With Very Heavy Losses

New York.—From Plava, on the Isonzo, to the Adriatic sea, the Italians and Austrians are fighting bitterly and the troops of General Cadorna are making steady progress, especially on the southern end of the twenty-one mile front.

North and south of Jamiano, eight miles south of Gorizia, the Italians have driven the Austrians back and taken additional important positions. The gains here are a direct menace to the defenses of Triest. Notwithstanding the difficulties of terrain and the stubbornness of the enemy resistance, Cadorna's men have taken two strongly fortified hills north of Jamiano and reached the outskirts of Versio.

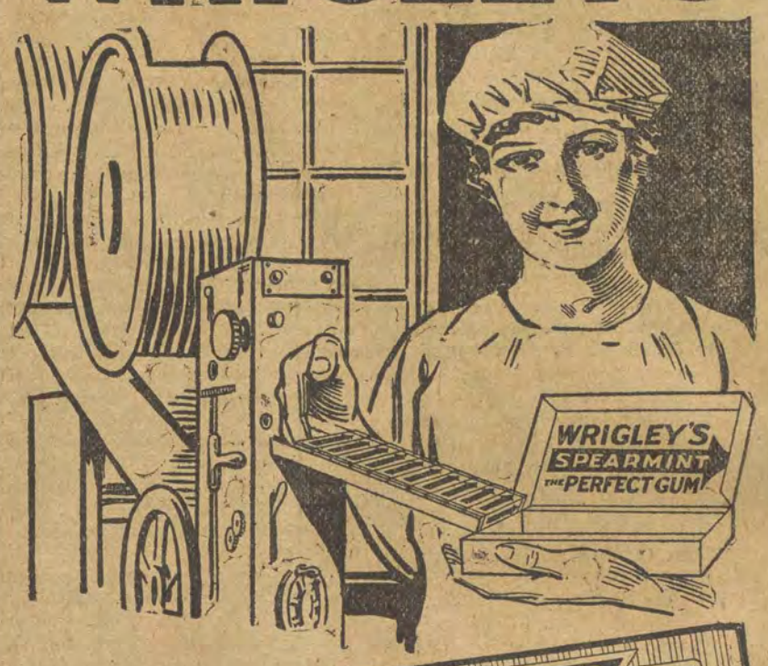
The number of prisoners taken by General Cadorna's command has increased to 10,245, including more than three hundred officers.

EFFECTIVE BLOWS BEING DEALT GERMAN U-BOATS

Lloyd George Tells Commons Shipping Losses Are Decreasing And That U-Boats Cannot Win The War

London.—Premier Lloyd George, on announcing in the house of commons that more effective blows had been dealt submarines in the last three weeks than during any corresponding period of the war, paid a tribute to the assistance of the American navy, saying:

"We owe a very considerable debt of gratitude to the great American people for the effective assistance they have rendered and the craft they have placed at our disposal. Now that the American nation is in the war it is easier to make arrangements for the protection of our mercantile marine than it was before." The statement was loudly cheered.



Japan Drawing American Gold Flow

Washington.—Treasury officials engrossed in the far-reaching program of international financing upon which this country has entered, turned their chief attention to the unexpected and somewhat disconcerting discovery that for the past month Japan has been withdrawing gold from the United States at the rate of $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 a year. Gold exports to Japan within the past three or four weeks, it is stated authoritatively, have been between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

$745,000,000 Loaned To Entente Allies

Washington. — Treasury officials closed the international ledger for May with another debit to the British government of $75,000,000, bringing the total thus far loaned Great Britain up to $400,000,000. A payment of $75,000,000 also was made to Italy, on her credit of $100,000,000 previously announced. Exactly thirty days have elapsed since this government made its first loan to the allies. During this period the amount placed at the disposal of the five allied nations has reached a total of $745,000,000.

No Photos in London.

Photographers were forbidden to take pictures of the scenes incident to the dedicatory services at St. Paul's Cathedral in honor of the entry of the United States into the war, a fact which has aroused the indignation of newspapers and photographers. Press photographers who attended the ceremonies were placed on their honor not to take pictures of any feature of the service, either inside or outside St. Paul's Cathedral. The only picture of the king and queen was secured by an amateur photographer who was concealed behind a chimney on the roof of a building along the parade route.

He said he thought it would benefit me more than anything I could take.

"I would get so bad off I couldn't do my work at all, and I was confined to my bed part of the time, and suffered most of the time; sometimes awful . . . I then began to take Cardui and I soon began to see that it benefited me. It eased my pains and the enlargement went out of my . . . and I have been steadily getting better ever since.

HAD NO HOPE OF RETURNING ALIVE

Mrs. Cason Left Home for Atlanta Propped Up on Pillows—Was Only a Shadow.

ONLY WEIGHED 60 POUNDS

After Taking Tanlac Has Gained Thirty-five Pounds and Expects to Return to Home and Husband Well and Happy.

"About six weeks ago I left my home on our farm near Acworth, Ga., to come to my sister's home here in Atlanta, and I left with only a shadow of hope of ever returning alive.

"I left Acworth in a comfortable automobile, propped up on pillows, coming through the country. I had almost as much medicine as baggage—a big box full of all kinds that had been prescribed for me. I reached here very weak and with scarcely enough strength to walk to the door. This trouble from which I had suffered so long and which I was told was pellagra, had reduced me to almost a shadow, as I only weighed sixty pounds.

"My brother-in-law, Mr. Battle, said, 'Well, you have tried everything else with no relief, now I want you to lay aside your "drug shop" and take Tanlac.' Well, he got it for me and I started on my first bottle that day.

"When I had taken about half the first bottle I began to feel stronger and encouraged. I continued to take it and it is nothing short of marvelous how I improved day by day. My appetite returned and my food seemed to nourish me and agree with me. My skin and complexion began clearing and I improved in every way possible until I am now a well woman, and when I say well I mean absolutely what I say. I want to tell the whole world that I thank God for Tanlac.

"I weigh ninety-five pounds now and feel as well as I ever felt in my life. I am going back to my husband and home on the little farm, five miles from Acworth, tomorrow, and won't it be a joyful meeting, returning absolutely well and happy—and won't I tell everybody about what Tanlac has done for me."

The above remarkable statement was made recently by Mrs. O. C. Cason of Acworth, Ga., while at the home of her sister, Mrs. J. B. Battle, English Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

CZAR'S ANSWER TO PEOPLE

"Forget Your Senseless Dreams," Was Reply to Modest Request for Chamber of Representatives.

An incident which occurred at the very beginning of Nicholas II.'s reign is very characteristic of the attitude of the former emperor toward any share of the people in the government of Russia, writes A. N. Sakhnovsky, in World's Work.

A deputation of the foremost representatives of the Russian nobility was sent to bring congratulations to the new emperor. Very bright hopes were connected with the ascendance to the throne of the young monarch, after a period of gloomy reaction during the reign of his father, Alexander III, and in consequence, it was decided to present to him through a delegation of the nobles an extremely modest supplication in favor of an embryo chamber of representatives, the only proposed right of which was the "right" to be consulted by the emperor whenever it pleased him.

The delegation, composed of highly respected and venerable elderly gentlemen, numbering several hundred, was lined in the big hall of the Winter palace in Petrograd and kept standing in a military order and in complete silence for more than two hours.

At last a detachment of dismounted horseguards, in top-boots and with huge swords, hurriedly entered the hall with a terrific noise and placed itself in front of the awe-stricken delegation.

Then the tiny emperor, in wild excitement, rushed in and, pacing up and down the hall in the midst of the giant soldiers and shouting at the venerable gentlemen, delivered a brief but very definite speech, the gist of which consisted of the following expression: "Forget your senseless dreams!"

Lemon Juice For Freckles

Girls! Make beauty lotion at home for a few cents. Try it!

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle and tan lotion, and complexion beautifier, at very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of orchard white for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless. One-Sided Recognition.

They passed on the street without speaking—but their eyes held mutual recognition and challenge. She was accompanied by a female friend, and he had a male companion. When they had passed, the girl said:

"That was poor Jack Jurgens. He didn't speak, but you noticed his look, didn't you? Poor boy—it hurts me to think how he has never got over my refusal to marry him? Of course, he was all broke up at the time, but I thought he would soon get over it. He's thinner, isn't he? I do hope that he hasn't plunged into dissipation. He couldn't trust himself to speak, could he? Oh, dear!"

And the man was saying:

"Did you see how that dame gave me the eye? I suppose I should have spoken to her, because I can't help thinking I've met her somewhere—her face is familiar, but I can't place her."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR JUNE 3

JESUS BETRAYED AND DENIED.

LESSON TEXT—John 18:1-11, 15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—He was despised and rejected of men.—Isa. 53:3.

In teaching this lesson to some of the younger classes, emphasis might be placed upon the dramatic scene in the garden of Gethsemane, and Peter's denial at the fire. In some of the intermediate classes the scholars might be asked to write short, one-minute essays, describing the scene as though they, themselves, were present. For the adult classes of course the central theme is the way that Christ's followers neglect him today even as the disciples slept in Gethsemane, and betrayed him like Judas or denied him like Peter.

I. The Place of Retreat (vv. 1-3). In his emphasis upon the spiritual grandeur of the deity of Jesus, John does not dwell upon the agony in the garden. He, however, gives us that noblest passage in the New Testament (chs. 14-17), the like of which cannot be found anywhere else in the world's writings. Having spoken these words, Jesus and his disciples went over the Brook Kedron (v. 1) to the garden, there to bear the awful weight of agony that was crushing him (Matt. 26:38), while at the same time he must strengthen his disciples, and fortify them against the coming trials. That this place was a place of frequent resort for Jesus, Judas was aware. It was a sanctuary in which Jesus met the Father, and those who knew him knew it as a place of prayer, and the most likely place to find him at that time of night (v. 3). Rebuffed at Mary's prodigality, Judas had consorted with the priests, and now covetousness is to reap its reward. Judas was not hardened in a day. His greed for money, while at the same time listening to the teachings of Jesus, had gradually hardened his heart.

II. Protecting and Protesting (vv. 4-11). (See Matt. 26; Mark 14; Luke 22). Jesus went forth in order to concentrate the attention of the soldiers upon himself, and to prevent a general attack upon the disciples. In answer to his question, they said they were seeking "Jesus, the Nazarene," a term of contempt which Jesus answered by saying, "I am he." John adds, "and Judas also which betrayed him stood with them." Greed for money, growing into theft and falseness of life, ended with the blackest crime the world has ever known. His salutation sent them backward (v. 6). Perhaps among the officers were some who had failed to arrest him on a former occasion (ch. 7:46), and who were now overawed by his marvelous words and majestic bearing. Again he answered, "Whom seek ye?" (v. 7), and they said, "Jesus of Nazareth," the same words as before, but probably in a changed tone, showing that they were prepared to listen with respect, though certainly not with reverence, to what he might have to offer. What a dramatic picture—the brazenness of sin, Judas who stood among the enemy, and the fearlessness of virtue, Jesus, facing his accusers. Augustine, commenting on this verse, says, "What will he do when he comes as a guest, if he did this when giving himself up as a prisoner?" His act, however, shielded his disciples, for not one of them was to be lost (v. 9 R. V.), and he knew they were not strong enough yet to stand the test of arrest and trial. At this point Peter attempts to defend Jesus (v. 10).

III. Peter Denying (vv. 15-17). As Jesus was led away, his disciples forsook him. They all left him, and fled, but Mark adds that a certain young man followed Jesus. It is conjectured that this young man was Mark. With quickness of action we are now transported to the judgment hall. There we see him bound, with his hands shackled behind his back, and led first to Annas (v. 13), which was an illegal transaction, "as though some reformer should be tried at Tammany hall in New York" (Robert E. Speer). Annas was now very old. From him he was taken to Caiaphas, followed by Peter "afar off," now in a different mood than when he smote the high priest's servant's ear. With him was that other disciple (John's way of referring to himself). Now John was known to the high priest, and he went in with Jesus into the palace, but Peter was standing without at the door. Notice the steps of his failure; First, he "slept" in the garden; second, he followed "afar off" (Luke 22:54); third, he "stood" without; fourth, he "sat" in the midst.

PRESIDENTS FOR SCHOOLS NAMED

AGRICULTURAL BOARD MEETS AND APPOINTS HEADS FOR EIGHT SCHOOLS.

NEWS FROM STATE CAPITAL

What the State's Servants Are Saying, Doing and Undoing—Official Acts Disclosed.

—Montgomery

Reports that there would be a shake-up in the presidencies of the state agricultural schools at the annual meeting of the board of trustees proved well founded and when the meeting adjourned, two presidents had been transferred to other schools, one president was retired while the election of one president was postponed until a later meeting.

H. O. Sargent, who has been president of the Sixth district agricultural school at Hamilton for many years, and is the oldest president of an agricultural school in the state, was transferred to the Ninth district school at Blountsville, and J. R. Kimbrough, head of the Blountsville school, was sent to Hamilton.

R. O. Dykes, who has been president of Third district school at Abbeville, was transferred to the Fifth district school at Wetumpka, while C. V. Thompson, of the Fifth district school, was sent to the Third district.

Gordon Watley was elected president of the Second district school of Evergreen as the successor of W. C. Wilburn, retired, while the selection of a president of the First district school of Jackson, as the successor of J. J. Moore, was postponed until the next meeting.

G. H. Thigpen was re-elected president of the Fourth district school of Sylacauga; S. L. Gipson, president of Seventh district school of Albertville, and J. M. Atkinson, president of the Eighth district school of Athens.

Although the board gave no reason for making the changes, it has been known for some time that much dissatisfaction had arisen in some districts over the work of agricultural schools, the claim being that they were not doing the work which was in their power. An effort was made at the last meeting to bring about several dismissals and transfers.

Train Service May Be Cut.

The Southern Railway has applied for permission to reduce passenger service on some of its lines in Alabama. G. H. Chapman, Vice President of the Southern Railway System in charge of operation, has written the Alabama Public Service Commission for permission to make restrictions in passenger service, effecting the State of Alabama, and will appear personally before the commissioners when the petition will be heard at the June meeting.

The Vice President asks the commission to allow the Southern Railway to discontinue the schedule of trains 25 and 26 between Atlanta, Ga., and Heflin, Ala., for the reason that 25 is a duplication of the facilities of train 39 and train 26 is a duplication of train No. 12. Also to discontinue trains 46 and 45 between Anniston and Rome, Ga., for the reasons that traffic does not sustain the expense; to discontinue trains 13 and 12 between Selma and Thomasville, and 21 and 22 between Thomasville and Mobile on account of insufficient business.

The Southern also proposes to discontinue trains 25 and 26 between Huntsville and Memphis on account of duplication of schedule and insufficient business. The notice states that it probably will be necessary to discontinue trains 21 and 22 between Birmingham and Chattanooga on the A. G. S., but the hope is held out that this will not be necessary.

Two Counties Go Against Tax.

Two more counties have joined the ranks of others opposing the special three mill school tax. Returns reported to the office of the State Superintendent of Education, show that Morgan County defeated the measure by a majority of more than 100 votes. Only about 1,500 votes were polled.

Randolph County also went on record as opposing the measure by a majority opposition vote of 250.

These two counties, added to DeKalb and Marshall, make four counties in the State that have voted the special tax down.

National Guard Wants Recruits.

More than 3,000 men are needed to bring the Alabama Brigade to war strength, and recruits are coming in at such a slow rate as to cause surprise among officers of the National Guard of Alabama, who expected a rush of applicants before the conscription act is to go into effect.

Adjutant General G. J. Hubbard stated that no new units of the National Guard will be organized until those now in the Federal service are recruited to full war strength. This will probably mean that the new regiment of artillery and engineers will not begin organization until after the draft measure goes into effect.

"While the conscription act will include men from 21 to 30, inclusive, the National Guard is authorized to enlist those otherwise qualified, who are between the ages of 18 and 35 years," said Brigadier General R. E. Steiner.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK! CLEAN LIVER AND BOWELS MY WAY

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel, because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

But the Question Returns.

As the stage coach careened toward the edge of the cliff the timid tourist gazed anxiously down at the brawling stream 300 feet below.

WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Soldiers Clad in Steel.

Getting its inspiration from the valuable service already performed by the steel helmet, La Nature of Paris suggests that the soldier's entire body should be incased in armor. It proposes, says Popular Science Monthly, that the sides of the head, neck and upper part of the chest be covered with a gorget, a kind of collar, and the loins with a kind of skirt, like the lower part of a habergeon, both in chain mail. A cuirass, or breastplate, of movable plates of steel would protect the chest and back, and hinged steel elbow pieces and knee pieces would cover the joints. A face mask and goggles would complete the suit. The armor would be light enough to afford perfect freedom of action.

The New Provocation.

"A man told me he was in favor of peace at any price," remarked Mr. Dolon.

"And then what happened?" replied Mr. Rafferty.

"I never answered him. I knew he was only tryin' to start a row an' make it look like I was to blame."

THE UNION-BANNER

VOLUME VI. CLANTON, CHILTON COUNTY, ALA., JUNE 7, 1917. NUMBER 10

SERMON PREACHED BY REV. S. M. ADAMS OF CLANTON

Before the Chilton County Baptist Association on October 7, 1907, and published by request of the Association.

Text: Matthew 28:18, 19, 20.

Our Savior impressed his disciples with the thought of his authority when he said "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." As much as to say, do not fear, do not question; I have all power in the world above and in the earth beneath. I will look after the powers that be if the powers that are of men are against you, and I will see to that. I will be with you. There is no power that I cannot control. If the powers of the Roman Government thrusts you into prison, I will be with you while you sing songs and pray. I will open the prison doors. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, go ye therefore into all nations and preach the gospel, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.

First: The gospel is addressed to intelligent beings and to individuals, —not to parents for their children, but to every individual for himself. We have God's call in the gospel through repentence, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of God is at hand."

The gospel reveals to us that man in his natural state is out of harmony with God. Man lives, thinks, acts hears, sees and feels, but he, in his fallen state, is alienated from God. I need not spend time in proving this; I only desire to say if you doubt, go with me back through the ages past and let us walk the path of blood made by man, listen to the cry of widows and the helpless, see the iron heel of oppression as it is placed on the neck of the weak and helpless and tell me if you will, that man is in harmony with God. Most assuredly man's history will confirm the truth that he is not. So, then God has revealed the plan of man's reconciliation in the new birth,—in the regeneration. Our Savior taught this to Nicodemus, the rich master of Israel. Hear Christ when he says, "Verily, verily I say unto you, except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."—John 3 and 33. This was a strange doctrine to Nicodemus and he said, how can a man be born again when he is old. Our Savior did not explain, but he said, "Marvel not in that I say unto thee, ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound hereof but canst not tell whither it cometh or whither it goeth, so is everyone that is born of the spirit." And this man repeats, how can these things be, and since that day, brethren, strangers to grace hav all joined in the inquiry, "How can these things be." The doctrine has in all ages been a mystery to the world. It has been rejected by the world. Multiplied thousands continue to ask how can a man be born when he is old, and for that strange doctrine, Baptists have ever stood. We preach and we insist that before men join the church they shall have some evidence of their relation to God thru and by the power of his spirit, and spirit being the spirit of love, love for Christ, love for his word, love for his church and love for the lost world. Not love alone for my own kin but for all the world. We become like him who loved us, and love our enemies, and this love is unbounded by geographical lines.

Second: And now the new man or regenerated man will inquire of the Lord what will thou have me to do, for we are taught in the text that these are to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Not a part but all things, and the giver of this commission commands all who believe in him to be baptised and he had a purpose, a great purpose, in commanding believers to be baptised and that purpose was not to save, for Christ saves, but it was to be an answer to good conscience, the conscience of evidence; 1st Peter 3 and 21.

The act of baptism is to express our faith in him who died that we might live, and more to publicly express faith in the doctrinal resurrection and of the new life of the new man. Baptised? How? By being buried as expressed by the apostle Paul in Romans 6 and 5, therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even we also should walk in newness of life. Here we have the symbol of the burial of the old man under Adam and out of harmony with God, not subject to his law, neither indeed can be the old man symbolically buried. The new man symbolically resurrected.

To live a Christian life on earth, the apostle as if to emphasize this symbol of a burial and resurrection, said, if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection.—Romans 6 and 5.

Brethren, we have symbols under the old law, pointing to Christ's coming and of his sacrifice, then may I ask if we should wipe out baptism. Where in all the world can be found one symbol of his burial and resurrection? The Christian sees in baptism a grave and resurrection. Can we doubt the form when God says it is a burial when he declares it is a planting, a covering up, also he declares it is a likeness, not the Savior's death and burial, but a likeness of it. What is a likeness? All thinking people know that a likeness is a copy, a picture of the real or original. The expression most commonly used by the older people, speaking of a picture or photograph is "likeness." Some years ago an old lady handed me the photograph of her father and said, "Here is my father's likeness."

Brethren, I have in my home, one little tin-type, the photograph of my mother, her picture. It is not handsome, but it reminds me of mother. No one else would care for it, but money could not buy it from me. Unbelievers may not care for the picture of our Savior's burial and resurrection in baptism, but should we not contend for it? The photograph would be gone from earth if we did not. I could not afford to give the photograph of my mother or have it taken from my home, neither can the church of God afford to remove the picture of our Lord's burial and resurrection by baptism. It is true, it stands as a monument and symbol of his death and resurrection and as an answer to a good conscience to a believer. Thousands of God's children suffer in their conscience today because they have suffered this picture removed and have never obeyed.

Third: One other thing, our Lord gave us in symbols and he gave it to those who are in harmony with him. Having been born of the spirit and scripturally baptised on a profession of faith. What is it? It's a commemoration of his death in the use of bread and wine in the church. Luke 22:19-20. Our Lord said of this supper, "this do, in remembrance of me." Who was to be remembered? Listen at those whose minds have been filled with prejudice to the truth. They say that baptists are close, that they are selfish, they say we are inconsistent in as much as we invite them to sing and pray, and then we refuse to invite them to the Lord's supper. And now for the very reason that it is the Lord's table and set in the Lord's house, baptists feel that the Lord shall preside and govern by his law, and thus his law gives special directions as to how and who shall come to his table. If it was the table of baptists it would be quite a different proposition. No one has the right to say that baptists would not be as liberal with their own as any other people. Baptists, as a rule, are as sympathetic and as liberal with their means, as broad in mind and heart as any other people on earth. Their sympathies are as great, like the good Samaritan, they would bind up the bruises of the downtrodden of this world, and we would, in partaking of the bread and wine remember him only who poured out his blood on Calvary. He said do this in remembrance of him. Some people object and say if I were a baptist I could not commune with my mother. Christ never said one word about communing with your mother, nor your father nor your children. This supper was instituted as a commemotive service and for the expressed purpose of commemorating the death of our Lord, Jesus Christ. Not to express our love for loved ones, not to express our confidence in Christian men and women. The one thing should never be forgotten—"Do this in remembrance of me."

My hearers, God's idea is that in honoring him, we are to forget the world and worldly ties. The thought should be I would see Jesus. See him as he bled and died for me. I would remember no friend, no other god but Jesus, the sinner's friend, I would hear his voice. There may have lived some on earth whose voices are sweet to me and upon whose words my soul would delight to dwell, but in this service I must hear the voice of Jesus. He says this is the new testament of my blood, remember me, and as oft as you do this, you show my death until I come. These are some of the fundamental principles for which baptists have stood in the ages past. Shall these principles be proclaimed to the world? You give your sanction by the bow of the head to those great principles. What will you say, will you give them to the world? This text says go, go and go into all nations of the earth.

One other thought, with these principles firmly fixed in the heart, the soul is freed, not licensed, but freed.

If the Son make you free, you are free indeed. In a baptist church we have no ruling elders, no legislative bodies of men, no organization of baptists in the use of any power or authority over churches but all our associations and conventions are simply advisory, therefore, we have but one master, our Lord, Jesus Christ, and the Bible, the supreme law and the church, the highest eclesiastical authority, from whose renderings there is no appeal. So mote it be; amen.

WEEKLY NEWSLETTER FROM MR. W. F. FEAGIN

Conditions Demand Efficient High Schools. Principals to Discuss Plans June 25th to 29th.

It has been the custom of the State Department of Education for some time to call together the workers along various lines for a general conference each year. These meetings are great factors in bringing together men and women with common interests for the purpose of secruing unified action in their work.

The annual conference of the high school principals will be held at Auburn June 25-29th inclusive. The members of the conference will be the guests of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and will profit not only by the deliberations of the conference, but also from observations of this educational institution in action. The summer school will be in session at this time.

There are now fifty-seven high schools in the state, only ten counties having failed to take advantage of the county high school law. The bringing together of the heads of these fifty-seven schools for outlining plans and for discussions will accomplish ends that could be secured in no other way.

Some of thetopics suggested for discussion at this meeting are as follows:

(1) Standardization of official high school records.
(2) Devices for improving buildings, equipment and sanitation, at small cost.
(3) Laboratory equipment.
(4) Text books and course of study.
(5) Extension work.
(6) Accrediting Schools.
(7) Elimination of pupils.
(8) Uniform policies for principals in administration.
(9) Professional improvement of teachers while in service.

PAY YOUR DOG TAX AND AVOID FURTHER COSTS

Two Cases in Court for Failure to Pay Dog Tax. Cost Much More Than Tax Levied on Them.

In the County Court held Monday, two cases for non-payment of the dog tax were tried. The first case, Sol Hicks, resulted in a cost to the defendant of $22.90; the second case, Nath Bailey, cost him a total of $21.75. There are other cases of like nature pending in the courts, to be tried in July.

It will be seen by the outcome of these cases that it is useless for anyone to try to evade the payment of the tax. In fact, it is much more costly than to go ahead and assess the dogs and pay the tax.

The tax oficials of the county are compelled to enforce the dog tax laws as rigidly as they do taxes on other things, and those who have dogs subject to taxation are running a risk of having to pay many times the amount of tax if they do not comply with the law.

LANE GRAPHICALLY TELLS WHY AMERICA WARS ON KAISERISM

Washington, June 4.—On the eve of war registration day, Secretary Lane, in a speech before the Home Club of the Interior Department tonight answered the question, "Why are we fighting Germany?"

"America is at war," Mr. Lane said, "in self defense, she is at war to save herself with the rest of the world from the nation that has linked itself with the Turk and adopted the method of Mahomet.

"Tomorrow is registration day. It is the duty of all to register if within the class called. There are some who have not clearly seen the reason for that call. To these I would speak a word.

War of Self-Defense.

"Why are we fighting Germany? The brief answer is that ours is a war of self-defense. Germany made the attack upon us; on our ships, our lives, our rights, our future. For two years and more we held to a neutrality that made us apologists for things which outraged man's common sense of fair play and humanity.

"At each new offense we said, 'This is war—archaic, uncivilized war, but war, all rules have been thrown away, man has come down to the primitive brute. And while we cannot justify we will not intervene. It is not our war.'

"Then, why are we in it? Because we could not keep out. The invasion of Belgium led to the invasion of the United States by slow, steady, logical steps.

"We talked in the language and in the spirit of good faith and sincerity, until we discovered that our talk was construed as cowardice.

War to Save America.

"And so we came into this war for ourselves. It is a war to save America, to preserve self-respect, to justify our right to live as we have lived, not as some one else wishes us to live. In the name of freedom, we challenge with ships of men, money, and an undaunted spirit, that word, 'vervoten', which Germany his written upon the sea and upon the land.

"It is more precious that this America should live than that we Americans should live. And this America as we now see it, has been challenged from the first of the war by the army of a power that has no sympathy with our purpose, and will not hesitate to destroy us if we stand across her set will to make this world bow before her policies. The world of Christ has come again, face to face with the world of Mahomet, who willed to win the force.

"With this background of history and in the sense, then, we fight Germany:

"Because of Belgium—invaded, outraged, enslaved, impoverished Belgium.

"Because of France—invaded, desecrated France, a million of whose heroic sons have died to save the land of Lafayette.

"Because of England—from whom came the laws, traditions, standards of life and inherent love of liberty, which we call Anglo-Saxon civilization.

"Because of Russia—New Russia. She must not be overwhelmed now. Her peasants must go to school to Washington, to Jefferson, and to Lincoln until they know their way about in this new, strange world, of government by the popular will. And,

"Because of other people, with their rising hope that the world may be freed from government by the soldier.

"We still hear the pitious cries of children coming up out of the sea where the Lusitania went down.

"We saw ship after ship sent to the bottom—ships of mercy bound out of America for the Belgian starving—ships carrying the Red Cross and laden with the wounded of all nations, ships flying the Stars and Stripes—sent to the bottom hundreds of miles from shore, manned by American seamen, murdered against all law, without warning.

"We believed Germany's promise that she would respect the neutral flag and the rights of neutrals, and we held our anger and outrage in check. But now we see that she was holding us off with fair promises until she could build her huge fleet of submarines. For when spring came she blew her promise into the air, just as at the beginning she had torn up the 'scrap of paper.'

"We are fighting Germany because she violated our confidence. Paid German spies filled our cities. Officials of her government, received as the guests of this nation, lived with us to bribe and terrorize, defying our law and the law of nations.

"We are fighting Germany because while we were yet her friends—the only great power that still held hands off—she sent the Zimmerman note, calling to her aid Mexico, our Southern neighbor, and hoping to lure Japan, our Western neighbor, into war against this nation of peace.

"The nation that would do these things procalims the gospel that government has no conscience. And this doctrine cannot live, or else democracy must die.

Last Stand of Feudalism.

"We are fighting Germany because in this war Feudalism is making its last stand against on-coming democracy. It is a war for democracy—the right of all to be their own masters. Let Germany be Feudal if she will. But she must not spread her system out over a world that has outgrown it.

"With poison gas that makes living a hell, with submarines that sneak through the seas to slyly murder noncompatants, with dirigibles that bombard men and women while they sleep, with a perfected system of terrorization that the modern world first heard of when German troops entered China —German Feudalism is making war upon mankind.

Let this old spirit of evil have its way and no man will live in America without paying toll to it, in manhood and in money. This spirit might demand Canada from a defeated, navyless England, and then our dream of peace on earth would be at an end. We would live as France has lived for forty yars—in haunting terror.

Speaks for the World.

"America speaks for the world in fighting Germany.

"We fight with the world for an honest world in which nations keep their word, for a world in which nations do not live by swagger or by threat, for a world in which men think of the ways in which they can conquer the common cruelties of nature instead of inventing more horrible cruelties to inflict upon the spirit and body of man, for a world in which the ambition of the philosophy of a few shall not make miserable all mankind for a world in which the man is held more precious than the machine, the system of the state."

Better Farming in the South

Pushing Crops Up To Maximum Yields

Best Way to Increase Food Crops of the South Now Is to Cultivate Thoroughly and Make Side Applications of Fertilizers.

By J. N. Harper, Director Farm Service Bureau, Atlanta, Georgia.

Not a day passes that the farmer is not reminded of the vital necessity of producing more food crops, and he is urged to put forth his best effort in doing his "bit," but the question is—"How?"

It is now too late to increase the acreage devoted to food crops, as practically all of the land has been planted, but large yields can be obtained just the same, provided good cultivation is given and fertilizers are liberally applied as side applications.

Potatoes have advanced 250 per cent, corn 100 per cent, hay 33 per cent, beef and pork 100 per cent, whereas the cost of fertilizer has advanced only 25 per cent.

The wheat crop this year is short, and it has been estimated that 300,000,000 bushels of the 1917 wheat crop has been bought by European countries for future delivery. Unless the corn crop of the South is a "bumper," bread will be a luxury instead of the staff of life.

The farmer is being advised on every hand to increase production, but he is limited in his credit and he finds it hard to obtain sufficient labor. The best way to increase the production of corn and other food crops, as well as cotton, is to cultivate thoroughly and often and make side applications of fertilizers. If the farmer hasn't the money to hire labor, under present conditions, it will pay him to borrow money on his crop to pay sufficient labor to cultivate and fertilize his crops adequately. After each rain a dust mulch should be made with the cultivator. We need not expect a bountiful harvest unless the soil moisture is conserved. As a general rule, the amount of corn produced is in direct proportion to the amount of water conserved in the soil by thorough cultivation.

Hon. J. A. Wade, Commissioner of Agriculture of Alabama, in a circular letter issued to the farmers makes this statement,—"It is evident that the acreage planted to corn in the State of Alabama has been increased 40 to 50 per cent and the farmers are to be congratulated for taking such a wise step. A large yield of corn is greatly needed and is probably the most profitable crop that can be grown under the present food and feed emergency. A great part of the increased acreage is poor upland which will make a profitable yield only by the use of commercial fertilizer. It has always paid me to apply 200 or 300 pounds of fertilizer around my corn the second or third plowing, or when the corn was between one and three feet high."

The corn crop is the bread of the South, and its yield should be increased to the limit. This fall and next winter the southern people should eat more corn bread and less wheat bread.

Our farmers must not fail to produce all the hay possible, and it will pay to fertilize a patch of sorghum and peas with a fertilizer containing from 10 to 12 per cent phosphoric acid and 1½ to 2 per cent nitrogen.

Cotton is not generally recognized as a food crop, but the country must not overlook the fact that an acre of cotton that will produce a bale will yield almost as great a food and feed value in the seed as the same land planted to corn. Therefore, an increased yield in that crop means increased food and feed products.

Fertilizers are used for the plant food they contain, and it will be impossible to produce profitable yields without ample plant food. Just what fertilizer to apply and how much to use as a side application will depend on the soil type, the crop planted, and the kind and amount of fertilizer used at the time the land was prepared. On Piedmont soils and clay soils we would recommend from 200 to 300 pounds of fertilizer for cotton and corn ,analyzing 6 to 8 per cent phosphoric acid and 2 to 4 per cent nitrogen. For field crops in the coastal plain, we would recommend from 300 to 400 pounds of a fertilizer analyzing from 4 to 7 per cent phosphoric acid and from 4 to 6 per cent nitrogen. This fertilizer should be applied to corn when it is from knee to waist high and to cotton at the time the first squares are forming.

For the silt loams in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, we would recommend for cotton or corn 100 to 200 pounds of a fertilizer analyzing 12 per cent available phosphoric acid and 2½ per cent nitrogen. This is to be applied to the corn when about knee high and to the cotton when squares begin forming. Under most favorable conditions a pound of fertilizer means three pounds of seed cotton. From this we can see that $1.00 invested in fertilizer at this time means from $6 to $8 next fall, and a badly needed commodity is brought into existence.

IN MEMORIAM

On last Friday morning, June 1, the death angel visited the home of R. M. Butler and took from him his darling wife. She was 56 years of age.

We know it is hard to give up a loved one, but God saw fit to take her home. We realize that our Father's will must be done. All was done for her that willing hands could do, but nothing seemed to do her any good. She was sick only a few days.

Weep not for her, children, for the one that bore such pain; for if we only trust Jesus, we know we shall meet her again. We know 'tis hard to give her up—it reaches our very hearts; but we shall meet her over yonder, where we never more shall part.

She leaves a husband and three children.

Why should we grieve for those we love when we know that Jesus has taken them to live with the angels above in the brighter and happier home?

Why should we shed such bitter tears, for we know she is at rest? She will never be troubled with the idle things of this earth, but all of us that loved her will never forget her memory.

The remains were laid to rest at Salem Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Nelson.

Her friend,
GRACIE DUNCAN.

Drastic resolutions were passed adversely criticising the national officers of the association, and the delegate to the national convention was instructed to use his efforts to effect a change in administration. Much time was devoted to this feature of the work, and the delegates from all branches were united in their desire for a shakeup in the national organization.

To Start Work on Camp.

Anniston.—Work will begin here by July 1 on the construction of the 200 buildings that will be needed for the mobilization camp that has been authorized for Anniston, in addition to the artillery training camp obtained some time ago. The camp town proper will cover about one mile square, in addition to which there will be several thousand acres of land for drilling and military operations. Railway tracks will also be constructed to the camps, and it is probable that the Alabama Power Company will extend its car lines. About 20,000 men will be mobilized here. The mobilization camp is separate and distinct from the training camp. It will, in no wise, affect the number of men that will be sent to Camp Blackmon for training in the various branches of the art of war.

Pig Iron Production Record.

Birmingham.—Statistics being compiled on pig iron production for May point to the largest output for a month in the history of the industry in Alabama, a production upwards of 260,000 tons.

If this production is reached, and conservative interests believe it will, the production for the first five months of 1917 will be 1,235,128 tons. This pace is to be increased as the Trussville furnace is being gotten into shape rapidly ,the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company will increase its make at Bessemer ,the Shelby Iron Company will increase its make by the blowing in the second furnace at Shelby, coke iron to be produced there, and possibly before the end of the third quarter of the year the Jenifer and Talladega furnace will be going.

Local capital has become interested and the inventor has been called to Washington, where he will direct the building of a gun at the government arsenal for demonstration before the ordinance board. McLain claims that his gun will fire from 600 to 800 shots per minute, the calibre being one-half of an inch.

Court Sensation Caused.

Selma.—Judge B. M. Miller, of the Circuit Court of Dallas County, created something of a sensation in his court when the case against George Gray, negro boy, was called. He was charged with Sunday gaming. He was indicted by the grand jury which adjourned Saturday morning. Judge Miller said he had decided to order that the case be nol prossed in consideration of the fact that the grand jury had not seen fit to indict any business man of the city keeping his mercantile place open on Sunday and making thousands of dollars or transacting thousands dollars worth of business.

TORNADOS SWEEP THROUGH THE WEST

Sections Of Kansas, North Central Oklahoma And Southern Missouri Are Devastated By Storms

21 PERSONS MEET DEATH

400 Houses Wrecked In An Oklahoma Town—200 Houses Destroyed At Coffeyville, Kansas

Kansas City, Mo. — Twenty-one known deaths, more than one hundred injured and unestimated property damage resulted from a series of tornadoes that swept several towns and sections of southeastern Kansas, north central Oklahoma and southern Missouri.

At least twenty-five oil derricks are reported to have been blown away, between Tilton and Drumright, in the Mid-Continent oil field, about forty miles west of Tulsa, Okla. Hundreds of oil field workers are employed in the district in the storm's path.

With four hundred houses reported destroyed at Coalgate, Okla., a town of 3,500 inhabitants, and possibly two hundred at Coffeyville, Kans., it was feared that the death total at these two places would be high. One message said that thirteen bodies had been counted at Coalgate and that the business section of the town was virtually destroyed.

Three persons were killed, several seriously injured and much property was damaged by a tornado which struck Moore, five miles southeast of Olathe, Kans.

Unconfirmed reports from Buffalo, Mo., told of considerable damage there. Another storm was reported to have passed between Springfield and Lebanon, Mo. All wires were down in both directions.

At Drake, Okla., five known deaths were reported. That many school children were not killed in the demolition of the Drake schoolhouse was due to the presence of mind of a young school teacher, who marshalled her charges into a storm cellar.

Nine persons were injured, two perhaps fatally, by the tornado which passed north of the town of Seminole. Much live stock was killed and crops in the path of the storm were badly damaged.

RUSSIAN RADICALS DEFIANT, AND SEIZE KRONSTADT

Council Of Workmen's And Soldiers' Delegates Have Taken Control Of The Great Fortress

New York.—The taking over of the government of the great fortress of Kronstadt by the local council of workmen's and soldier's delegates and strike outbreaks in many of the large munition factories of Petrograd, indicate that the new provisional government of Russia is meeting with increased internal opposition.

Kronsadt, 20 miles west of Petrograd, is the main fortress guarding the Russian capital and is the main port of entry to the capital from the Baltic sea. The workmen's and soldiers' delegates there not only have taken charge of the town, but have declared that they do not recognize the provisional government. The council announced that all relations between Kronsadt and Petrograd hereafter will be carried out only through the Petrograd branch of the workmen's and soldiers' delegates, which recently caused the overthrow of several members of the Russian cabinet.

1,000 More Germans For McPherson

Atlanta, Ga.—The construction of forty new buildings at Fort McPherson is expected to start in the very near future for the purpose of accommodating approximately 1,000 additional interned German sailors who are to be sent here. The new buildings will be similar to the wood cantonment buildings of the officers' reserve corps training camp, at the fort, and as soon as completed will be occupied not only by the new interned sailors to be brought here, but also by the sailors already at Fort McPherson. The brick barracks now occupied by the German sailors at the front will then be occupied by recruits.

Quick Peace Asked By Hun Socialists

Stockholm, Sweden. — Immediate peace on the basis of no annexation and no indemnities and complete political restoration of occupied territories are advocated by the delegation of Hungarian Socialists here to attend the meeting of Socialists from various belligerent countries. Regarding Belgium the Hungarian group at the conference urged that the cost of restoration should be borne by Germany, although if persistence in this demand meant prolongation of the war the cost should be shared by all.

Unwritten Law Fails To Save Strong

Knoxville, Tenn.—Rush Strong, who has been on trial here since May 27 for the killing of Sam B. Luttrell, Jr., in July, 1916, was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter by the jury after twelve hours of actual deliberation. Under the laws of the state the verdict carries with it an indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary of two to ten years. Strong pleaded the unwritten law in justification. He claims that Luttrell had drugged and assaulted Mrs. Strong.

MILLIONS FOR FOOD SURVEY

House Passes Administration Measure For An Immediate Investigation Of U. S. Food Resources

Washington.—The administration's food survey bill, first of the food control measures, was passed by the house without a record vote. It appropriates $14,770,000 for an immediate investigation of the country's food resources and for measures to stimulate production. A similar bill is under debate in the senate.

The agriculture department expects to present a fairly accurate estimate of food resources within three weeks after the bill is signed by the president, Secretary Houston says. As soon as the measure becomes law, the department will start its 17,000 employees and the 150,000 voluntary crop reporters to work on the investigation. The preliminary report to be made within the three weeks will be supplemented with monthly reports and probably by a further complete report within six months if necessary.

Material gathered will be turned over to Herbert C. Hoover, who will be named to head a food administration as soon as the pending regulatory food measure becomes law.

The survey bill passed virtually as it came from the committee. Miss Rankin, the woman representative from Montana, inserted an amendment which requires the department of agriculture to use women in the survey work whenever practicable. An amendment by Representative McKenzie of Illinois would make all persons employed under the bill liable to military service and another would permit citizens to refuse to go more than three hundred miles from their homes or places of business to testify in a food inquiry.

As originally drawn the bill carried more than eighteen mill dollars, but the changes in committee reduces the total somewhat. These are the principal amounts appropriated:

For seeds, $5,778,000; education for increasing production by waste elimination and conservation, $4,348,000; general survey, $2,522,000; eradication of live stock diseases and live stock improvement work, $885,000; miscellaneous items, $547,000, and eradication of plant diseases and insects, $441,000.

LABOR DEMANDS MAY FORCE RUSSIA TO ECONOMIC RUIN

Demands Of Workingmen So Enormous It Seems Impossible To Keep The Industrial Wheels Going

Petrograd.—The industrial crisis in Russia is so acute that, according to a recent utterance of the minister of finance, M. Shingaroff, only a miracle can save the country from economic ruin. The demands of the workingmen are so enormous, he declares, it seems impossible to keep the industrial wheels going for any great length of time.

The Socialist ministers at a recent ministerial council said the only possibility they saw of settling the difficulty was to bring the war to a close.

Neither the coalition cabinet nor the newly appointed commission to regulate the difficulties between capital and labor has yet found a way to settle the industrial crisis. The commission is composed of the ministers of finance, trade and industrty and labor, but since there is a wide divergence of views between the minister of finance and the new Socialistic minister of labor it seems probable that this commission will be confronted with the same difficulties that attended the previous efforts at reconciliation.

Big Liquor Seizure At Richmond, Va.

Richmond, Va.—Probably the largest liquor raid here since the state went dry was made when police seized about five hundred or more quarts of whiskey in a leading hotel. The liquor is reported to be worth about two thousand dollars. The police have seized twenty-five hundred quarts of whiskey in Richmond this month.

Maryland Convict Buy Liberty Bonds

Washington.—Prisoners at the Maryland penitentiary have bought $2,150 worth of Liberty Loan bonds with savings from their small wage allowances. Warden John F. Leonard sent in the subscription. One man serving a long term spent $250 of the $278 to his credit. A former West Virginia train robber put all but a few dollars of his savings into bonds.

Arrested For Opposing Conscription

Roanoke, Va.—According to information, William Velon McCoy and his partner, "Gen." J. W. Phipps, who were arrested at St. Paul, in the mountains of southwest Virginia, and brought here, are charged by government agents with attempting to organize mountaineers to resist the draft act. Information in possession of government officials show McCoy and Phipps had about three hundred followers. Government officials allege that the band planned to raid St. Paul, kill revenue agents and landowners

100,000 Americans For Fighting Front

London.—An official statement issued here says that counting the Americans serving in the British and French armies and the additional units ordered to France, there will be 100,000 Americans in France shortly. The statement says 3,500 war airplanes will be constructed, and 6,000 aviators trained in the United States this year. The official statement was issued by the British war office with the object of showing America's complete participation in the war.

STRUGGLE IS CALL TO WORLD LIBERTY

President Wilson Declares In His Address At The National Memorial Exercises In Arlington Cemetery

AMERICA TO ATTAIN DIGNITY

Wilson Says America Will Show Herself Greater Than Ever Because She Will Rise To Greater Things

Washington.— America's response to the call of liberty in the struggle of the world will hold the attention of all mankind, President Wilson said in a Memorial day address at Arlington national cemetery. In observing the day, he said, the natural touch of sorrow is tinged with reassurance because, knowing how the men of America have responded to the call of liberty, there is perfect assurance that the new responses "will come again in equal measure, with equal majesty."

The president spoke in the national amphitheater in the cemetery at a meeting arranged by the G. A. R. and attended by a crowd of thousands. He said he did not pity the men in whose honor the ceremonies were held.

"I envy them rather," he went on, "beacuse theirs is a great work for liberty accomplished and we are in the midst of a work unfinished, testing our strength where their strength has already been tested." The time for action, he said, has come, "and in the providence of God, America will come once more to have the opportunity to show the world that she was born to serve mankind."

TOWN OF OJINAGA TAKEN BY THE FORCES OF VILLA

Bandit's Followers Drive Carranza's Men From Border Town—U. S. Troops Patrol Opposite

Presidio, Texas.—Francisco Villa holds a border port opposite an American town and again United States troops are patrolling the border while Villa cavalrymen are opating on the southern bank of the Rio Grande.

At 5 o'clock in the morning approximately 200 Villa followers dashed into the little town of Ojinaga, opposite here, shouting "Viva Villa" and shooting as they rode. Only a handful of Mexican government forces ocupied the town, Generals G. Figueroa and Garcia and Colonel Rojas having gone out to engage the Villa command which has encampepd in La Mula pass, 35 miles south of the border. These forces are expected to return in an effort to drive the Villa troops from the town.

Fifty of the government forces of seventy-five men in Ojinaga succeeded in escaping across the river to Presidio. Women and children followed behind their men, carrying babies and bundles. Of the twenty-five government soldiers remaining sixteen were killed during the fighting, six were taken prisoners and three were wounded.

German U-Boats Losing Cunning

London.—Eighteen British merchant vessels of more than sixteen hundred tons were sunk during the past week, it is officially anonunced. Summer weather and the long days favor warfare on the submarines, and the admiralty is taking full advantage of these conditions. It is the belief of naval men that as long as these conditions prevail there is little likelihood that the submarines will make any better showing than in past months.

Fight To Be Made On Name "Berlin"

Berlin, Wis. — A movement to change the name of this town is expected to assume definite form when steps are to be taken to place the question before the voters in the near future. The Indian name "Mascoutin" is said to be favored by many, this being the name of the tribe of Indians who first located the town site.

Roosevelt Makes Patriotic Address

Mineola, N. Y.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt, addressing several thousand of his Nassau county "neighbors" appealed to the wealthy among them not to employ labor to beautify their estates while the country is at war. Lifting his hat and pointing to a huge American flag nearby, he urged those present "to come to the front in an eager desire to serve with their bodies, with every quality of their souls and spirit and mind; wtih their service, labor and military skill, and not stand uon words, but in deeds."

4 Persons Killed And 30 Injured

St. Louis, Mo.—A tornado twisted into Mineral Point, Mo., a village of about three hundred inhabitants, killed four persons and injured thirty, demolished the town with the exception of the school house and then moved southward to Eye, where Fred Harper, a farmer, was killed by flying debris. An Iron Mountain passenger train bore the most seriously injured to DeSoto, about fifteen miles north of Mineral Point.

FIERCE FIGHTING NEAR TRIEST

Attacks On Austrians Shifted From South End Of Line To The North of Gorizia

New York.—On the southern end of the line near the head of the Gulf of Triest, in the Austro-Italian theater, the Italians for the moment have paused in their titanic effort to push forward to Triest, and heavy fighting again is in progress to the north around Gorizia, Plava and the Vodice. East of Gorizia and on the Vodice the Austrians attempted to carry the offensive to the Italians, but the artillery fire of King Victor Emmanuel's men stopped the assaults and in the last named sector the Italians themselves delivered an attack, and notwithstanding stubborn resistance made progress on the southeastern slope of Hill 52. Likewise in the Plava sector the Austrians were driven back and lost one hundred men made prisoner.

Around Saint Giovanni and Duino, at the lower end of the line, the Austrians heavily bombarded the Italians in their new position and ineffectually tried to oust them. Both sides are claiming the capture of large numbers of prisoners since the new battle from Tolmino to the sea began, the Italians asserting that they have taken 23,681 and the Austrians 14,500.

Following the reports of an increase in the Russian artillery activity against the Austrians in the eastern theater comes a statement that there has been a renewal of the activity of the Russo-Roumanian forces against the Teutonic allies in Roumania, and that early attacks by them are expected. The visits to Jassy, the new capital of Roumania, of M. Thomas, the French minister of munitions, and M. Kerensky, the Russian minister of war, possibly may be connected with the revival of the activity of Russo-Roumanian troops.

MORE RACE RIOTING IN EAST ST. LOUIS

Whites Seem Resolved To Chase Negroes From Illinois City—Six Men Are Hurt

East St. Louis, Ill.—Three negroes were shot, one probably fatally, and three white men were wounded when the race riots broke out afresh here. Groups of white men continued to form in the streets, but for the most part the police and soldiers on patrol duty succeeded in disbanding them peaceably. One of the negroes was on his way to work when he was accosted by a white man, who demanded to know his destination. The negro refused to answer and the white man shot him. A crowd gathered quickly, but police dispersed it by using their clubs freely.

A few minutes later another negro was made a victim of a mob of whites when it was learned he had declared the blacks would "put up a fight" if trouble broke out again. The mob chased him for several blocks before he was halted by a pistol shot. His wound is not serious. Police guards dispersed that mob without great difficulty.

Russia Places Order For Locomotives

New York.—Russia has placed an order with American manufacturers for 500 locomotives to cost approximately $25,000,000 and 10,000 cars at $15,000,000, it was reported in financial circles. Contracts have not yet been signed, but all preliminary arrangements, it is understood, have been completed. This is said to be the largest single order for railroad equipment received in this country.

$41,000,000 Tax On Auto Owners

Washington.—Exemption of popular price moving picture theaters from amusement taxes and the levying of a new federal license tax on automobile owners ranging from $7.50 to $25, with reductions for cars used a year or more, were agreed upon by the senate finance committee in continuing revision of the house war tax. It is estimated the auto tax will yield about forty-one million dollars.

Riot In Toledo Over Selective Draft

Toledo, Ohio.—Two thousand persons, including militiamen, pacifists, police and citizens, were participants in a riot here, as the outcome of an attempt of anti-conscription speakers to address a crowd in the streets. The outbreak occurred when a citizen's cry of "Hurrah for Wilson!" was answered by "Kaiser Wilson" from one of the pacifists. Members of troops D, M and B stationed at a recruiting station nearby resented the remark and the riot resulted. Several persons were more or less seriously hurt.

Draft Selection Will Take 60 Days

Atlanta, Ga.—Work of selecting the men who will compose the national army from those who register on June 5 will probably begin immediately after registration day, according to information in the hands of Hooper Alexander, United States district attorney. The actual notification of selection will not be made until after sixty days. Information received from Washington is to the effect that the draft arm will not be called into service until September.

They are rescued, but One-Lamp Louie reports that they perished in a hurricane. Sebastian arranges to marry Bianca. Louie prevents it to save himself and is thrown to death by Sebastian who changes his marriage plans. He sees Leontine alive and well. Later Sebastian kidnaps Leontine, but the Shadow has promised her protection. Ravengar delivers Leontine from the hands of her enemies, but Bianca's thugs capture him. Bianca hesitates to kill him as she is passionately in love with him.

TENTH EPISODE

The Vanishing Mantle.

At the top of the river bank Leontine stopped and looked about her in uncertainty. She was in an outlying part of the city which was unfamiliar to her. It consisted of fields, with a few scattered houses; in the distance was a road-house with a shed at the back. Nearby a policeman was talking with a friend.

Leontine hurried up to them. The men ceased their conversation and looked at her in amazement. She was dripping wet, her hair was falling about her shoulders, and her whole aspect was that of a crazy woman.

"Help me!" pleaded Leontine, running up to the men.

"I want you to save my friend and wipe out this band of criminals," Leontine pleaded after telling her story. "Please hurry, or I don't know what may happen to him."

As she turned aside a moment to fix her dress the policeman tapped his forehead significantly. "Wheels!" he whispered.

"I'll take charge of her," said the other.

As Leontine looked up he spoke to her soothingly.

"I'm Detective O'Mara, madam," he said. "It's lucky I was here. Sure I know the gang you speak of, and if you'll come to the station house we'll look into the matter right away."

Outside the roadhouse he paused. "Excuse me one minute," he said. "I'm working on another case, and I've got to turn in a report."

Leaving Leontine outside he entered and went to the telephone. In a few moments he had Sebastian on the wire.

Sebastian, who had not learned of his wife's escape from Bianca's house, was staggered by the message. He thought hastily.

"Hold her right where she is," he answered after a moment's delay. "My wife is mentally unbalanced and escaped from her nurse this afternoon. I'll come right over with the nurse and the doctor's assistants."

Leontine Thanks Bianca for Saving Ravengar's Life.

O'Mara shrugged his shoulders, and went out to Leontine.

"Would you mind waiting just a moment in here?" he asked, indicating the land office. "I believe we can get the facts from here and save your friend without going to the station house."

He took her into the shack and quietly locked himself in with her. Leontine gazed about her in bewilderment.

"But what are we to do here?" she asked.

"Now, just a minute," said O'Mara soothingly. "You mustn't excite yourself, you know, after your adventures in that drain you spoke of."

Leontine began to grow alarmed. "What are we here for?" she inquired again.

"It's all right, Mrs. Navarre," said the detective blandly. "I've telephoned for your friends, and they'll be here in just a few minutes."

Then she recoiled in terror, for steps sounded outside, and she heard the voice of her husband—Sebastian!

* * * * * * *

"Get out—the pair of you!" repeated Bianca to her men.

But the men, usually prompt to obey the orders of their dreaded mistress, showed no signs of doing so now. Instead, they looked one at the other. Then the fellow whom Ravengar had nearly strangled, spoke.

"See here, madame!" he said. "Now that the girl has got away, this means the end of us. She'll bring down the police and this guy has got to be settled. It's our only chance. If it don't suit you, I'm through."

"All right, boys," she answered. "You have stuck to me for years, and I guess you're right. Do what you think best."

The men raised their revolvers, but Bianca ran in front of Ravengar. "Not here!" she cried. "Take him into that room."

They seized Ravengar by the arms, and he went with them, still apparently amused at the situation. The door closed. Bianca stood shuddering in the passage. Suddenly she ran into the room. She saw Ravengar standing in front of the pair, laughing heartily. They both covered him with their weapons.

"Wait!" cried Bianca. "Give me two minutes with him alone, boys. I want to speak to him."

"Say, if this ain't the limit!" growled the first man angrily. "What do you say, Joe?"

Joe shrugged his shoulders. "I guess we can stand for him two minutes longer," he answered. "He can't get out of here except by the door, unless he flies through the window."

They went out grumbling. Bianca closed the door on them and turned to Ravengar.

"I cannot see you die like this," she said. "Say the word and I'll defy them. We'll leave this house together I'll love you all my life. I'll be faithful to you till death."

Ravengar looked at Bianca benignantly. "A splendid program, dear madam," he answered, "but I haven't time. In fact I've got an engagement, and I'm late now."

He disappeared before her eyes.

Bianca tottered from the room. She went into her boudoir and sank down upon the couch.

The telephone rang. Bianca sprang to her feet and took down the receiver, to hear Sebastian's voice.

"She got away from you," he said.

"How do you know?" asked Bianca faintly. "Yes, she beat it. I'd like to lay my hands on her now."

"Well, you can," answered the other. "She's at the Cliff House, and I've tipped off the detective who has her there that she's crazy. You're her nurse, and you'll go and get her, and take two of your men to be the doctor's assistants. Get that?"

"I did," answered Bianca joyously.

* * * * * * *

"It's all right. I'm Mr. Navarre. Open the door," said Sebastian to O'Mara.

O'Mara stepped back, drew the key from his pocket, and opened it. Sebastian stood in the entrance. At the sight of him Leontine shrank back against the farther wall in terror.

"I'm glad you got her," said Sebastian coolly. "She ran away from her nurse this afternoon and got out of the house. It has given me no end of trouble. I was afraid something had happened to her."

Leontine's eyes met his, and her lip curled scornfully. Sebastian let his eyes fall; he could not meet those of his wife.

"Will you let me go free?" Leontine demanded of O'Mara. "It is true this man is my husband, but he tried to commit murder today, and often before. He hates me and wants me out of the way because of what I know."

Sebastian only smiled, and the detective nodded. He wanted to get out of the shed; he had never come upon a case like this before. Mechanically he pocketed the bill for twenty dollars which Sebastian slipped to him, and went out, handing him the key.

Sebastian, left alone with Leontine, looked at her and smiled. It was not an amiable smile. She shrank away from him in horror.

Then Sebastian saw a curious look come over his wife's face. She was glancing past him toward the door. Looking in the same direction, he saw Ravengar strolling nonchalantly toward them. And, glancing back at Leontine, he saw the happiness which she made no effort to conceal.

Ravengar came forward and nodded ironically to Sebastian. He pushed him back, took Leontine by the hand, and led her toward the door.

"Get out!" yelled Sebastian, precipitating himself upon the other.

He struck Ravengar with his full force under the chin. Ravengar reeled back under the sudden impetus of the blow, stumbled, and fell upon the floor. Leontine tried to rush past him, but Sebastian caught her and hurled her back into the interior of the shed.

Springing to his feet, Ravengar threw himself upon Sebastian anew, trying to seize the key from him. They clinched and wrestled to and fro. Ravengar got Sebastian to his knees; he held his head securely in his arm, while with his free hand he drew the key from Sebastian's pocket.

He flung Sebastian to the floor, opend the door, and took Leontine by the hand. Sebastian rose dizzily; he staggered, groaning, toward his enemy. He saw Ravengar lead Leontine out into the freedom of the sky.

This was the juncture at which Bianca and her men came on the scene. Sizing up the situation, and maddened by the sight of Ravengar, who had escaped them, they hurled themselves upon him, and bore him back into the shed. They followed him, holding Leontine between them.

Sebastian, unsteady on his feet, looked triumphantly at Bianca. "Take her away," he said.

"Wait!" interposed Ravengar, holding up his hand. "Leontine, lock the door on the outside when you go out."

Sebastian burst into laughter at the words. They turned and looked at him curiously. He was making some strange motions with his hand, as if it held an invisible garment. He raised it from his side and moved it toward Leontine, with the manner of one putting a cape about her.

Suddenly a cry burst from Sebastian's lips. Leontine had disappeared.

The door opened. The key was withdrawn. The door closed again. Joe hurled himself against it just as the lock clicked.

"One minute!" interposed Ravengar.

They looked at him in terror, but there was an air of authority about him that maintained silence. He advanced into their midst.

"We're all locked up very comfortably together," he said, "and we're going to stay together." He drew out his match box, struck a match, and held it to an oil-soaked piece of tarred paper which he had picked up. "If you folks try to open that door," he said, "I'll throw this into that grease barrel. I guess this oil-soaked shack won't take long to burst into flame."

Bianca's Men Capture Leontine.

With a yell, Joe drew his revolver and fired at Ravengar, who staggered and fell. The paper which he held fell into the grease barrel. Instantly a column of fire shot up. The shack was ablaze from end to end.

* * * * * * *

Leontine had failed to understand Ravengar's meaning, but she had trained herself to obey him.

That the mantle which he had thrown over her in appearance actually existed, that it made her invisible, were facts undreamed by her.

Leontine went out and locked the door, as she had been instructed.

At that moment her attention was attracted to a filmy piece of material apparently hanging from her sleeve. Wonderingly she plucked at it. She had a feeling as if some filmy garment covered her. She reached up, took it off, and shook herself free. She found that she was holding in her hands a mantle, of the thinnest material, and only in places visible.

As she examined it the secret dawned on her. On one side the mantle was invisible, on the other it was visible. Ravengar had thrown it over her with the invisible side uppermost.

She heard voices within the shack. Ravengar was saying something loudly, and there was a responsive murmur, followed by silence. Suddenly the revolver shot rang out.

Leontine ran toward the door. As she did so a flame burst through the aperture, followed by flames and smoke that seemd to curl out of every corner of the building.

Shouts came from the road-house. The proprietor and a number of men came running out.

When the fire broke out the group was still standing facing Ravengar. His fall and the starting up of the flames were almost simultaneous. They forgot him and rushed wildly to the door for safety.

They could not break it down. The shack was filled with smoke. In the corner where Ravengar lay the flames were shooting up to the roof, which was already ablaze.

They rushed to the window. The shutters were of iron, and heavily padlocked.

Joe staggered against one of the blazing barrels and, in his fall, hurled it aside. His companion shouted. The barrel had been standing over a trap door, with a large iron ring set into it.

The trap door came up, disclosing a flight of steps leading down into a cellar. By this time the shack was ablaze in every part.

Bianca cast a hurried look toward Ravengar. He was lying between two blazing barrels. Her heart and her head were in bitter conflict. On the one hand was Ravengar, who had scorned her; on the other Sebastian with his millions.

Head won. Shrugging her shoulders, Bianca followed the rest down the steps into the cellar, leaving Ravengar lying unconscious where he had fallen.

The little cellar was provided with a bulkhead leading outside. Sebastian and one of the men rushed up it, heedless of Bianca. As she was about to follow them the man Joe, overcome by the heat, pitched forward unconscious upon the floor.

That moment of hesitation changed Bianca. She stopped. She considered again. Now heart won. She turned and made her way back into the burning shack to save Ravengar.

She could hardly enter on account of the furious heat. The whole of the roof was afire, and sparks were settling down. The walls were blazing. The smoke was so thick that at first she could not find Ravengar.

Then, stooping, she managed to get her hands upon him and drag him into the cellar.

She kneeled beside him and burst into tears.

Then, when he did not stir, Bianca became frenzied. She lifted Ravengar's body in her arms again and started to carry him out of the cellar.

She laid him upon the ground a safe distance from the shack, which was now entirely in flames.

Leontine, hidden in her mantle, had stood among a cluster of trees some little distance away, looking on in horror which paralyzed her limbs. Ravengar was in the burning shack, and her palsied will failed her.

With a last effort she began groping her way toward the shed again.

Then she stopped, hoping wildly, as she saw Sebastian and one of Bianca's men emerge from the bulkhead. They had found a way to escape; and Ravengar must be behind them.

Pulling her mantle about her, she went toward them. Sebastian and his companion passed within a few feet of her without seeing her. As he walked Leontine heard her husband say:

"Well, there's one consolation. Ravengar won't trouble us again."

At the words the girl uttered a scream, and, entirely forgetful of her disguise, pulled the mantle from her head and shoulders and, clutching it in her hand, began to run toward the bulkhead. Sebastian stopped at the cry and, to his amazement, saw Leontine a few paces away, running.

He dashed at her and grasped her, yelling at the top of his voice. The proprietor of the road-house, who had abandoned his futile search and had given up all hope of saving the shed, came hurriedly toward him.

"We must get a taxi and take her home," he said. "This has been a terrible experience. I should have taken better care of her. She is a homicidal maniac. I'll recompense you for your loss. Call a taxi, please."

Leontine was in a frenzy. Craft came to her aid. She ceased to struggle, and, looking toward the shack, suddenly uttered a scream, and pointed.

The waiters who were holding her released their grip for an instant. Leontine broke from them and began running at the top of her speed. As she did so she shook out the mantle and managed to envelop herself with it.

The crowd, which had taken up the pursuit, suddenly stopped, completely baffled. Leontine had vanished into thin air, apparently, as if she had never existed.

Leontine, having made herself invisible, stood perfectly still. She was afraid to run, for fear that the movements of her limbs would stir the mantle. Then Bianca came out dragging Ravengar's body. She laid it down upon the ground and wept over it.

Stifling a cry, Leontine kneeled down noiselessly upon the other side of the stricken man and gazed into his face. Bianca, a few inches away, was wholly unaware of her proximity. So might a man's invisible, good angel kneel beside him, helping and prompting him.

Ravengar breathed, he stirred. Tears came into Leontine's eyes, and a deep sense of thankfulness. Mingled with this was gratitude to this woman who had saved him.

Leontine stood up, stepped back, and threw off her mantle. Bianca saw her and uttered an exclamation of dismay and consternation.

"You have saved his life," cried Leontine, "and I can never thank you enough. You have given me back the only man living who means anything to me."

And she held out her hand to Bianca.

Bianca dashed Leontine's hand furiously away.

Leontine had let her mantle fall completely from her in her agitation. Suddenly she perceived Sebastian and the rest of the crowd in pursuit of her. She had betrayed herself.

Ravengar was alive and, for the present, safe. She must save herself. She looked wildly about her. A little distance away was an out-building, with a number of empty hogsheads standing against the wall. Leontine rushed toward it, trying to draw on her mantle as she ran.

She shook it open and got it about her head and shoulders, and let it fall to her feet. For the second time the girl had eluded him. She had simply vanished. She was nowhere to be seen.

Leontine, not daring to stir, heard her husband's heavy breathing as he ran past her. He stopped and looked about him in utter bewilderment. Then he began running back toward Bianca.

"Where is she?" he shouted.

Bianca, kneeling still beside Ravengar, had watched the scene. She had seen Leontine disappear, but there were a few small trees in the line of view between herself and the barrels, and she was sure Leontine had sought refuge in them.

And in fact Leontine, as soon as Sebastian broke off the chase, had made her way toward the largest barrel, in which she could very well conceal herself. A person looking in would see nobody.

"She is in one of those hogsheads," Bianca said, pointing toward the outbuildings. "Kill her now, Sebastian. Kill her! I'll do it."

A sudden light came into Sebastian's eyes. "It needn't be murder," he said. "It can be an accident. Come with me, Bianca."

Sebastian glided through the trees, making no sound as he went. Bianca followed him.

"In the third barrel from the right," she whispered.

Sebastian crept under the overhanging roof of the shed until he reached the corner. He was now almost within reach of the barrel. The lid hung from the top by a single nail. A hammer rested under the sill of the door. Sebastian raised it and, rushing out, pulled on the lid and began nailing it.

Bianca meanwhile felt in the other barrels. There was nobody there.

"I guess that's got her," said Sebastian triumphantly to Bianca.

Then Bianca began to understand his meaning. From the outbuilding the ground sloped toward the high cliff which bordered the river, running at first gently, and then with a suddenly increased grade until it became vertical at the extreme edge. There was a fall of two hundred feet from the cliff's top to the rocky river below.

Sebastian gave the barrel a gentle push.

A few seconds later there came to the watchers' ears the faint sound of the splash in the river.

* * * * * * *

Ravengar opened his eyes and looked about him. He did not at first know what had happened to him. Then he felt the throb of the wound in his shoulder, and, looking down, saw that he was covered with blood.

He heard distant shouting, and saw the stream of water from the hose that played upon the burned shack. He was alone, lying in the shelter of the group of trees. On the other side of them Sebastian was watching the barrel make its way toward the cliff.

He staggered to his feet, his mind filled with foreboding as to Leontine's fate. He remembered nothing since her exit from the shack, followed by the revolver shot. Where was she? Had she escaped, as he had hoped, in the invisible mantle?

Suddenly, to his amazement, he saw her standing before him.

He staggered toward her and caught her hands in his. "Leontine!" he cried.

The girl had not entered the hogshead. As she ran from her husband she seemed to acquire the craft of the animal, long hunted, which realizes that only this quality will save it. She had wrapped herself in her cloak and, running toward the hogshead, removed it for a moment, to allow her presence there to be seen. Then she had pulled it once more about her.

She had stood at the opposite angle of the outbuilding and watched Sebastian intent upon his work.

Then she ran back to Ravengar. Now, standing before him, with her arm about him, to steady him, she urged him to take the mantle and make good his escape.

"You take it, dear Leontine, and go," he said. "I am safe enough. I will go over to the road-house and rest there; they will not dare attempt to murder me."

But Leontine, anxious for him, and thinking nothing of her own safety,

Bianca and Her Men Escape From the Burning Building.

continued to plead. She stripped herself of the mantle and held it out to him.

One man had been left in the cellar. That was the crook named Joe, who had fainted from the intense heat. As Ravengar sat up and opened his eyes on the ground, Joe was opening his in the cellar. He, too, could not at first remember what had happened to him.

He was conscious only of the fight in the shed, the outbreak of the blaze. But Joe had not a meditative mind. He found himself alive, and that was his chief concern. He meant to remain alive. He was not anxious to face what seemed to him the inevitable punishment for his crime.

He had no doubt that he was already branded as Ravengar's murderer. And he felt, too, that Bianca was becoming too exacting, and her schemes too dangerous.

He crawled out of the cellar by the bulkhead and looked about him. Nobody was to be seen though he thought he heard Bianca's voice in the distance.

Joe thought it was altogether a good moment for making his getaway.

He started to crawl through the long grass, meaning to reach the pine trees and then slip carefully down toward the cliff.

But as he raised his head he was startled and terrified to see Ravengar lying not twenty paces away, supporting himself upon one elbow and staring about him.

Joe suddenly took heart again. The man was not dead, then.

He edged away from Ravengar, and then he saw the figure of Leontine, apparently become incarnate out of nothing. He saw it waver, now visible, now invisible. Then she was standing beside Ravengar, who had risen to his feet, and offering him the mantle.

At once Joe made his decision. He flopped down in the grass and began crawling toward them.

Ravengar, meanwhile, resolutely declined the mantle.

"Take it, my dear," he said again. "I am quite safe. And I will meet you here after it has grown dark, and we can make our plans together. You can never go back to your husband."

Leontine shivered. She had told Ravengar of his murderous plot.

"I'll take it, then, since you wish it," she said submissively, and drew back her arm, with the filmy mantle upon it.

At that moment a hand shot upward from the grass and tore the mantle from her grasp. A moment later Joe, an expert thief, had it in his possession, and was racing for the pines.

Leontine cried out, and Ravengar staggered after him. But Joe was already out of sight, hugging the precious mantle in his arms.

As Leontine turned, voices were heard from the other side of the trees. They were those of Sebastian and Bianca, who had been joined by her second servitor.

"Come!" cried Leontine, grasping Ravengar by the arm. "We must get away before they sight us!"

"Leontine! The mantle!"

"Our lives, Ravengar," she responded.

And, seizing him by the arm, she helped him into the trees, into the underbrush. They crouched there while Bianca and Sebastian, unsuspecting their presence, passed by them toward the hotel.

"I suppose that fellow Ravengar won't come back to life," suggested Sebastian.

Bianca realized for the first time that he had gone. But she did not care to let Sebastian know that she had saved him. "I guess we've seen the last of him," she answered.

Bianca and Sebastian, arm in arm, started down the path through the woods together.

SIGNIFICANCE OF COFFINS

When one sees a wagon go along the road carrying a coffin, the first thing he does is to begin to inquire who it is that is dead. In fact, the very idea of a coffin suggests the crossing of a human soul across the dark valley of the Shadow of Death.

What then is suggested to your mind by the news dispatch that Uncle Sam's War Department has placed contracts for the manufacture and delivery of 200,000 "pine boxes?"

It seems to us that the government is preparing to bury a large portion of the men whom they will send to Europe.

It is indeed an awful thing for an army of our men to march into the jaws of death, knowing that their caskets await them, already prepared to receive the remnants of their bodies after they have ben butchered on the terrible alter of the mighty war god. But we can only pray that our death may come to us in a true vision of the righteousness of the cause for which we are to be offered up. Americans do not dread death if they know they are dying for the cause of justice, honor and liberty.

A FRIEND FROM COOSA

Last Saturday the editor of the Union-Banner was made glad by a visit to our office of a good friend from Weogufka, by name, Osce Stewart. Mr. Stewart was over here to attend to some business matters, and to pay a visit to the family of his brother-in-law, Mr. G. H. Massey. Like everybody else from Coosa, Osce is one of the best fellows in the world, happy, jolly and good-natured, always looking for and finding the most pleasant side of everything.

Once when in Coosa, the Editor and Henry Pond had the pleasure of spending the night at the home of Mr. Stewart, and we cannot ever forget the air of cordial hospitality which he and his family bestowed upon us

BUSY MEN NOT BRAGGING

On March 31 the Portland, Oregon, Chamber of Commerce gave a banquet in celebration of the launching of a steel merchant ship just completed at that place. The builder of the ship took occasion to congratulate the city upon the establishment of an industry which includes the building of both steel and wooden ships, and gave the credit for the success of the enterprise to a local banker, J. C. Ainsworth. Just two weeks later the Federal Shipping Board announced that it had "authorized builders to commence preliminary work" on the vessels for that governmental agency. Two years hence the board will be pointing to its success in restoring America to her former place as a builder of ships. The Department of Commerce has long been assuming, if not asserting, credit for much work done by a prominent New York Bank in the development of commercial relations in South America. And, since the publicity bureaus of this government work overtime at public expense, quite likely, the people of the country will overlook the real accomplishment of individual initiative and individual capital.

PRESS CENSORSHIP

"The Hohenzolern monarch, whom we are fighting, still deludes his people by controlling their press to his ends and against the publication of the truth.

Why, then, has Mr. Wilson adopted the chief instrument of the Czar and the Kaiser as an all-essential instrument in a war for democracy and against tyranny? Will it not make an interesting echo in Russian conferences now, when it is adopted that the head of the American Republic advocates, demands, the right to silence a free press and shackle all expression of public opinion.

No president in our history ever made a greater mistake than Mr. Wilson has now made. If only he has his way, this power will not merely wreck his administration, but it will hereafter awaken a revolt in public opinion unknown in this country since our last king lost his colonies in America by policies which Mr. Wilson would now imitate."—New York Tribune.

DOWN WITH THE GAMBLERS

The government must throttle the gamblers in foodstuffs. In the midst of war, nothing so hits the heart of condition as this. No one is opposed to fair profits to producers, manufacturers and dealers, but everybody is opposed to enormous speculative profits, which go into the pockets of a few wealthy people and are filched from the pockets of the rank and file of the people, who will have the heaviest burden to bear during the course of the war.

Throttle the gamblers by immediately prohibiting the dealing in futures on the stock boards. Eliminate from the situation the element of speculation and gambling, and immediately will come some relief.

The government should act with promptness. "Do it now" should be the motto, before the situation becomes unbearable and the people are tempted to protect themselves in their own way.—Portland Telegram.

CIVIL SERVICE SECRECY

The Civil Service Reform Association of New York City has found 200 persons on the city pay roll in violation of the civil service law. When the national civil service reform league tried to make investigation of the national payroll, the officers of that organization were refused access to the records. Even the Civil Service Commission, supposed to be guarding the interests of civil service reform, would not grant an inspection of the records in its custody. If New York City Officials would only pattern after national authorities, the 200 illegal appointments would not have been discovered.

TO THE KNOCKOUT

There has been considerable discussion as to the arrangement of the terms upon which we shall fight Germany in cooperation with the Allies and the timid ones who remember Washington's counsel against "entangling alliances" are declaring against any form of a treaty which will blind us to the nations by whose side we must fight. A treaty is not necessary. Great Britain and France have none. They have an agreement against a separate peace, but all their other relations are determined by the course of warfare. So it may be with us. An exchange of notes relative to a separate peace and providing for the things which we shall insist upon when peace is made, will do the trick. John Hay set ajar "the open door" in China without treaties. But some form of a gentleman agreement against a separate peace is absolutely essential. For Grmany now to make terms with us would by no means let us out except for the time being—while it would let us in for untold dangers later. We cannot come late into the war and quit it early as well. We must see it through.

A very marked example of the consistency with which the Department officials at Washington, and Congress are dealing with newspapers is found in their activities regarding the Liberty Bond publicity and the imposition of the war tax measures. They say they will have the newspapers "do their bit" by paying a two per cent. tax on all advertising receipts. And at the same time another crowd are sending out whole pages of advertising, urging the people to buy Liberty Bonds, and requesting the newspapers to run it free of charge It looks to us like some of them are figuring on having the newspapers do "two bits," for they want us to give our space to help out in the sale of Liberty Bonds, upon which they say the whole success of the war depends: and besides we must pay the tax in addition.

NO CENSORSHIP YET

Newspapers have had a "showdawn" on the feeling of congressmen and senators toward them. It was shown in the various phases of the several bills brought forward with the wish to control the publication of information and the criticism of official action. The original bill was too drastic for a free country, and under it an editor or publisher could have been put in prison for ten years for the publication of a news item regarding the war, or the paper might have been fined $10,000, a sum, which if imposed, would have put most papers out of existence. Such a bill could not pass any congress of a republic and was killed. Then a modified bill with nearly the same powers was presented, but congress was not willing to grant such powers to a military official.

Whatsoever powers to punish that may be established in republics should be in the courts and juries. The freedom of the press is essential to human freedom. The nations that do not have freedom of press have no freedom except that granted by the rulers.

In many votes in the two houses of congress it is shown that the papers have open enemies in congress and that there are men there who voted against the freedom of press quite willingly, though they took an oath to support the constitution. which forbids congress passing any law curtailing the freedom of the press.—Birmingham Ledger.

Would you mix your cattle-feed with cotton?

YOU know that such a combination would be carried through the digestive tract without giving the milk-producing and fat-producing food a chance to be assimilated. The lint on old style hulls acts the same way. It forms a pad or cushion-like covering around the concentrates that prevents the digestive juices from extracting the full amount of protein.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. L & N Freight Service

THE prosperity of any community is measured largely by the quality of Freight Service rendered and by the reasonableness of the charge made. Men, women and children eat, wear and sleep Freight Service and pay for that service directly or indirectly. Farmers, manufacturers and merchants, and those employed by them, must have Freight Service, otherwise the wheels of commerce become clogged and business stagnation results.

Therefore, the L. & N. long ago determined to supply the standard of excellence in Freight Service. No railroad in the South has a better road bed, with a lower grade and fewer curves, or a larger percentage of double track; none has more powerful modern engines or more commodious freight cars. No railroad approaches the L. & N. in speed of schedules and consequent promptness of delivery.

And no railroad in the South charges a lower rate, even for inferior service, than is charged by the L. & N. for superior service.

L. & N. Freight Service has widened the South's field of opportunity; has facilitated the development of her rich natural resources, and afforded a ready market for her varied commerce.

Since 1900 the L. & N. has transported 414,340,026 tons of freight. The L. & N. is equipped for yet greater service, and is planning with optimism and faith in the future of the South and her people.

Your favorable consideration of L. & N. Freight Service is requested with the assurance that the L. & N. will co-operate to the full limit of its unexcelled facilities.

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It should naturally help to whiten, soften, freshen and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is truly marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands. Adv.

COULDN'T LIFT SIX MONTHS OLD BABY

Mrs. Hawkins Was So Weak Couldn't Move in Her Bed Without Help.

HAD SUFFERED TORTURE

Well and Strong Again After Taking Tanlac and Weighs More Than She Has in Over Eighteen Years.

"I was down in bed and couldn't raise my head or move without help and now I'm able to do all my housework, even to my cooking and garden work and I weigh more than I have in eighteen years and have been taking Tanlac only about four weeks," said Mrs. Dollie Hawkins, 4906 Second avenue, South, Birmingham, Ala., recently.

"For years," continued Mrs. Hawkins, "I suffered with rheumatism and acute indigestion. The rheumatism got me down in bed and had me bound so hard and fast somebody had to move me about and the pain was terrible. I couldn't lift my six-months-old baby, and had to hire someone to wait on me and do my work. I was so nervous the least little thing dropping on the floor would startle me and my heart would almost stop beating. I couldn't eat any solid food at all and was in such run-down condition my baby fell off until it was just a little skeleton and fretted and cried all the time. No kind of medicine did me any good and I was getting worse all the time.

"If ever a medicine did wonders, Tanlac did it for me and my little baby. I felt better in just a few days after I began taking it. I have taken three bottles and I am not nervous in the least now and my sleep is fine and rests me. The awful rheumatic pains and misery is all gone. I can eat anything I want and my food not only gives me nourishment but my baby is as fat as a little pig and sits for hours at a time on a pallet and plays without a whimper. Tanlac has made a well woman of me and a fat, healthy baby out of my little sickly one, and I'm just so thankful for what Tanlac has done for us I want everybody to know about this great medicine."

There is a Tanlac dealer in your town. Adv.

WAR PLAN CHANGED

JOFFRE'S APPEAL FOR TROOPS ALTERED THE SCHEME OF THE GENERAL STAFF.

LONG DELAY NOT NECESSARY

Indications Are That America Will Be Represented on the Fighting Line Far in Advance of the Date Originally Set.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—The American people were given to understand that it was the intention of the war department to hold American soldiers in this country until an enormous force was trained and ready to send to Europe virtually in one great expedition. Of course all the troops could not be sent together, but the plan was to get them over there as nearly as possible in a bunch.

This planning of the army authorities, so far as the military chiefs could do it, definitely was fixed upon. Most people, however, probably will remember the "recall" which was sounded by American authority on the request made by General Joffre for the dispatch of an immediate force to Europe.

It may have been President Wilson who finally decided the question of the wisdom of sending General Pershing's division to the other side. Unquestionably General Joffre's plea made a great impression upon President Wilson. Pershing's force is to go, and it seems now to be extremely likely that other original plans of the war department may go the way just as this first plan has gone it.

When General Pershing's division reaches Europe, or rather after it has been there a short time, it will be found to be serviceable in a way that is not all sentiment. There have been some vaporings about a force for sentimental purposes. If "Black Jack" Pershing thought he was being sent to Europe as a lollipop with a sentimental feather in his hat he probably would quit the army.

Original Plans Altered.

The government of the United States has allowed newspapers to tell how many men there are to be in Pershing's outfit, and that it is intended to send the troops as quickly as possible. So it becomes proper, because the intention to dispatch a force marks a complete change of original plan, for one to say a word about how the general staff's original plans were shell riddled and to say something also concerning what effect the change may have on the future.

No one knows, of course, and no one would say if he did know, just when other expeditionary forces are to be sent to Europe. The departure of Pershing's force will not be chronicled. When it arrives safely on the other side the world will know about it, and not before. The same veil of secrecy will be thrown about the departure of other forces in the future. Out of the general field of the planning, however, one or two things may be picked for proper comment and explanation.

If the original plan had been adhered to American troops, except for some few engineer detachments, would not have sent to Europe for many months. A long time will elapse anyway before a big force is on the fighting line, but it can be said that the United States is in much better condition than it was thought to be to send considerable forces of troops to Europe earlier than was the expectation.

The French military officers apparently made an impression on the mind of the war department when it told of the intensive training possibilities just back of the French lines. General Bridges of the British army in a public address, told of men who never having seen a rifle, were made ready for the fighting line with eleven weeks' intensive training.

Training Won't Take So Long.

Everything that has developed within the last few weeks tends to show that America will be represented on the fighting front of Europe a considerable time in advance of the date originally set for its participation in actual hostilities. There are units of the National Guard which Frenchmen have said need only the short training back of the lines to make them fit for the fight. Our regulars, with less training than would be necessary for the Guard, will be in condition quickly to go into the trenches.

It is not going to take a year to train the recruits for service. Today there are in camp many thousands of young men who after only three months instruction, will be made junior officers of the national army, whose duty it will be to instruct recruits. If the regular officers of the United States army can make officers out of green men in three months, is it logical to suppose that it is going to take a much longer time to fit the enlisted men for the intensive training camps back of the line in France.

Camps Will Be Schools.

The war department has not yet selected sites for all the training camps. Gen. Leonard Wood is to have 16 of them under his directing and disciplinary control. There were those who thought that if General Wood was to be removed from New York, he should have been sent to Boston as the place second in importance. Brig. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards commands the Northeastern department, with headquarters at Boston. General Edwards will have but one training camp to command.

On an average there will be about 22,000 young soldiers in each camp for the training of the new army. This means that there must be lots of elbow room. Extended order is the order of the drill day.

A plan has been suggested by which the young men of the National army may be taught something besides drilling and fighting. The recruits for the new army are to come from all elements of the American, the half-American, and the quarter-American body. Some of these men, many of them, in fact, must be taught what we are fighting for, what it all means, and why it is that they should be willing to risk their lives for their country.

Army officials realize that persons who want Germany to lick us and persons who do not think that there is any ideal in the wide world that is worth fighting for, say that the army life does nothing to uplift a man, and that it adds nothing to his education. Officials hold that those who so think do not know anything about the army, and probably hope that they will escape contact with it, especially so far as fighting touch with it is concerned.

To Be Taught Why We Are Fighting.

The thousands of young soldiers who will enter the service and who are not well read concerning current events and, perhaps because of environment, have been indifferent to them, will be given lessons in lecture form in American history, and with them they will get a conception of republican institutions and why it is they are worth fighting the world, if necessary, to obtain.

The new army is to be a selective army, but the chances are that the greater part of its rank and file will be men of the volunteer spirit. There will be those, however, in the ranks who will be resentful, either because they do not like to be forced to serve in any cause, or else because they have no realizing sense of what this war means to Americans of the present generation, and will mean to those of the coming years.

Washington believes that the soldiers of the whole-souled volunteering spirit who know that this is a war against despotism, will do their own part in the work of enlightening their comrades who "do not know much about it." The spirit which has possession of a majority of the soldiers in the ranks soon takes possession of the minority. Inspiration to those at first indifferent comes from contact with the inspired. There are scores of other things in any army which help to make the men as one and to keep them fighting with one purpose and with one heart.

Bird Protection a War Measure.

What have birds to do with war or war with birds? The bird protectors of the country, men who not only would save the birds but help to save the crops, answer that birds have much to do with helping a nation to win a war.

Administration officials and especially those charged with helping to stimulate food production throughout the United States are urgent in their desire that congress at the present session shall pass the enabling act which will permit the United States government to put into instant effect the treaty now existing with Canada whereby the migratory birds may be given adequate protection.

Some time ago a treaty was entered into with the British government by which Canada on its part agreed to enforce certain regulations protecting migratory birds. The United States senate ratified the treaty and it already has the force of law. The difficulty in the way of its enforcement is that congress has not passed the enabling act with the necessary provision of money to secure an adequate carrying out of the terms of the treaty in this country.

The senate committee has reported the enabling act favorably. The house committee has not as yet done so, but every effort is being made to show the committeemen the relation which exists between birds and a proper conducting of the war and to get them to report the bill in order that it may become a law at this session.

President Wilson is strongly in favor of the passage of the enabling act. The real sportsmen of the country and all the bird protective societies and large numbers of the farmers' institutes and other organizations are in favor of the passage of the act which will give the insectivorous birds, large numbers of which are game birds, adequate protection during certain seasons of the year. Of course song birds which are insectivorous and therefore beneficial in their lives are protected under the provisions of law all through the year.

The officials of the biological survey, which is a branch of the department of agriculture, are receiving scores of letters from all parts of the country telling of the good which the federal migratory bird protection law has done since its enactment. The trouble has been that there has been too little money to enable the officials to enforce the law as it should be enforced.

When the treaty is ratified by the senate and by the proper authorities of the other country which is a party to the treaty, it becomes the law of the land. An enabling act with money, however, is necessary to secure the enforcement of the terms of the treaty. Canada acted promptly, for the Washington officials say the Canadians at the very outbreak of the war recognized the necessity of protecting the crops so essential to success in war by protecting the birds which destroy the insects which forage on grain and other growing food products.

GERMAN SPIES ACTIVE IN U. S.

THREE ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY TO SEND MAIL TO TEUTONS

PLANNED TO USE SHIP CREWS

System Operated Both Ways Between United States, Germany and Mexico.

New York.—Evidence that two complete high-powered wireless installations assembled here were shipped piecemeal to Mexico, supposedly for use of a German spy system in this country, was unearthed in connection with the arrest of three men on charges of conspiracy to send mail containing military information from the United States to Germany through members of Norwegian ship crews. It was estimated by the United States commissioner, before whom the alleged plotters were arraigned, that it was through their instrumentality that news of the pending arrival in England of the American destroyer fleet was sent to Germany before it even became generally known in this country.

With only a scratching of the surface of the mass of evidence in the government's hands, indications have been found that the secret mail system was operated both ways between the United States, Germany and Mexico. Several hundred letters have been sizzed, written in Englosh, German and Spanish, and some apparently in code. They are being translated in the expectation that they will open the way to full revelations of the alleged spy plot.

The prisoners are Harry F. Perissi and Irving Bonaparte, both said to be American-born, employed by a German electrical company here, and Axel E. Melchar, said to be a naturalized citizen of Sweden. They are charged with conspiring to induce members of the crews of the steamships Bergensfjord and Kristianiafjord, both chartered to carry regular United States mails, to take letters and packages from this country destined for Germany in violation of the law prohibiting competition with the United States mail, but it was said by the government authorities that the investigation would continue with a view to determining whether treason had been committed.

When the three were arraigned bail was fixed at $25,000 for Melchar. Upon objection by counsel for the men for these amounts as excessive, Commissioner Hitchcock said:

"These are unusual times and while the people of our own country did not even know of the departure of our destroyers, it was published four days ahead of their arrival in England in the papers in Berlin and it is my understanding that the government has it in mind that this case is part and parsel of the same inquiry."

That others are implicated and that the men under arrest are willing to tell all they know was indicated by counsel for Bonaparte, who said his client was willing to help the government in every way in his power. Perissi, speaking in his own behalf, said: "I did not start this conspiracy. The mail came to me first from others and I had nothing to do with the crews of the ships."

Evidence has been found showing that the men received from the supposed principles in the alleged spy mail system and that one of them reploit $50 for each package sent by their ceived in all more than $150 for his work.

A fourth man was detained, but not arrested, pending further investigation. He is Ferdinand H. Adams, a German citizen, employed by an electrical company here.

Evidence has been found indicating that with his help the apparatus was assembled and consigned to Vera Cruz. Nothing was revealed showing any criminal intent on his part, but the government officers are seeking to determine whether he knew the apparatus was to be used in a German spy system or whether? there was anything to show the crime of espionage.

Part of the outfit, it has been learned, got through, but part was held up in this country. Whether a complete set has been assembled has not been determined.

War Department Plans Huge Army.

Washington.—Plans of the War Department to draft from 900,000 to 1,500,000 men of those registered for the new army, were disclosed by Provost Marshal General Crowder to the Senate Military Affairs Committee Exemptions, he said, probably would result in reducing the number to 625,000 men for immediate service.

Air Supremacy Held by Allies.

London.—The morning papers figure that 713 airplanes were shot down on the western front during May. Four hundred and forty-two were German, 271 British and French. British headquarters admitted the loss of eighty-six machines, but as the French do not announce any war losses it is impossible to verify the inference that they lost 185. It is worthy to note that the estimate of 271 is compiled from German official reports. The total air losses for April were estimated at 709.

FOUR WEEKS IN HOSPITAL

No Relief—Mrs. Brown Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"For years I suffered so sometimes it seemed as though I could not stand it any longer. It was all in my lower organs. At times I could hardly walk, for if I stepped on a little stone I would almost faint. One day I did faint and my husband was sent for and the doctor came. I was taken to the hospital and stayed four weeks but when I came home I would faint just the same and had the same pains.

A friend who is a nurse asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it that very day for I was suffering a great deal. It has already done me more good than the hospital. To anyone who is suffering as I was my advice is to stop in the first drug-store and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before you go home."—Mrs. W. C. The Profiteer.

Harold McCormick of Chicago, who has outfitted the whole Yarrowdale crew at his own expense, is a very rich man and a very generous man, but he does not like to be "done."

Mr. McCormick, on one of his visits to Florida, neglected to stipulate his hotel rate in advance. The hotel man took advantage of this oversight, and the bill he presented was exorbitant.

Mr. McCormick, however, paid without a murmur. Then he said, as he folded the receipt in his wallet:

"By the way, have you got any two-cent stamps?"

"Yes, sir," said the hotel man. "How many would you like to have?"

"Er——," said Mr. McCormick, mildly, "how much are they apiece?"

Canal Zone Pioneers Volunteer.

Of the hundreds of Americans who went to Panama in 1904, when the Americans took possession of the Canal zone, less than fifty remain on the isthmus. The 1904 men, with whom are included several women, who came as nurses and have remained, have formed an organization, known as the Society of the Incas. Every year on May 4, the anniversary of the American occupation of the zone, they hold a banquet. This year, on the thirteenth anniversary, they passed a resolution to offer themselves, as an organization or as individuals for whatever service the government should desire them, in the zone, in the United States, in France or elsewhere.

STATE TREASURY MAY RUN EVEN

INDICATIONS ARE ALABAMA WILL LIVE WITHIN INCOME THIS YEAR.

AT THE STATE'S CAPITAL

Interesting News Budget of Happenings in Various Departments of State.

—Montgomery.

If Alabama's receipts and disbursements from June 1 to October 1 are no more than they were last year, the state treasury will run practically even for the fiscal year of 1916-17 instead of running behind more than $400,000. These facts are shown by figures obtained from the state auditor's department.

Total receipts from October 1 to June 1 were $6,668,250.02, while total disbursements were $5,955,508.63, leaving $672,741.39 in the treasury. Total receipts from October 1, 1915, to June 1, 1916, were $6,136,149. 80, while total disbursements were $5,968,612.36, leaving $167,537.44 in the treasury. It will be seen that total disbursements for the two periods were practically the same, while receipts for 1916-17 were greater by more than $500,000.

Less Fertilizer Is Being Used.

The State has awarded a contract for 4,000,000 fertilizer tags. The price of this commodity has made a tremendous advance. The same firm has received the contract three successive years. In 1915 the state paid 49 cents a thousand, in 1916 paid 59 cents, and this year will pay 73 1-2 cents. The rise is due to advance in paper and in copper wire. That the farmers are cutting down the use of fertilizers is indicated in the fact that six million tags were bought in 1915, five million were found more than enough in 1916 and four million have been contracted for this year.

Court Legalizes Tax Adjustments.

Numerous tax adjustments in Jefferson, Mobile and other counties made by the county boards of equalization after August of last year were made legal by the supreme court when it modified a previous opinion in the case of the county of Mobile vs. Joseph Espalla, Jr., by holding that work done by the boards after August 1 was legal but that members of the board could not collect their per diem for services after that date. In other words, the county boards of equalization may make adjustments throughout the year if called into special session by the state board of equalization but cannot collect per diem for any work done after August 1.

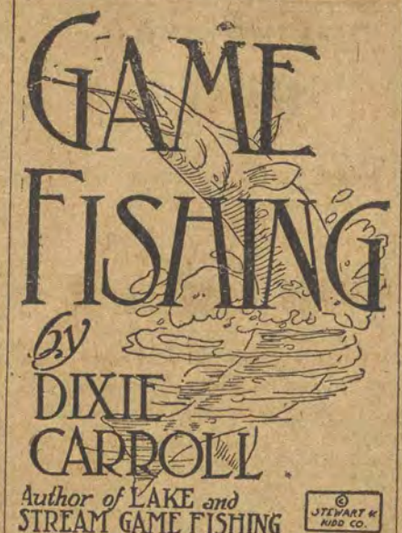
Insurance Case Settled.

The Supreme Court decided that there was no such thing as an incontestable policy of life insurance in the case of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York, vs. P. E. Lovejoy, administratrix, appealed from the Montgomery County Circuit Court. The Supreme Court decided that an express agreement to pay the insurer money to the estate of the insured, in the event he committed suicide, while in his rght mind, would be offensive to law and good morals and against the public policy of the State.

Wallace Lovejoy had an insurance policy with this company for $2,500. He took his own life. The opinion of the court was delivered by Justice Gardner.

Girard Man Given Term in Pen.

C. C. Phelps, one of the men convicted of the possession and selling of prohibited liquors in Girard last summer at the time of the Girard raids, must serve a penitentiary sentence, according to the decision of the Court of Appeals issued. The court affirms the judgment of conviction on the grounds that Phelps had in his possession more than the amount of liquor permitted by law. In fact, one of the state witnesses, Burt, constable of Beat 10, stated that about ten dray loads of liquor were taken from Phelps' place. The sentence imposed by the trial judge was announced erroneous by the higher court for the reason that the law says a misdemeanor may not be punished by more than a year in prison. If the hard labor sentence exceeds this period it becomes a case for the penitentiary rather than the county jail.



Judge Pelham Honored.

On the call of the Seventh Division by the Court of Appeals, resolutions were adopted on the death of Judge John Pelham, who resided in the district embraced in that division. Memorial addresses were made by former associates of the lamented jurist.

Attorney General Appeals.

Attorney General William L. Martin will ask the Supreme Court to reverse the Court of Appeals in the case of John T. Oaks, former Marshal of Girard, which held that Oaks could not be convicted of bribery for receiving from Girard liquor dealers who were violating the state prohibition laws because he was not an executive officer of the state, as alleged in the indictment. If the decision is not reversed indictments charging the same offense will be nol prossed.

GAME FISHING

by DIXIE CARROLL

Author of LAKE and STREAM GAME FISHING

© STEWART & KIDD CO.

WOBBLERS, WIGGLERS AND SICH.

My Dear Buck:

They are with us by the hundreds and even thousands, the various-shaped wooden plugs, painted in every color in the deck and then a few extra cubist daubs thrown in for luck. And here's the funny part, old chap, they all seem to get the fish, more or less, according to the expertness of the manipulator of the rod.

Although the majority of the artificial baits do not resemble any natural bait, that is, not that you could notice without first having read their pedigrees, through some inexplainable reason the fish strike them, and, as they generally have hooks galore, even the beginner has no difficulty in hooking his fish; fact is, many times the fish hooks itself. Of course you'll have to jot this down in your dream-book, "Hookin' 'em doesn't always mean landin' 'em."

What Makes 'Em Do It?

Probably when a highly cultured bass sees one of these gloriously decorated affairs splash in his home grounds he up and makes a dash at it in anger at the rough-neck intrusion of the queer-looking object, or perhaps strikes it in pure cussedness, egged on by the wonderful movements of the little demon in its wobble back home to the caster.

How they ever dug the big bunch out of the woodpile and got away with it is the eighth wonder of the world. More power to 'em. What would a fellow do if he couldn't browse around among a bunch of new ones and select a few to take along on each trip and try them out on the unsuspecting fish.

You Never Can Tell.

You never know what you can do with one of these dippy, diving, wobbling wonders 'till you try it and then all the advance dope and traditions of that particular bait may go to smash in one afternoon's fishing and new victories in an entirely different line of fishing be pegged up to its credit.

To illustrate this point, old man, at the opening of the season I took a flyer at bass. It had been cold and rainy, with high waters, and the bass were quiet and far-offish. My tackle box was decked out with a collection of lures guaranteed to make any bass nervous, jealous or fighting mad. The bass sure were off their feed, both in color and shape. Nothing seemed to coax them out of the wet. I snapped on a South Bend Bass-ereno bait, all white with a red head, and tried that as an enticer. Nothing doing with the bass, but I had as nice a piece of wall-eyed pike fishing as a fellow could find anywhere. Almost every cast brought a strike, and in the afternoon's casting this little old bass lure hooked 32 wall-eyed pike, all of which were thrown back in the drink except the larger ones and that left a stringer with the limit and none below two pounds, topped with a six and a half pounder. My fishing pal and guide had the same luck with a white Wilson Wobbler with red flutes, by which he swears like a pagan. They were sure off the bass but on the pike.

The Colors They Like.

As to color, the preference seems to be with white body and red head, followed by all red, all yellow, green back with white belly and rainbow, but what they take one day may be passed without a squint the next. However, with the above colors in your tackle outfit you probably can please them any day.

The luminous-painted plug, which, if exposed to daylight or artificial light, glows like the dampened head of a match, makes an excellent bait for after sundown or moonlight casting. The fact that these baits float when in the water and not in motion makes them an ideal lure for the beginner, especially when he puts in a session with a little old back lash. He knows his bait is floating instead of snagging, which was the habit of the "daddy" of this kind of plug, the old underwater sinker that found more snags and hook holds than a fellow thought could exist in well regulated fishing waters.

Lures That Make 'Em Strike.

For a selection of lively artificials, the Jamison Coaxer, which is a cross between a chunk of pork and a humming bird, makes a good one to start with; the Heddon's Baby Crab Wiggler gives all the moves of a crawfish going home to its mother and that sure is pie for the bass. The Wilson Fluted Wobbler, South Bend Bass-ereno and Rush Tango Minnow, all with white body and red heads, give you a bunch of dives, dips and crawls that is hard to beat.

With these baits in your tackle box, and any others that tickle your fancy, you ought to be able to slip one over on the unsuspecting fish, and at the same time have a lot of fun watching them do their dance in the water.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 10

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

LESSON TEXT—John 19:16-22, 25-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—Christ died for our sins.—I Cor. 15:3.

We are compelled to omit a consideration of that dark, despicable trial in Pilate's judgment hall. Pilate's weak-kneed subservience to custom and the cry of the politician is one of the blackest pages in history. His scourging of the man whom he, himself, declared innocent, is practically without parallel. After the mocking and the scourging, Pilate said unto the people, Behold the man" (v. 5), and later in sarcasm he said to the same people, "Behold your king" (v. 14). Teachers should emphasize at the beginning and all through this lesson that Jesus suffered and died for the sins of all men, ours as well as those of his own day.

I. The Crucifixion of Jesus (vv. 16-22). It was about nine o'clock in the morning when Pilate gave his infamous order that Jesus should be crucified. It was indeed a sorrowful procession which moved itself along the "Via Dolorosa" (the Sorrowful Way), consisting of the Roman soldiers, the tottering, physically exhausted man of Galilee, and, Luke adds, "sorrowing women." They took him to the place of a skull, a hill about sixty feet high, at the foot of which was the rock-hewn sepulcher in which his body was later laid. The place was called in Hebrew "Golgotha," the Aramaic for skull. Calvary is the Latin for the same. On either side of him were crucified the robbers, which was an evident effort to add to his shame as well as a salutary warning to the Passover pilgrims. Over the cross Pilate wrote a title on a wooden tablet. Following the usual custom, this was nailed at the head of Jesus, setting forth his crime. The words it bore were, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews," as though Pilate would take malicious revenge upon the mob which had made him perform a deed he had sought to avoid. Literally this sign meant "This man is the kingliest of all Jews, and see what they have done to him." In response to Pilate's questioning, Jesus said, "I am the King of the Jews." Pilate knew that he was innocent, and sought to let him go free, but, rather than incur the hatred of the Jewish authorities, he yielded to their demand for his blood, and became a party to the murder of the Son of God. Men today take a part in his crucifixion rather than surrender wholly to him, and pay the price of open confession. "They crucified him." How these words laid the pride of men in the dust. Human nature is the same today as it was two thousand years ago when the world's bitterest hate was wreaked not upon a bad man but upon the best man, the perfect man, the God-man. The pain Jesus suffered on Calvary was no imagination. He suffered it all for us (Isa. 53:6), but the physical suffering was not the most severe agony he bore (Ps. 69:20; Matt. 27:46). The crucifixion of Jesus was part of the eternal purposes of God's love and redemption.

II. The World's Darkest Hour (vv. 23-30). Each of the Gospel writers refers to the part the soldiers took in casting lots for his garments. They were unconsciously fulfilling the prophecy of Psalm 22:18, and it was from their number that one of the supreme testimonies to the character of Christ came (See Matt. 27:54). The first three evangelists tell us of the throng of pilgrims who passed along the highway from the north, close at hand, and who wagged their heads in imitation and mockery of the agony of the one who was being crucified. But there were others who were spectators of this event, a group of Christ lovers (v. 25).

"It is finished." These are remarkable words. He had finished his suffering; he had finished that for which he came into the world when he began his ministry; he had finished the mission for which his father had sent him into the world; he had finished and fulfilled the prophecies concerning his suffering and death; he had completed the work of the redemption; the atonement was finished, and Satan's power was finished; the Mosaic law was finished as far as its claims upon the believer were concerned (Rom. 10:4; Col. 2:13; Eph. 2:15 and 16). Outwardly it seemed to be Satan's supreme hour. It was the world's darkest hour.

The seven last words. These would be an interesting study for any class. (1) "Father forgive them for they know not what they do;" (2) "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise."

(3) "Woman, behold thy son; (4) "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (5) "I thirst;" (6) "It is finished;" (7) "Father into thy hands I commit my spirit." Christ had power to lay down his life. He had power to take it up again, but he laid it down, submitting to a burial in the tomb. At that moment note the effect upon the malefactor, upon the centurion, upon the elements of cloud and sky, upon the veil of the temple, upon the people and upon his friends. What is the effect of this story upon yourself, teachers, and upon those who are listening to your instruction?

Dodson's Liver Tone doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all next day like calomel.

Take a dose of calomel tonight and tomorrow you will feel sick, weak and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work!

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up with your head clear, your liver active, bowels clean, breath sweet and stomach regulated. You will feel cheerful and full of vigor and ready for a hard day's work.

You can eat anything afterwards without risk of salivating yourself or your children.

Get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and try it on my guarantee. You'll never again put a dose of nasty, dangerous calomel into your stomach. Adv.

Industry.

She was young, wholesome, handsome, modestly well-dressed and the young men looked up attentively when she came in the car door.

She went to a seat promptly. Few such girls ever get a chance to stand, you know.

And then she drew a sock from her handbag and began to make the knitting needles click and fly.

For some soldier? Possibly. To attract attention? No. For three miles she never lifted her eyes. Just old-fashioned industry. But how rare!—Detroit Free Press.

Dangers of Watered Coffee

Watered stock, watered milk, and watered coffee—the United States Government is carrying on a crusade to eliminate all three.

Everyone knows about watered stock. Everyone has seen "blue milk," the combined efforts of a cow and the old pump. But not everyone is on his guard against "watered coffee."

That the United States Government realizes the danger of watered coffee is shown by the specifications for the United States Army supplies. These specifications say plainly:

"Coffee: roasts must be 'dry' roasts, no water being permitted before, during or after the process of roasting."

Water in coffee is a piece of dishonesty practiced by unscrupulous coffee roasters. They turn the hose on the coffee while it is being roasted, so that it won't lose weight, as coffee will, when properly roasted. In roasting, coffee should lose about 16% of its weight. If it is watered it loses but 4%. The difference, of course, is water, for which you pay coffee value.

This is adulteration and nothing more. The water-logged coffee is rank and unhealthy. Of course, it is not honest to charge for coffee, and sell coffee beans soaked in water.

A lot of watered coffee is being sold no doubt right in this town. It is more often met with in the lower priced grades of bulk coffee.

As coffee is such an important beverage, pure food authorities are advising housewives to use the greatest care in selecting their coffee. The pure food experts say that the best way to avoid watered coffee is to buy some reliable packaged brand, roasted by a reputable coffee roaster as Arbuckle Brothers of New York.—Adv.

Vanishing Attitude.

"Do your constituents indorse your attitude?"

"I don't know yet," replied Senator Sorghum. "Attitudes are not as easy as they used to be. I can remember the time when all I needed in the way of an attitude was an Ajax-defying-the-lightning pose while I mentioned George Washington and the American eagle."

Telegraphing With the Voice.

A telegraph "sender" has been experimentally perfected which the operator works with his voice instead of his fingers. In place of raising and depressing his sending key he sends his dots and dashes by modulating his voice to produce long and short intervals. The principle of the sender is the same as that of the ordinary type. In the usual senders the raising and depressing of the key opens and closes the circuit to produce the dot and dash. In the new type a delicate diaphragm is so arranged that the vibrations in the air set up by the voice open and close the circuit as in a telephone and produce the same results.

KIDNEY REMEDY HIGHLY RECOMMENDED

There is no medicine which we handle that gives such good results as your Swamp-Root. Many of our customers have informed us at different times that they have derived great benefit from its use.

There was one case in particular which attracted a great deal of attention in this neighborhood early last Spring, as the gentleman's life was despaired of and two doctors treating him for liver and kidney trouble were unable to give him any relief. Finally a specialist from St. Louis was called in but failed to do him any good. I at last induced him to try your Swamp-Root and after taking it for three months, he was attending to his business as usual and is now entirely well. This case has been the means of creating an increased demand for your Swamp-Root with us.

Very truly yours,

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

MATERNITY

A great many young women about to become mothers worry over the fear that the great strain and physical suffering may impair their good looks. But thousands of women who have borne several children tell of the preparation known as "Mother's Friend" which has proven itself a boon in just such cases.

"Mother's Friend" is a preparation of special oils and other ingredients especially prepared for expectant mothers. It is a prescription of a famous physician.

"Mother's Friend" helps nature and makes it easy for the muscles and ligaments of the abdomen to expand. Much of the pain and discomfort is relieved.

All druggists supply "Mother's Friend." Apply it yourself, night and morning. Many women say it is worth its weight in gold.

Just the information every mother should possess is contained in a special book, prepared by the Bradfield Regulator Company, Dept. M, 554 Atlanta, Ga. Write for the book; it is free to users.

CLANTON BOYS WIN BY 5 TO 7, OVER AMERICAN GIRLS TEAM

Clanton people had the pleasure of witnessing their first baseball game of this season Monday evening on the County High School graunds. The game was played between the American Athletic Girls Base Ball Club and the local boys, which was intensely exciting from start to finish. "Sucker" Wilson pitched the first two innings for the boys, and the box was then occupied by "Pal" Pyron who did excellent pitching during the remaining seven innings. The final score resulted in 7 to 5 in favor of the home team.

This marks the first game for the Clanton Base Ball Team this season, and they have made a splendid start, by winning over one of the strongest amateur teams of the country.

Mr. James Baker of Route 5 was in town last Thursday and renewed his subscription. Mr. Baker told the editor that he had just sold a lot of home-raised meat at 25 cents per pound. It sounds good to hear such reports from our farmers. It is much better for them to have it to sell at 25 cents than to have it to buy a all. Many could profit by taking Mr. Baker as an example.

HANDS, ARMS, LIMBS ASLEEP

And Was Run-Down, Weak and Nervous, Says Florida Lady. Five Bottles of Cardui Made Her Well.

Kathleen, Fla.—Mrs. Dallas Prine, of this place, says: "After the birth of my last child...I got very much run-down and weakened, so much that I could hardly do anything at all. I was so awfully nervous that I could scarcely endure the least noise. My condition was getting worse all the time...

I knew I must have some relief or I would soon be in the bed and in a serious condition for I felt so badly and was so nervous and weak I could hardly live. My husband asked Dr. ———about my taking Cardui. He said, 'It's a good medicine, and good for that trouble', so he got me 5 bottles...After about the second bottle I felt greatly improved...before taking it my limbs and hands and arms would go to sleep. After taking it, however, this poor circulation disappeared. My strength came back to me and I was soon on the road to health. After the use of about 5 bottles, I could do all my house-work and attend to my six children besides."

You can feel safe in giving Cardui a thorough trial for your troubles. It contains no harmful or habit-forming drugs, but is composed of mild, vegetable, medicinal ingredients with no bad after-effects. Thousands of women have voluntarily written, telling of the good Cardui has done them. It should help you, too. Try it. E 74

LIBERTY BONDS ARE THE SAFEST

Money Paid Out Is Returned to You in Full at End of Stated Period

Greatest and Safest Of All Investments; Be a Shrewd Money Maker

Did you ever own a bond?

It is the greatest and safest of all investments. The shrewdest money makers are bond buyers. The most careful investors are bond buyers.

When you buy stock, the money you pay for it is gone forever. What you buy is only a right to share in dividends, providing there should be any.

But a bond is different. The money you pay for a bond is returned to you in full at the end of a stated period. You know by reading the bond itself on precisely what date you will get back your principal. Then, instead of wondering whether you will get interest or dividends on your money, you also know by reading your bond exactly what rate of interest you will be paid and on what dates the payments will be made to you.

Insurance companies, colleges, trust funds and conservative individual investors buy bonds because they are the safest kind of investment. Bonds issued by the United States government are the most valuable of all bonds. Our government never fails to pay: usually its bonds sell above par because they are always "as good as gold." The man or woman who holds United States bonds is free from worry: the money they cost will come back in full, and every cent of interest will be paid on the appointed days.

Liberty bonds, issued by the United States government in order to win the war and re-establish peace on earth, will soon be ready for sale. You can subscribe now. These bonds are in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $10,000, $50,000 and $100,000. You can buy one or several. Interest is at 3½ per cent, payable June 15 and Dec. 15 every year. If at a later date the government should issue bonds at 4, 4½, 5 or any other higher per cent of interest, you can at once exchange your 3½ per cent bonds for those of the highest rate. Thus you are protected as to the future. Furthermore, these Liberty bonds are tax free; hence your income from them is net, not subject to any deduction by the city, county, state or nation.

Every man, woman or child who buys a Liberty bond will be given a button to wear. That button will indicate two things:

1.—That its wearer believes in the investment value of government bonds;

2.—That the wearer has done something to help the United States win the war. That button will be a badge of honor in all the days to come.

Why not buy at least one Liberty bond for every member of your family? Decide now. Subscriptions close June 15 at the latest, but the government reserves the right to close earlier if it prefers.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. R.M. BUTLER, DECEASED

In his unerring wisdom the Great God of Heaven and earth touched and stilled the life of Sister R. M. Butler. Planted like a tender branch, as it were, by the water's edge fifty-seven years ago, it budded into unselfishness. It grew and blessed the world in many ways, a true woman, mother, neighbor and Christian.

Sister Butler was a long-time sufferer but patient all the way. Everything having been done by her kind husband and good children during her many years of suffering, could not restore the body. But she ever found comfort in the thought that when this earthly tabernacle should dissolve, we have a house not made with hands, but eternal and in the heaven; and like some weary child would with a toy it was tired of playing with, the sweet spirit of Sister Butler laid aside the old body so wrecked with pain, and took its flight to that home eternal, and on Friday morning, June 1st at 7 o'clock God transplanted it in the beautiful home of the soul.

Sister Butler was a true mother who blessed the world with three well trained children, one son and two daughters, who are now grown, and like their mother did have shouldered the great responsibility of life and are good neighbors and friends. May God bless them as they are bereaved in the loss of their best friend. Our loss is heaven's gain.

Sister Butler was a faithful Christian, a member of the Baptist Church. Bro. J. T. Nelson preached her funeral, and on Sunday evening June 3 her body was tenderly deposited in the sacred city at New Salem Baptist Church.

SUPERINTENDENT FEAGIN'S WEEKLY NEWSLETTER NO. 72

Results of the April Examination.

There were 3,567 applicants who wrote the examination for teachers, certificates in April; of this number 1,620 were successful. In addition to the 1,620 certificates issued on the basis of college and normal school graduation, 132 expiring certificates were extended for a period of one year, and thirteen certificates from other states were validated for use in the public schools of Alabama.

Certificates issued in this examination are classified as follows: Life grade, 45; first grade, 340; second grade, 496; third grade, 1002. Following the examination held in April, 1916, certificates were issued as follows: Life grade, 57; first grade 48; second grade 573; third grade, 1,029.

It will be seen from the above figures that 47 per cent. of the applicants for certificates on the basis of the April examination were successful as compared to 31 per cent. in December, 1916. This difference is no doubt accredited for by the fact that numerous offers of rural school positions at exceedingly low salaries induced poorly prepared teachers to stand the examination in December.

The encouraging feature of the examination is the rapid increase in the number of college and normal school graduates who are being added to the teaching force, and the number of experienced teachers who are pursuing courses for the extension of expiring certificates.

New Rules of State Examiners. Reading Circle Certificates.

In order to receive credit for a reading circle certificate at any time subsequent to the July 1917 examination, the certificates must have been secured during the five years prior to the examination at which credit is sought. Those who hold four certificates or a reading circle diploma. will do well to continue the reading circle work, if they expect full credit in the future.

Life Requirements.

Following the July examination all applicants for life certificates will be required to write the examination on the subject of "History of Education." Reading Circle certificates will exempt from the examination only in the other two subjects required.

Unfairness in Examination.

In the April examination, 61 applicants were rejected because their papers gave conclusive evidence of the use of unfair means. In keeping with resolutions of the County Boards of education adopted at their last anual meeting, the names and addresses of such applicants will be sent to each county superintendent and to the chairman of each county board. Those who desire to command the respect and confidence of the county officials should guard against the probability of being implicated in any form of cheating on examinations.

SUMMARY OF GRIEVANCES OF U. S. AND NECESSITY OF WAR

Indictment of German policy by G. E. Foss, of Illinois, a distinguished member of Congress (debate in House of Representatives, April 6, 1917):

"As a reward for our neutrality what have we received at the hands of William II?

"He has set the torch of incendiary to our factories, our workshops, our ships, and our wharves.

"He has laid the bomb of assassin in our munition plants and holds our ships.

"He sought to corrupt our manhood with a selfish dream of peace when there is no peace.

He has willfully butchered our citizens on the high seas.

"He has destroyed our commerce.

"He seeks to terrorize us with his devilish policy of frithfulness.

"He has violated every canon of international decency and has set at naught every solemn treaty and every precept of international law.

"He has plunged the world into the maddest orgy of blood, rapine, and murder which history records.

"He has intrigued against our peace at home and abroad.

"He seeks to destroy our civilization. Patience is no longer a virtue, further endurance is cowardice, submission to Prussian demands is pure slavery."

GENERAL PERSHING AND STAFF ARE GUESTS OF GOVERNMENT

Dinner is Given at Lancaster House Menu Was of Strict War-Time Plainness.

London, June 12.—Major General John J. Pershing and 18 members of his staff were the guests of the British government at a formal dinner tonight in Lancaster House, which is a government building devoted solely to purposes of state entertainment of distinguished visitors and was last utilized for the dinner of the imperial conference a month or more ago. There were 30 other diners, including eight members of the cabinet.

The prime minister, David Lloyd George, sat at the first of six round tables in the sumptuous dining hall, looking out across the green lawn of St. James' park at Buchingham palace opposite. At the prime minister's right sat the American ambassador, Walter H. Page, and at his left General Pershing. At the same table were Sir Edward Carson, first lord of the admiralty; Lord Robert Cecil, minister of blocade; Lord Hardinge, under secretary of the foreign office, and Colonels Anderson and Bethel of General Pershing's Staff.

The other tables were presided over by Lord Curson, lord president of the council; Viscount Milner, member of the War Cabinet; the Rt. Hon. George M. Barnes, pensions minister; the Earl of Denby, secretary of War, and Sir Alfred Mond. Sir Alfred, whose officer of commission-of works makes him official host at government functions, received the guests, of whom, Mr. Lloyd George was last to arrive. Vice Admiral William S. Sims, U. S. N., sat at Sir Alfred's right.

The dinner was not an elaborate menu, conforming strictly to the prescribedwar rations. There were no speeches. After the dinner groups of guests strolled through the upper floors of the great mansion, where are deposited remarkable collections of relics of old-time London.

Arthur J. Balfour, secretary for foreign affairs, was unable to be present at the dinner. Eearly in the evening before Major General Pershing left his hotel ex-Premier Asquith, he called on him. General Pershing came down stairs and greeted Mr. Asquith in the lobby, where they engaged in a five-minute conversation surrounded by an interested group.

GOVERNMENT HELPS POULTRY INDUSTRY IN 3 DIXIE STATES

Government Egg and Poultry Packing Demonstration Car to Tour Three Southern States Soon.

Washington, D. C.—To assist poultry raisers and shippers in the three Southern States to increase production and lessen spoilage of eggs and dressed poultry, the U. S. Department of Agriculture is sending its egg and dressed-poultry demonstration car on tour in Tennessee, Alabama and Kentucky. The car also will touch the border points in Mississippi and one in Virginia. In the course of the present tour, the car will visit thirty-nine of the more important egg and poultry shipping points on the Southern Railway system.

Four of Uncle Sam's egg-handling and poultry experts will accompany the car. The State Experiment Station in each state will send with the car a poultry raising specialist to help back-yard and farm raisers on chickens increase production of eggs and flesh and to use the most effective and economical methods of feeding, housing and protecting fowls from pests and disease.

The car will open its southern tour at Germantown, Tenn., on June 14, and, spending one day in demonstrations at each stop, will complete its pdesent schedule at Williamstown, Ky., on July 30.

IN MEMORY OF OUR LOST

We are sad to say that we have lost our friend, neighbor, wife and mother.

But we must say that on May 23rd at 8:30, p.m. this one whom we all loved had a call from on high, and left us to go on her mission into the land of peace and rest.

This one was Mrs. Tommie Grooms, wife of Mr. J. H. Grooms. Mrs. Grooms was near her 47th birthday when she died. She was a devoted wife and mother. She cared for six step children besides six of her own, who with her husband are left to mourn her departure.

Mrs. Grooms was a member of Mulberry Baptist Church at the time of her death. She was a devoted church member, and an example for all of us to follow if we desire to live a Christian life.

It was not my privilege to know Mrs. Grooms more than three and a half years, But to know her was to love her. In the short time I have known her I have lived near her or a door neighbor to her most of the time, and had the opportunity of seeing her often, and Mrs. Grooms seemed to feel that all was well with her soul all during her illness.

And during her month of illness and suffering she was always kind and gentle to everyone. She was always glad to see anyone who entered her room and all wished and longed to see her recover and have her health again, but the physicians failed to give her any relief and nothing seemed to do any good or give her any strength. At last in this sad hour in May, God saw fit to send his comforting physician and carry her away to a land where there is no sickness and sorrow and all pain is vanished.

But in this death we believe there is one assurance, and that is, if we will only live as God would have us live we shall some day clasp glad hands with Mrs. Grooms again, where there will be no sad parting and no tears shed.

While this was our loss and grief, it was a gain and a rejoicing with the angels in Heaven.

As I stood by the death bed of Mrs. Grooms and saw her draw her last breath it seemed that I could almost see smiles on her dying lips as she crossed over the river into that beautiful home that was awaiting her and the welcome greetings of her four little children who were awaiting her arrival.

Her remains were laid to rest in the Isabella Cemetery Thursday, May 24th at 3:30 in the afternoon, Rev. Carnell conducting the funeral services.

One among the many who loved Mrs. Grooms,

EULA LECROY.

Here is how to buy a $50 Liberty bond in installments, as prescribed by the government.

June 15 the government will give notification whether the bond has been allotted. If not, the deposit will be returned.

June 28 pay $9 through the agency where the application was filed.

July 30 pay $10. August 15 pay $15. August 30 pay $15.

When the second payment is made an official certificate will be given. When all payments have been made the bond will be delivered.

RECRUITING IN ALABAMA FALLEN BELOW AVERAGE

Advices just received from Washington show the state of recruiting in Alabama. An attempt to fill up the war quota of this state has fallen far below average. Unless this quota is filled up before June 30th, valuable time will be lost for training and the government will meet with serious trouble in its attempt to meet the present emergency.

Based on the population of the state, the following are the figures:

Quota for the State of Alabama to be obtained from April 1 to June 30, 1917, 4276.

The number obtained from April 1 to June 8, 1198.

The number still due, 3078.

Daily average of accepted applicants needed to complete quota on June 7th, 147.

The average number of men being sent from the state of Alabma does not daily exceed 16. The daily figures have been running all the way from 8 to 32. On the morning of June 9th there were four applicants from the whole state of Alabama in sight to be sent away to the Depot Training Station.

This is an alarming state of affairs has increased the salary of all enlistfident that when the state of Alabama realize the state of circumstances as exists in their own state, that corrective measures will be taken. The difficulty lies in a lack of information and an apathy regarding the situation. It is the intention to continue publishig the daily honor roll of men wha have voluntarily enlisted.

One of the recent acts of congress has increased thes alary of all enlisted men in the regular army of the United States proportionately according to their grade. Starting with the private, who formerly received $15 per month over and above all expenses, a private now receives $30 per month over and above all expenses and the higher grades of enlisted men receive a relative proportionate increase.

Nearly 100,000 men are immediately needed. The figures given above are those which the government is looking to Alabama to furnish. All patriotic societies in the state, all civil, municipal and state officers and all red blooded American citizens living in the state of Alabama are hereby called upon to assist the government in this its hour of need to obtain fighting men for the protection of the nation.

Captain H. J. McKinney, the regular army recruiting officer in charge of recruiting in the state of Alabama calls upon all Alabamians to cooperate with and assist all second, third and fourth class postmasters in the state as they are by law authorized to act as recruiting agents. They are able to furnish information, accept men for enlisting and furnish the immediate transportation to the nearest recruiting station. The need for men is imperative and vital.

CHILDRENS DAY AT OAK HILL

Editor Union-Banner:

I attended Childrens Day Services at Oak Hill Church last Sunday, and I must say that they were fine. The little ones who looked to be not more than four years old took the stage and spoke right out. They never made a bobble. This shows they were well trained and I think the Superintendent of the Sunday School, Mr. Northcutt, and Miss Gertrude Durbin, the trainer of the childrens class, deserve great credit for their work, and I wish to congratulate them on their splendid work in getting up their program and carrying it out so well. It was all simply fine.

Dinner was on the ground and it was bountiful, and the writer did himself justice at the table along with Mr. Durbin. Singing in the afternoon was fine.

The young people conducted themselves nicely, and Mr. Northcutt in his good nature made everyone enjoy the services. It was well done.

J. BICE.

USE OF HIGH DENOMINATION STAMPS WILL BE ENCOURAGED

The Third Assistant Postmaster General has isued the following:

As a measure of economy postmasters and post-office employees are directed to encourage the public to use stamps of the highest denominations suited to the amount of postage required on all mail. For example, a 2-cent stamp instead of two 1-cent stamps should be affixed to letters needing 2 cents postage, and a 10-cent stamp instead of five 2-cent should be used on parcels requiring ten cents postage.

Cooperation between post-office employees and the public in the sale and use of stamps of the higher denominations will effect a large saving to the government in the cost of producing, transporting, and canceling them, and will benefit the public in minimizing the number of stamps handled and affixed to mail. This benefit will be especially important to business concerns mailing large quantities of letters and parcels, and post masters are directed to bring the suggestion particularly to their notice.

ALL ARE URGED TO PARTICIPATE

Sixth Federal Bank District Has High Hopes On Selling United States Liberty Bonds

President Wilson, the cabinet and congress are keenly awaiting news of the subscription for Liberty bonds, which the government has issued to help in the war.

The sale has been arranged through the Federal Reserve Banks and according to their districts. Our district, the sixth, includes Georgia, Florida, Alabama and approximately half of Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana. Few sections of the United States have such varied resources. From the orange groves of Florida to the steel mills of Alabama, and from the cotton fields of Georgia to the rice plantations of Louisiana and the stock raising section of Tennessee almost every kind of crop and manufacturing industry can be found. It will be strange indeed if the people of this prosperous section are not among the largest purchasers of Liberty bonds.

The government will be very greatly disappointed unless this great section ranks at least third in the volume of its purchases of Liberty bonds. Bankers of Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans, Macon, Chattanooga and Jacksonville as well as in every small town in the district, agree that when the total figures are announced that the Sixth District will be found to have done its full part.

But every man, woman and child must participate. Bonds sell as low as $50 and as high as $10,000.

Make the war loan the chief subject of discussion in your home. Make sure that each member of your family sees his or her duty and opportunity clearly.

Make up your mind today. Don't let it be said that you withheld your help in time of your country's needs.

WADE'S WEEKLY LETTER

Stop Contracting Your Crop.

It has come to my attention that farmers in many sections of Alabama have contracted their crops for future delivery at stipulated prices far below the value of such products. Parties taking these contracts are speculators or agents of speculators who live and operate in cities outside of our state. It is purely speculation of the most unfair and damaging kind. These speculators generally play safe. They are always well posted as to the supply and demand at about the time of delivery and the price at which they will contract is about half as much as they expect to receive. Such methods are unfair because the speculator is wise to conditions while the producer has less opportunity of knowing. It is unfair to submit a speculative proposition as a means of relief to a man who is laboring under financial stringency. It is also not fair to the business men of the state to allow foreign speculators to invade and monopolize their rights of trade when they refrain from speculative contracting themselves with the hope of handling the products at harvest time on competetive trade, based upon supply and demand.

I know one case in Alabama where a farmer has just delivered the crop from of Irish potatoes at $1.25 per bushel while his neighbors sold potatoes on the open market the same day at $2.75 per bushel. This is a striking example of the future contract speculative plan and a true illustration of the experience of 95 per cent. of those who allow themselves to be gulled into making future contracts.

In this time of war a feeling has developed that excessive speculation will be overlooked and go unrestricted, and that is the psychological time to get rich. In this they are mistaken, for it is the duty of the federal trade commission to seize and prevent excessive and unfair speculation. It is very doubtful if delivery can be forced on future contracts where excessive speculation is in evidence. In all such cases where parties are subjected to such imposition, they should notify the federal trade commission at Washington, D. C. It is not always the best policy to rely upon legal restrictions to protect you from your folly but use your own common sense and quit being a "sucker." Conditions are such that no product of the farm needs to be contracted or guaranteed in order to secure the maximum price.

TRAVELS 40 MILES FOR MORE TANLAC

J. D. Hawkins Says His Wife Gained Fifteen Pounds on Three Bottles.

SUFFERED 20 YEARS

Wife's Improvement Has Been Wonderful—All Her Neighbors Talking About How Much Better She Looks.

"I'm taking a forty-mile trip to get more Tanlac," was the remarkable statement made by J. D. Hawkins, a well-known and prosperous farmer, in Jacobi's Pharmacy, Memphis, Tenn., recently.

"Yes, sir," he continued. "I live at Bartlett, Tenn., and I drove eight miles to Raleigh this morning to catch the trolley to Memphis, which is twelve miles more, so when I get home that will make forty miles I've traveled to get this Tanlac, and that's proof enough of what I think about it.

"I declare I never saw or heard of a medicine doing as much good as this Tanlac has done my wife. She has actually gained fifteen pounds on three bottles of it and besides it has relieved her of troubles that have been weakening her down for nearly twenty years. She suffered with indigestion and everything she would eat made gas and gave her severe pains in the stomach. She had no appetite at all and suffered with nervous headaches until she couldn't sleep at night. She was so tired all the time that she couldn't do any of her housework at all. I was just about to give up in despair, for we had tried everything we could get hold of, when I read about Tanlac and got a bottle for her.

"Well, sir, she has taken three bottles so far and her improvement has just been wonderful and that's the reason I am making this trip, because I don't want her to be without Tanlac. She can do all her own housework now and is relieved of the indigestion and has a good appetite. Her nerves are quiet and the headaches are all gone and she can sleep well at night. She is gaining in health and strength all the time and the neighbors are all talking about how much better she looks.

"I certainly do indorse Tanlac, for after what it has done for my wife, I believe it is the best medicine in the world."

There is a Tanlac dealer in your town.—Adv.

PAIN? NOT A BIT! LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

STEEL CORPORATION TO BUILD $11,000,000 PLANT IN BIRMINGHAM DISARICT.

GARY MAKES STATEMENT

Plans Are Being Worked Upon to Carry Out Program for New Steel Industries.

Birmingham.—Appropriation of eleven million dollars has been made by the Finance Committee of the United States Steel Corporation, according to formal announcement made by Judge E. H. Gary, Chairman of the Board of Directors, in conference with Birmingham newspaper men.

The money will be spent for additional plants to the Fairfield works of the Steel Corporation, under the direction of President Crawford, of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company.

The following statement was given out by Judge Elbert H. Gary, Chairman of the United States Steel Corporation:

The Finance Committee of the United States Steel Corporation, after full consideration, has decided to recommend to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company that it proceed promptly and vigorously, with the erection of additional works at Fairfield which are intended to furnish in normal times products for the markets naturally supplied from the Birmingham District, and in particular demand at present on account of the necessities of the government resulting from war conditions.

Summary of Crop Conditions.

Montgomery.—The Department of Agriculture has issued the following report on crop conditions in Alabama: The temperature for the week averaged slightly above the normal. Good rains occurred at scattered places in the northern and extreme east-central portions. Over much of the remainder of the State the week was rainless. The warm weather was generally favorable for the growth of all crops. Cotton improved slightly. The crop is late, probably two or three weeks; chopping is progressing. Corn improved, especially in the northern portion. In some of the more northern counties corn is looking fine, is in excellent condition and well cultivated. In the central and southern portions corn would be much improved by good rains. Fruit is scarce and generally in poor condition. Meadows and pastures improved where there was sufficient rain. Oats are poor; harvesting is becoming general. White potatoes are in good condition, as a rule; harvesting is progressing. Sweet potatoes need rain; transplanting is still in progress. Peanuts are not doing so well in some sections on account of dry weather. Meadows, pastures, truck and gardens need rain badly in some sections. Late reports show that considerable damage was done to fruits, fruit trees, and crops in general, in portions of Jackson, Madison, Lauderdale and Franklin Counties by severe local storms on the night of May 27th.

James T. High, Farm Demonstrator of Morgan County, reports, in part: "We are trying to create such demand on the part of the farmers of this county for a feed mill that the business men here will have to put in one. Should they fail to thus encourage the farmers in the growing of velvet beans and other feed crops, I fear that the interest in such crops will fall from the pitch to which it has been raised.

Bankers of State Hear McAdoo.

Birmingham.—Bankers and business men from all parts of Alabama were in Birmingham June 9 to attend the luncheon tendered Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo and W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board. Mr. McAdoo made a speech to a large crowd at a local theater concerning the liberty loan bonds. He is anxious that all persons who subscribe to Liberty bonds pay for them in installments. This method will prevent the withdrawal of large sums of money from circulation, and will enable the officials of the Treasury Department to carry out plans heretofore agreed upon.

SLACKERS MUST PAY THE PENALTY

PERIOD OF LENIENCY HAS ENDED SAYS PROVOST MARSHAL CROWDER.

ARREST THOSE EVADING DUTY

Violators, on Conviction, Will Be Given Year Sentence and Will Be Forced to Enlist.

Washington.—The period of leniency has ended for men between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, who failed to register for the war army on June 5.

Provost Marshal General Crowder sent to the governors of all the state a message asking them "to inaugurate a vigorous, aggressive and effective enforcement of the penal clause of the selective service aw against all who have by their failure to register brought themselves under those provisions."

The penalty for failure to register on June 5 is imprisonment for a year and enforced registration, but General Crowder immediately after Registration Day recommended that local boards provide further opportunity for delinquents. The department of justice notified United States attorneys to release those already arrested for failure to register, providing they have now registered.

General Crowder has nearly completed a draft of regulations to govern exemptions and exemption boards, and expects to lay it before Secretary Baker in a few days for approval. The general believes no class should be exempted as such, but that local boards should decide on the circumstances in each individual. He favors use of some device such as a jury wheel for drawing the names of those to be examined by the exemption boards. The regulations will be made public in detail after Secretary Baker and President Wilson approve them.

A few more states reported registration totals to the provost marshal general's office, but indicatfons were that all would not be completed for nearly a week.

Among states reporting so far Ohio stands first in the proportion of registration to the census estimate, with 113 per cent. Illinois has 1047, Wisconsin has 104.6 per cent, North Carolina 103 per cent, Iowa 101.3 per cent and Connecticut 100.9 per cent. Washington is the lowest state with 50.9 per cent.

Complete returns from 33 states have been received. They show a total registration of 6,358,388, compared to census allotments totaling 7,063,482.

In the 33 states reporting the whole registrations were 4,817,980, colored 830,586, aliens 482,439, and alien enemies 58,304. The possible exemptions indicated were 3,439,527.

SPIES AT WORK.

Daniels Says Secrets of Navy Have Been Revealed.

Washington.—Investigation by the Senate naval committee of accidents caused by defective ammunition on armed merchantmen was interrupted to await the outcome of a search by government agents for the writer of letters mailed from Detroit, Mich., to Senator Frelinghuysen revealing naval ordnance secrets.

Secretary Daniels, placing the letters before the committee, declared that either a spy or a traitor had been at work because the information disclosed could have been obtained nowhere except from the confidential files of the navy's ordnance bureau. He insisted that the writer should be found and be required to explain.

Second Food Bill Approved.

Washington.—The second administration food control bill, granting broad powers to the President, was agreed to by the House Agricultural Committee, by a vote of 12 to 3, and immediate report to the House was authorized. Chairman Lever expects it to pass with less than two weeks' debate. The first bill now pending is to stimulate production of foods; the second is to control distribution and price.

Indian Takes $640,000 of Bonds.

Washington.—Jackson Barnett, reputed to be the wealthiest Indian in the United States, subscribed $640,000 to liberty loan bonds through his guardian, Carl J. O'Hornett of Henryetta, Okla. Secretary Lane's ruling that Barnett, who is a ward of the government, might do this opens the way to many Indian subscribtions.

Naval Secrets Reaching Enemy.

Washington.—Convinced that valuable naval information is reaching the enemy, Secretary Daniels issued an order forbidding all persons in the naval service from discussing, except officially, even among themselves or with members of their families, "any question relating to the disposition, movements or proposed movements of naval or military forces." The department acted only after officers of the intelligence division had reported that information had leaked through somehow to Germany.

Advised to Organize Guard.

Governor Henderson has advised all Sheriffs to appoint special deputies as home guards. In a letter addressed to each Sheriff the Governor said:

"I have had letters from a number of counties in regard to the organization of home defense guards. These bodies appointed by the Sheriff could be so named and known as 'The Home Defense Guard.' I would suggest that you prepare your office for upholding the law, which you have been charged with doing, and to meet any contingency that may arise by the appointment of such a body. When you have taken this action, this office would like to be advised."

In his letter the Governor says that disorder likely to arise will demand the presence of an organized force to uphold the law, that the military force is now beyond the control of the Governor and can only be obtained in cases of great emergency and after considerable delay. But even this force will not be available when the National Guard is withdrawn from the State.

Interstate Liquor Shipments Legal.

The State Supreme Court has opened the doors of Alabama for interstate shipments of liquor by automobile or other vehicle not a common carrier, according to a decision rendered by that body. In the case of Frank Moragne vs. State of Alabama, the Supreme Court awarded the certiorari asked by Moragne, judgment was reversed and the cause remanded. Judge Gardner dissented.

The case was appealed from the Jefferson County Criminal Court. Moragne was convicted of violating the prohibition law by having in his possession a large quantity of liquor. His defense was that he was in possession of the goods solely as an interstate carrier, en route from Georgia to Florida, and intended delivery of the liquor in another State. He was carrying the liquor in an automobile when arrested.

County Debts Limited.

Counties can go into debt to the extent of only 3 1-2 per cent of the total assessed valuation of 60 per cent of the market value of property under a decision of the supreme court in the case of the commissioners' court of Elmore county vs. T. L. Austin, appealed from the Elmore circuit court. The county commissioners contended that the county could be indebted to the amount of 3 1-2 per cent of the market value of the property. Austin asked for an injunction preventing the court from exceeding the amount.

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Enhaut, Pa.—"I was all run down and weak inwardly. I had female troubles and nervous feelings and my head bothered me. I would often have crying spells and feel as if I was not safe. If I heard anyone coming I would run and lock the door so they would not see me. I tried several doctors and they did not help me so I said to my mother 'I guess I will have to die as there is no help for me.' She got me one of your little books and my husband said I should try one bottle. I stopped the doctor's medicine and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It soon made a change in me and now I am strong and do all my work."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS BAUGHMAN, Box 86, Enhaut, Pa.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out and drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

Elections in Land of Nippon.

The Japanese people are satisfied with the result of the election of April 20, but agitation regarding expense attending a canvass for a seat in parliament is renewed. The same argument is heard as those after the last general election, according to East and West. The Chugai Shoyo estimates the cost of 600 candidates at not less than $2,640,000! This is more than representatives in the United States expend, but senators have been known to pay half a million for seats in that body. The Chugai says the government spent $200,000 for supervising the election, which, to Americans, will appear moderate. This sum includes "stumping trips" through the country by cabinet ministers; members of the opposition paid their own expenses. The editor regrets that so many men entitled to vote fail to exercise their high privilege. Repeated dissolution of the diet not only causes political disturbances, he argues, but imposes heavy financial loss upon the nation and upon individuals.

GAME FISHING by DIXIE CARROLL

LITTLE PAN-FISH FUN.

My Dear Buck:

There's a great big army of little fish that don't seem to get the proper credit for all the fun and pleasure they have given fishermen. Of course, old man, a great big chunk of this fun happened way back in the knee-pants' stage of most fellow's fishing days, but at that, when the real game fellows are off the feed and prospects appear good for an empty stringer, and it looks like bacon and flapjacks for the evening meal, just toss out a line and give the little fellows a nibble at your bait. These little old nibblers include in their ranks the crappie, rock bass, blue gill, sunfish and yellow or striped perch.

As a pan fish you can't beat 'em. Browned to a turn in plenty of bacon grease or broiled over the open campfire they are a dish that would make even J. D. forget his stomach, and after an hour on the trail or a particularly hard portage, you thank your lucky stars when the feed bag has a generous portion of "little fellers" done to a turn.

Get 'Em Any Old Time.

Of course, they don't put up a scream of a fight like their cousins the basses, but they are accommodating little cusses and bite any time in the day and most any time in the season, especially when at a time the real game fellows have a tendency to overlook a good thing in the shape of bait or lure. Although they only make a short little fight, there's a way of fishing for them that will give you quite a bit of fun and please even the sure-enough fisherman who is seemingly shocked when you even mention pan fish to him. Of course, most of that disdain stuff is merely bull on the part of the fellow that hops up in the clouds when you mention little pannies.

Light Fly Rod Best.

Here is the tackle that put pep in the pan-fish game. Get the lightest, whippiest steel fly rod you can find, about ten feet in length; use an ordinary soft-braided silk casting line and a number eight or ten hook, and do a little still fishing. With this rigging you will be pleasantly surprised at the sport in landing a fair-sized panner. They start out with quite a showy fight, but it don't last long. However, with this tackle, old scout, they'll play better and show more spunk than with the ordinary casting rod, and take it as a side tip you won't land everyone you hook at that.

The crappie is found in most ponds, lagoons, and lakes, as well as the more sluggish streams, and they like the quiet waters. They bite best in the early spring, in June and the fall, though you get them most any time. For a still-fishing bait they like grasshoppers, worms or live minnows, and you can catch them trolling with minnow or very small spoonhook, while at times they will rise to the trout fly.

The rock bass prefers the clear, cool water, and is not only found in nearly every lake, pond and river, but also in the little creeks and streams. In the lakes you will find him where the reeds and underwater grasses grow and in the streams he dotes on the deep holes among the rocks and bowlders or around stumps, brush or windfalls. Most any kind of bait suits him, but small minnows, angleworms and white wood-grubs make him swim around and take notice. They put up quite a stagger at fighting when first hooked, and make a final effort when brought up to the boat. A full red ibis or white miller fly often tempts them, and very small frogs or minnows fish interest the larger ones.

Striped Perch Good Biter.

The yellow or striped perch is probably the best little biter in the whole outfit, and although he does not as a rule fight like a heavyweight, if you get a two-pounder on light fly tackle you know there is a fish on the far end of the line. Go after him in about thirty to forty feet of water and you get the big ones. With any sort of bait you can land him in good numbers most any time, and even through the ice in winter he is an accommodating fellow. The perch is a great little favorite with the women and children who don't go after the gamer fellows, and many pleasant days can be spent for this popular little panner. A bait that looks good to a bluegill tickles the fancy of the perch, and any old kind of a hook and line is tackle enough to get him, although the real sport is to be had with the long, light steel fly rod.

Taken as a whole, the pan fish are a gentlemanly little bunch of good fellows, always eager to take a nibble and save a fisherman from ringing up a "goose egg" for the day's fishing, and to his good, clean method of living we can thank him for his fine flavor, and crown him king of fresh water fish food.

3 SETS OF TWINS UPSET A FAMILY

Man Tells Court Why He Refuses to Pay $3 and Court Agrees With Him.

New York.—If you were the father of three sets of twins, and kept them going, and your wife wouldn't live with you and the twins—would you send your wife money, court or no courts?

Most probably not. So decided Jacob Colan. And the court of domestic relations, despite affronted dignity and contempt of its order, agreed with his view.

It was all hashed out in court when Mrs. Colan complained Colan hadn't been paying her the $3 a week he had been ordered to remit in a previous proceeding. In the five years during which Mr. and Mrs. Colan have been married they have been blessed by three sets of twins.

She Wanted Fights, and She Won Them All.

Perhaps the twins were to blame. Anyway, Mr. and Mrs. Colan had many spats and finally decided to be outs for good.

Some months ago the courts decided that Mr. Colan was to send $3 a week to his wife and some weeks ago Mr. Colan decided that he would not. So all hands to the center of the court.

"Why," asked the court, "do you fail to pay $3 as directed?"

"Because," said Mr. Colan, "when I think of her troubles I have to laugh. She wanted me and she got me; she wanted a home and she got it; she wanted fights and she won them all; she wanted to leave me and she did; she wanted her liberty and she got it; she wanted $3 a week and got it, and she didn't want the three sets of twins and I've got them. Take it from me, your honor, a man with three sets of twins and no home regards $3 as a bankroll."

And the court thought likewise.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 17

THE RISEN LORD.

LESSON TEXT—John 20:2-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.—I Cor. 15:20.

The death of Christ made a deep impression upon the beholders (Luke 23:48, 49). Joseph, who seems to have been a secret disciple, obtained the body, and gave it burial (Mark 15: 42-47). In Mark's record we have the story of the discovery of the resurrection by the women, and Matthew tells us how his enemies dealt with that fact. Be sure to use a good harmony of the four gospels in presenting all of these lessons, else some important detail will be overlooked.

I. Mary's Visit to the Tomb (vv.1-10). The Sabbath ended at sundown, and the shops were then open, and Mary Magdalene was able to purchase spices with which to anoint the dead body of Jesus. There is strong probability that the women paid a visit to the tomb late on Saturday (Matt. 28:1, R. V.). Starting the next morning, "while it was yet dark" (v. 1), they came to the tomb to perform this last service of love. Jesus had no need of such service (Matt. 16:27; 20: 19), but the women were rewarded by receiving the first glimpse of the risen Lord. There were five appearances on this first day of the week: (1) to Mary Magdalene, (2) to the "other women," (3) to Peter; (4) to those on the way to Emmaus, and (5) to the ten disciples, Thomas being absent.

None of these seemed to expect Jesus to be risen, for they had each failed to listen to and ponder his words. The extent and genuineness of the affection of the women is found in that they went to serve Jesus when apparently all hope had failed (I Cor. 13:8, R. V.). As soon as Mary saw the stone rolled away, she concluded that the tomb had been rifled, and hastened to report to the disciples (v. 2). This report of the women to the disciples was considered "as idle tales" (Luke 24:11). With intense eagerness Peter and John ran to the tomb thus reported as being robbed. John, the younger, reached the tomb first, but in reverence did not enter, only stooping to look in (vv. 4, 5). Peter, the impetuous one, rushes inside, and sees the linen clothes lying, and the napkin that had been about the head carefully folded and lying in a place by itself (v. 7). This apparently insignificant detail is one which is really significant, inasmuch as it shows that the tomb had not been rifled, leaving disorder behind. Instead of excitedly snatching the napkin from his face, and hurling it whither it might fall, he had quietly taken it off, and in an orderly way laid it aside. It is in such minute details as this that we see the greatest evidence of the veracity of this record.

II. Mary Weeping (vv. 11-15). The disciples returned to their own homes, and doubtless to the other disciples (v. 10), but the loving Mary remained behind in this place made sacred as having housed the body of the Lord. It is natural for us to linger in silent meditation in places of our greatest revelation or of our deepest soul experience. Jesus had told his disciples over and over again that he should rise again, and it seems strange that his enemies should have remembered it (Matt. 27:63) and his friends not.

III. Mary Worshiping (vv. 16-18). There must have been an inflection in the voice of Jesus, for, upon the utterance of that one word, "Mary," she recognized her risen Lord. Joyfully she exclaimed, "Rabboni," that is to say, "Master" (v. 16), and would have poured out her love and worship at his feet. Jesus, however, does not suffer her to hold him fast. Mary must leave him, and tell the others. Literally, he says, "Do not lay hold of me but go and make known the glad truth that I am risen again." The risen Lord must return to "My Father" and "My God," whereas the one who would gladly have remained at his feet must go to the brethren, and make known the facts of the fulfillment of prophecy and the resurrection of our Lord.

The bribed soldiers spread abroad the tale that the disciples had stolen his body. The later lives of these disciples, their heroism and martyrdom, are evidence of the absurdity of any such act on their part.

The resurrection of Jesus is a vindication of his claim to being the Son of God. We do well to emphasize his birth, and to dwell much upon his death, yet both of these have no essential value apart from his resurrection.

CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK, UGH! IT'S MERCURY AND SALIVATES

Straighten Up! Don't Lose a Day's Work! Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels With "Dodson's Liver Tone."

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. Take a dose of the vile, dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful tonight and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.—Adv.

Then Silence.

They were dancing merrily, this young man and the young woman, and were talking of nothing at all, when suddenly the girl asked:

"Have you enlisted?"

"No," answered the youth.

"Haven't you joined the Officers' Reserve corps?"

"No, not yet. I haven't thought much about that sort of thing."

"Haven't you done anything about the war?"

"No," the youth replied.

Whereupon the girl stopped dancing.

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan, and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It should naturally help to whiten, soften, freshen and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is truly marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands. Adv.

Nerves All On Edge?

Just as nerve wear is a case of kidney weakness, so is kidney trouble a cause of nervousness. Anyone who has backache, nervousness, "blues," headaches, dizzy spells, urinary ills and a tired, worn feeling, would do well to try Doan's Kidney Pills. This safe, reliable remedy is recommended by thousands who have had relief from just such troubles.

An Alabama Case

Mrs. O. W. Harmon, 1905 Walnut Ave., Anniston, Ala., says: "For many years my back pained me and I could hardly do my housework. Mornings, I felt stiff, lame and all tired out. My body was badly swollen and my kidneys acted irregularly. Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up in good shape and I have had little kidney trouble since."

Two good resolutions: Buy a Liberty Bond now, and vote for protection candidates at the next Congressional and Senatorial election in Novehber, 1918.

The Democratic administration had to come to a protective tariff. It is the only system for getting the money without burdening the people. —Springfield (Mo.) Republican.

Just think of a Tariff law framed now because "we need the money." We have needed it for four years, but a democratic congress has preferred to take from the American people rather than the foreigners.—Ducktown (Tenn.) Republican.

France has placed a maximum price on butter, eggs, and cheese. In this country the dealers are showing their ability to put a maximum price on everything without assistance from the government.—Exchange

WHY NOT!

For Secretary of War: Theodore Roosevelt, a man of action. Why not? Lincoln made a war democrat secretary of war. "The fine vigor and enthusiasm" of Colonel Roosevelt, of which President Wilson has written, is needed in the conduct of our military operations. Vigorous direction may save millions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of lives.—National Republican.

Before Congress goes home it is probable that every member who wishes to reduce the cost of living will favor duties on foreign products rather than extra taxes on our own people. This at least has been gained. Not one voter in the Union believes that reducing the tariff reduced the cost of living. Mr. Underwood in 1913 said that we would get the lower prices in two years, but the buyers of 1915 did not get them.—Camden (N. J.) Post-Telegram.

AN UNBALANCED COMMITTEE

On the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, the Democrats have thirteen members and the Republicans ten. Among the thirteen Democratic members there are twelve lawyers and one producer of crude oil and natural gas—not a manufacturer in the bunch. Among the ten Republicans there are five lawyers, three manufacturers and two men engaged in other business enterprises.—American Economist.

THE EMBATTLED AMERICAN FARMER OF THE YEAR 1917.

Times change. In the Revolutionary war it was the "embattled farmers" who fired the shot heard round the world.

Today the American farmer is again doing something that will be heard round the world, but in a different way.

The world is waiting on the American farmer for its food. Its hope is in him. It wishes him good weather and abundant crops, and it will pay him well.

The farmer will help win battles that he will never see. For our boys at the front will be well fed and courageous, thanks to his industry and patriotism.

Nor is the farmer's part in this world war—in this greatest catastrophe history has ever had to record—limited to producing food. He has his part to play before crops are ready for harvest. For right now, the nation needs the farmer's support in a different way. It needs his co-operation on Liberty bonds.

These bonds are issued to equip our soldier boys with everything they will need for their safety, comfort and fighting strength. The government will pay every bond buyer 3½ per cent interest, free from all taxes, and will return to him the entire principal. Liberty bonds are a safe, sure, profitable investment.

It is the hope of President Wilson that not a single farmer in the country will be seen without a Liberty bond button in his buttonhole.

If a woman ever does get into the cabinet the bet is that she won't be one of the kind who would want to put scaloped paper in the shelves.

ONE-MAN GOVERNMENT

Those who are questioning the president's purpose to run things himself during the war are recalling his picture of the presidency drawn when he was a college professor:

"The President is also the political leader of the nation, or has it in his choice to be, The nation as a whole has chosen him and is conscious that it has no other political spokesman. Let him once win the admiration and confidence of the country and no other single force can withstand him, no combination of forces will easily overpower him. . . If he rightly interpret the national thought, and boldly insist upon it, he is irresistable, and the country never feels the zest of action so much as when its president is of so much insight and caliber. Its instinct is for unified action, and it craves a single leader. It is for this reason that it will often prefer to choose a man rather than a party. A president whom it trusts cannot only lead it, but form it to his own views."

It is plain that Wilson as president is trying to be just what Wilson as writer said he ought to be, there is artistic unity in the Wilson career. Nor is it at all sure that as president he is not achieving his ends by "rightly interpreting" the national thought.

But there is a difference between political leadership and political dictation, between converting the public to a point of view and cramming the point of view down their throats, and neither in his writing years nor in his performance now has the president reassured the people at that point.

No one can read the paragraphs quoted from his booklet on the presidency and not feel that the argument can be pushed too far, that a dangerous personal leadership can be gained. In these paragraphs he has not sufficiently safeguarded against what men like Patrick Henry believed was the real weakness of our federal scheme.

In the same way, nobody can watch the president and not feel that in practice, as in theory, he stands for the personal equation in government altogether too much, that he is fixing upon the country a one-man power that, however wisely exercised in this time of stress, is bound to cause us trouble if his successors are of his type.

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wilson have carried personal leadership in the presidential office to a dangerous line. However irritated we may become over the delays of congress and the want of congressional leadership, it is well to remember that the only break we have on arbitrary control is the brake congress can set.

The president believes in a one-man government and is trying to set up a one-man government. It is well to remember, before we become too far committed that no matter how wisly men have used great power for a time, they have always, if trusted too far, abused their trust in the end. One-man government has always been arbitrary government and bad government, and there have been no exceptions.—Desmoines Register.

When you buy United States Liberty Bonds remember that you are buying the bonds of the richest nation on earth, the one most abundantly blessed by nature and by man, the producer in the greatest quantity of 14 commodities that the world demands. Remember, also, that no other country in the world leads in more than three, and that Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria lead in none.

Nobody is entitled to any special credit for believing in the country that is so tremendously richer than any other nation. The man who doesn't believe in the nature-blessed U. S. A. is to be pitied.

If you have not yet bought your United States Liberty Bonds, see your banker or broker today.

Don't let your boy go to school without a United States Liberty Bond button on his breast. Let him be proud of his country—and of his father.

Money makes the war go. Have you bought your bond?

Don't Be Afraid of Bonds; They're Like Gold Coin

Don't get scared when anybody says "bonds." One reason why most people know very little about bonds is that usually they cost around $1,000 each, and you and I don't buy $1,000 things every day. But our United States is now issuing United States Liberty Bonds that cost as low as $50, and it's high time now to learn that a bond is the safest investment on earth. On the United States Liberty Bond you get 3½ per cent interest, payable every June 15 and Dec. 15, and also you get your entire principal back.

United States Liberty Bonds are certain to become as numerous in the United States as gold pieces. They will have a wide and ready sale. Any time you need money, you can take your bond to the bank and get it. There isn't a real estate dealer anywhere, or an automobile maker, or a grocer who wouldn't be just as glad to take a United States Liberty Bond as he would to receive gold coin.

If you haven't already ordered your United States Liberty Bonds, see your banker or your broker today.

Bankers Will Help You Buy U. S. Liberty Bonds

Patriotic bankers and brokers the nation over are making it easy for everybody to buy United States Liberty War Bonds. The fact that you have not an abundance of ready money need not prevent your helping your government by ordering United States Liberty bonds. See your banker or broker today and ask him about easy terms.

The U. S. A. can make two and one-half cannon for every one the Kaiser builds. Help build those cannon by buying United States Liberty Bonds. See your banker or your broker today.

President Wilson has bought United States Liberty Bonds. Have you?

Your Governor has bought United States Liberty Bonds. Have you

Just any time you may choose to come around

You may be assured that you will always find the things you want, and at prices that will save you the most money. Don't buy till you come to see.

Every pound goes much farther

A POUND of old style hulls contains about ¾ pound of real roughage and about ¼ pound of lint. After being eaten, the old style hulls swell to twice the weight, or 1½ pounds. A pound of

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

also doubles after being eaten but as they are 100 per cent roughage, the original pound becomes 2 pounds—not 1½ pounds.

Therefore, a pound of Buckeye Hulls goes a third again as far as a pound of old style hulls. In other words, you only have to feed ¾ pound of Buckeye Hulls to give the same food value as a full pound of old style hulls.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls cost much less per ton than old style hulls.
Buckeye Hulls allow better assimilation of other food.
No trash or dust.
Sacked—easy to handle.
They mix well with other forage.
They take less space in the barn.

Mr. Ben Faulk, Dothan, Ala., prefers Buckeye Hulls to old style hulls because cows like them as well, they are cheaper, they agree with the cows, and they go farther, one sack lasting as long as two sacks of the old style.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, or fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

CLANTON, ALA.

TO ALL CANNING AND POULTRY CLUB MEMBERS OF CHILTON CO.

Remember June 27, Wednesday, during the Short Course at the High School. You are invited by the people of Clanton and urged by your agent to be present that day.

Demonstration will be given in canning fruits and vegetables in tin and glass, also in preserving and pickling. To learn to prevent all waste of food stuffs is our patriotic duty. Begin now to make arrangements to come, that you may avail yourself of this opportunity to help your country feed itself this winter. Go back to your homes and help your neighbors that are not members.

HOW TO DOUBLE THE RETURNS FROM EACH ACRE IN CORN

During the past ten years the average acre of corn in the South has yielded, on an average, 15 bushels. We propose here to show that it is possible this year to exactly double the returns from each acre of corn. To do this three things must be done:

1. Cultivate Shallow and Often. Drouth at a critical period often is responsible for heavy decreases in corn yields. Droughts, of course, are beyond our power to prevent, but cultivation of the right kind may largely offset their evil effects. When we destroy grass and weeds by cultivation the moisture and plant food they would have taken of course go to the corn crop. Let us, then, see to it that these robbers are never allowed to grow in our corn fields. Good cultivation also saves moisture for the corn crop by preventing loss by evaporation. Every farmer should aim to have a dust blanket or dust mulch maintained in every corn field. This is step No. 1, and should, if generally practiced, raise the average yield not less than 5 bushels per acre.

2. Top-Dress with nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia. We think there is no possible doubt that the greatest plant food need of corn, at least in the South is nitrogen. Of course, the best way to get this nitrogen is from the air through legume crops, but right now we have many millions of acres that are sorely in need of nitrogen, and there is no time to wait for the legumes. The corn crop needs it and needs it immediately. To supply this immediate need, nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia at the rate of 60, 80 or 100 pounds per acre should be used. This is step No. 2, and should, on millions of acres of our thin lands, raise the corn yields another five bushels per acre.

3. Plant peas, beans or peanuts with all corn. Just as nowadays the farmer who fails to get a second crop after his small grain is doing poor work, so the farmer who fails to grow a legume crop with his corn is falling short of his opportunities for increasing the feed and plant food supply. Using any one of the three crops named will certainly result in an increase from the land that will be worth at least five bushels of corn, and probably ten or fifteen. This is step No. 3.

Are you going to do these things that will double the return from your land, or are you going to be content with the usual fifteen bushels?—Progressive Farmer.

You can wash Mellotone walls

You will not need to re-decorate every year if you tint your walls with

Lowe Brothers High Standard Mellotone

Simply wash the walls with water and a good oil soap, and they look bright as new.

MELLOTONE is more beautiful than wall paper—and far more durable. It is not easily scratched or marred. The rich delicate colors will lighten and brighten your whole house. The colors do not fade.

HOW SHALL WE PAY FOR THE WAR?

A Constructive Criticism on the House Revenue Bill.

LOANS BETTER THAN TAXES

Five Reasons Why Excessive Taxes at the Outset of War Are Disadvantageous—Great Britain Example Worthy of Emulation—How the Taxes Should Be Apportioned.

By EDWIN R. A. SELIGMAN,
McVickar Professor of Political Economy, Columbia University.

On May 23, 1917, the House of Representatives passed an act "to provide revenue to defray war expenses and for other purposes." In the original bill as presented by the Committee of Ways and Means, the additional revenue to be derived was estimated at $1,810,420,000. The amendment to the income tax, which was tacked on to the bill during the discussion in the House, was expected to yield another $40,000,000 or $50,000,000.

In discussing the House bill, two problems arise:

I. How much should be raised by taxation?

II. In what manner should this sum be raised?

I. How Much Should Be Raised by Taxation?

How was the figure of $1,800,000,000 arrived at? The answer is simple. When the Secretary of the Treasury came to estimate the additional war expenses for the year 1917-18, he calculated that they would amount to some $6,600,000,000, of which $3,000,000,000 was to be allotted to the allies, and $3,600,000,000 was to be utilized for the domestic purposes. Thinking that it would be a fair proposition to divide this latter sum between loans and taxes, he concluded that the amount to be raised by taxes was $1,800,000,000.

There are two extreme theories, each of which may be dismissed with scant courtesy. The one is that all war expenditures should be defrayed by loans, and the other is that all war expenditures should be defrayed by taxes. Each theory is untenable.

It is indeed true that the burdens of the war should be borne by the present rather than the future generation; but this does not mean that they should be borne by this year's taxation.

Meeting all war expenses by taxation makes the taxpayers in one or two years bear the burden of benefits that ought to be distributed at least over a decade within the same generation.

In the second place, when expenditures approach the gigantic sums of present-day warfare, the tax-only policy would require more than the total surplus of social income. Were this absolutely necessary, the ensuing havoc in the economic life of the community would have to be endured. But where the disasters are so great and at the same time so unnecessary, the tax-only policy may be declared impracticable.

Secretary McAdoo had the right instinct and highly commendable courage in deciding that a substantial portion, at least, of the revenues should be derived from taxation. But when he hit upon the plan of 50-50 per cent., that is, of raising one-half of all domestic war expenditures by taxes, the question arises whether he did not go too far.

The relative proportion of loans to taxes is after all a purely business proposition. Not to rely to a large extent on loans at the outset of a war is a mistake.

Disadvantages of Excessive Taxes.

The disadvantages of excessive taxes at the outset of the war are as follows:

1. Excessive taxes on consumption will cause popular resentment.

2. Excessive taxes on industry will disarrange business, damp enthusiasm and restrict the spirit of enterprise at the very time when the opposite is needed.

3. Excessive taxes on incomes will deplete the surplus available for investments and interfere with the placing of the enormous loans which will be necessary in any event.

4. Excessive taxes on wealth will cause a serious diminution of the incomes which are at present largely drawn upon for the support of educational and philanthropic enterprises. Moreover, these sources of support would be dried up precisely at the time when the need would be greatest.

5. Excessive taxation at the outset of the war will reduce the elasticity available for the increasing demands that are soon to come.

Great Britain's Policy.

Take Great Britain as an example. During the first year of the war she increased taxes only slightly, in order to keep industries going at top notch. During the second year she raised by new taxes only 9 per cent. of her war expenditures. During the third year she levied by additional taxes (over and above the pre-war level) only slightly more than 17 per cent. of her war expenses.

If we should attempt to do as much in the first year of the war as Great Britain did in the third year it would suffice to raise by taxation $1,250,000,000. If, in order to be absolutely on the safe side, it seemed advisable to increase the sum to $1,500,000,000, this should, in our opinion, be the maximum.

In considering the apportionment of the extraordinary burden of taxes in war times certain scientific principles are definitely established:

How Taxes Should Be Apportioned.

(1) The burden of taxes must be spread as far as possible over the whole community so as to cause each individual to share in the sacrifices according to his ability to pay and according to his share in the Government.

(2) Taxes on consumption, which are necessarily borne by the community at large, should be imposed as far as possible on articles of quasi-luxury rather than on those of necessity.

(3) Excises should be imposed as far as possible upon commodities in the hands of the final consumer rather than upon the articles which serve primarily as raw material for further production.

(4) Taxes upon business should be imposed as far as possible upon net earnings rather than upon gross receipts or capital invested.

(5) Taxes upon income which will necessarily be severe should be both differentiated and graduated. That is, there should be a distinction between earned and unearned incomes and there should be a higher rate upon the larger incomes. It is essential, however, not to make the income rate so excessive as to lead to evasion, administrative difficulties, or to the more fundamental objections which have been urged above.

(6) The excess profits which are due to the war constitute the most obvious and reasonable source of revenue during war times. But the principle upon which these war-profit taxes are laid must be equitable in theory and easily calculable in practice.

The Proposed Income Tax.

The additional income tax as passed by the House runs up to a rate of 60 per cent. This is a sum unheard of in the history of civilized society. It must be remembered that it was only after the first year of the war that Great Britain increased her income tax to the maximum of 34 per cent., and that even now in the fourth year of the war the income tax does not exceed 42½ per cent.

It could easily be shown that a tax with rates on moderate incomes substantially less than in Great Britain, and on the larger incomes about as high, would yield only slightly less than the $532,000,000 originally estimated in the House bill.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will reduce the total rate on the highest incomes to 34 per cent, or at most to 40 per cent, and that at the same time it will reduce the rate on the smaller incomes derived from personal or professional earnings.

If the war continues we shall have to depend more and more upon the income tax. By imposing excessive rates now we are not only endangering the future, but are inviting all manner of difficulties which even Great Britain has been able to escape.

Conclusion.

The House bill contains other fundamental defects which may be summed up as follows:

(1) It pursues an erroneous principle in imposing retroactive taxes.

(2) It selects an unjust and unworkable criterion for the excess-profits tax.

(3) It proceeds to an unheard-of height in the income tax.

(4) It imposes unwarranted burdens upon the consumption of the community.

(5) It is calculated to throw business into confusion by levying taxes on gross receipts instead of upon commodities.

(6) It fails to make a proper use of stamp taxes.

(7) It follows an unscientific system in its flat rate on imports.

(8) It includes a multiplicity of petty and unlucrative taxes, the vexatiousness of which is out of all proportion to the revenue they produce.

* * * * * * *

The fundamental lines on which the House bill should be modified are summed up herewith:

(1) The amount of new taxation should be limited to $1,250,000,000—or at the outset to $1,500,000,000. To do more than this would be as unwise as it is unnecessary. To do even this would be to do more than has ever been done by any civilized Government in time of stress.

(2) The excess-profits tax based upon a sound system ought to yield about $500,000,000.

(3) The income-tax schedule ought to be revised with a lowering of the rates on earned incomes below $10,000, and with an analogous lowering of the rates on the higher incomes, so as not to exceed 34 per cent. A careful calculation shows that an income tax of this kind would yield some $450,000,000 additional.

(4) The tax on whisky and tobacco ought to remain approximately as it is, with a yield of about $230,000,000.

These three taxes, together with the stamp tax at even the low rate of the House bill, and with an improved automobile tax, will yield over $1,250,000,000, which is the amount of money thought desirable.

The above program would be in harmony with an approved scientific system. It will do away with almost all of the complaints that are being urged against the present. It will refrain from taxing the consumption of the poor.

It will throw a far heavier burden upon the rich, but will not go to the extremes of confiscation. It will obviate interference with business and will keep unimpaired the social productivity of the community.

It will establish a just balance between loans and taxes and will not succumb to the danger of approaching either the tax-only policy or the loan-only policy. Above all, it will keep an undisturbed elastic margin, which must be more and more heavily drawn upon as the war proceeds.

WHY INDIVIDUALISM IS AS DEAD AS A SMELT

George W. Perkins, Chairman of the New York City Committee on Food Supply, Finds That Science and Invention Are Forcing Revolutionary Changes in the World's Industrial Relations, Whether We Like It or Not.

AT A RECENT public hearing on certain proposed food legislation which Mr. Perkins favored and which recognized the necessity of co-operation some one remarked that the legislation was a violation of the principle of individualism.

Mr. Perkins retorted, "Individualism is as dead as a smelt."

Mr. Perkins' reasons for his belief are outlined in the following article:—

By GEORGE W. PERKINS,

Chairman of Mayor Mitchel's Food Supply Committee.

One of the greatest stumbling blocks to progress is the human inclination to follow precedent and old methods too closely. We find it difficult to strike out along entirely new lines.

Thomas Jefferson, in his old age wrote a letter in which he said:—

Some men ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human, and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I knew that age [of the Revolution] well. I belonged to it and labored with it. It deserved well of its country. It was very like the present, but without the experience of the present; and forty years of experience is worth a century of book reading; and this they would say themselves were they to arise from the dead.

Great Changes Taking Place Rapidly.

The changes that occurred from the close of the Revolutionary War to Jefferson's old age made a deep impression on his mind; yet as we look back at them from this distance they seem infinitesimal when compared with the changes that have taken place in the world the last quarter of a century and the tremendous changes taking place now.

George Washington was a representative of the best type of American a century and a half ago. He was a scholar, a soldier and a statesman, yet he did not know as much about science as a young schoolboy of to-day.

Thomas A. Edison typifies the scientist of our time, but the gap between the man of the Edison type and Washington is probably greater than the gap between Washington and the man whose bones were recently discovered near Trenton, N. J., said to have lived 125,000 years ago.

The advances in science, intercommunication and in universal education—these three great factors account for the stupendous progress this country has made in the last twenty-five years.

They have swept away old precedents, old customs, and they will eventually sweep away many of the laws now on our statute books.

The man of to-day who does not fully comprehend all this is doomed to be somewhat of a failure, while the man who does comprehend it will have taken a long stride toward success.

It is not many years since I was a lad, and yet at that time there was no such thing as a telephone. The telegraph was in very meagre use; fast express trains did not exist. It took several weeks to cross the ocean, and the only flying machine we knew about was the much derided one possessed by Darius Green.

Entering a New World.

When Abraham Lincoln was President it took four days or more for a letter to travel from his home in Illinois to New York. It took him several days to go from his home to Washington to be inaugurated. And yet only a few weeks ago a young woman, unaided and alone, travelled in a flying machine from Chicago to New York in eight hours and fifty minutes.

Buying Liberty Bonds Is Not An Act of Charity

When you buy United States Liberty War Bonds you are not giving away anything. Your act of purchasing is not an act of charity. Whatever money you have you possess because you have lived and worked in the glorious United States. Today the United States needs ready money to help win the war, to provide food, clothing and transportation for our soldier boys. So our government says to you: "Loan us $50 or $100, or whatever amount you like, and we will pay you 3½ per cent annual interest (payments every June 15 and Dec. 15), and in addition to that we will pay you back the entire amount you lent us. Also, if the interest rate on our bonds goes up, we will advance your interest to the highest rate."

"That's a fair, square proposition. You can't lose. The United States helped you get what you have, and it is both patriotism and good business on your part to loan the government some of your money now. Order United States Liberty Bonds from your banker or your broker. Do it today.

U. S. Liberty Bond Button Is Your Badge of Honor

Every man, woman and child who buys a Liberty bond will be given a government button to wear. This badge of honor will be a sign to the world that its wearer believes in the United States, in freedom, in manhood, in righteousness, and has shown his faith by his works. Many of us are not able to fight, but there is hardly any one who cannot buy at least a $50 Liberty bond. Remember, too, that this $50 is not a gift; it is a safe and sound investment, free from taxation, paying interest and repaying the principal in full. You can't lose.

If you do not buy, both you and your country will thereby be losers. Don't be a millstone around your country's neck. Order at least one Liberty bond today.

How about mother? Wouldn't she be proud if you were to bring home a United States Liberty Bond in her name?

BE FIRST TO WEAR A BUTTON.

Be the first to wear a button.

Don't delay until your friends and neighbors question your patriotism.

Every buyer of Liberty bonds, issued to support the war, will receive from the United States government a button to be worn at all times and places. This button shows that you have answered your nation's first call. It tells where you stand. It speaks louder than anything you can say. Place your order for Liberty bonds today and be the first to wear a button.

ADJOURNMENT UNITED STATES SENATE HONOR TO VETERANS

MR. BANKHEAD: "Mr. President, in submitting the motion I intend to make, I trust no Senator will feel that it is an imposition upon the time or the business of the Senate or that its purpose implies any motive of disloyalty to the flag of our country. On the contrary, it is intended as a tribute to the patriotism of the Confederate veteran and his son, who stand ready and willing to offer their lives and their means for perpetuation of the Union which they so desperately and at such great sacrifice attempted to dissolve. I take the liberty of offering this motion since I am the only remaining Senator who served four full years as a Confederate soldier.

"The local post of the Grand Army of the Republic and the civic organizations of the city of Washington have extended the Confederate veterans a most generous and pressing invitation to hold their twenty-seventh annual reunion in the Capital City of the nation, and in the same generous and gracious spirit the invitation was accepted. Today the shattered remnants of Lee and Jackson, Johnson and Bragg, and of the navies of the Confederacy, who are physically and financially able are in Washington and on Thursday will march with their sons down Pennsylvania Aveune in review before the President of the United States. Think, Senators, of the significance of a spectacle like this! A little more than half a century ago these same men were hammering at the gates of Washington in an effort to sever their relations with the National Government. Thursday, marching with broken and faltering step, on a mission of peace and love, not of hatred and bloodshed, but in a spirit of resolute reconciliation and absolute loyalty to the flag, they will voice in vibrant tones to all the world an indissoluble Union of the United States. I am grateful that God has spared me to this day, when my old comrades in arms of the Confederacy are here in the Capitalof that Nation which for four years they struggled desperately to destroy but which none in all this great Republic are now more anxious to preserve.

For four years I marched and fought under the Stars and Bars. Five immediate members of my family are now enlisted under the Stars and Stripes, a son, two grandsons, and two nephews. They will even up our records.

"Now, Mr. President, as a mark of honor and respect to the Confederate veterans asembled in reunion in the city of Washigton, the Capital of the Uited States of America, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next."

VICE PRESIDENT: "The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama."

The motion was agreed to—Congressional Record, June 5, 1917.

Bankers and Brokers Show Fine Patriotism

When your banker or your broker encourages you to buy United States Liberty Bonds, don't make the mistake of thinking that he has any selfish motives. The fact is that he does not make any commission whatever by selling these war bonds. On the contrary, all the work that a banker or a broker undertakes in connection with United States Liberty Bonds is at his own expense.

Seldom has any class of business men shown finer patriotism than that exhibited in recent weeks by the bankers and brokers. The federal government is under great obligations to them for the high spirit of public duty they have shown, for the enthusiasm they have manifested in familiarizing the public with United States Liberty Bonds and in encouraging people to buy.

If you have not yet ordered your United States Liberty Bonds, see your banker or your broker today. And remember that in handling your order he is working unselfishly for American honor and for the permanence of liberty on earth.

Is Your Boy In the War?

Perhaps your boy, your brother your sweetheart, some one you hold dear to your heart, will be called into the war zone to risk his life for freedom, for liberty, for America. War is no picnic, no holiday romp; it is terribly serious business. Victories are almost never won by unfed, naked, disheartened troops. Is it your wish that our boys shall have the food, the clothing, the arms, the ammunition, the safeguards to reduce their danger to the minimum, to strengthen their spirits, to encourage them to victory? Then remember that you can help. To maintain and safeguard your boy at the front takes money. Our government needs that money now. To raise it quickly, to make victory sure, to shorten the war, to save your boy and your neighbor's boy, the government asks you to buy one or more Liberty Bonds. These bonds can be bought for $50, $100, $500, $1,000. They pay interest, they are free from taxes, and you will get back the entire principal. Don't just sit around and wish for victory, peace and the safe return of the one you love. Buy as many Liberty bonds as you can and help to make your wishes come true.

BROKE GERMAN LINE

Details of Important Allied Victory Before Ypres.

OLD SCORE IS WIPED OUT

Capture of Messines Ridges Peculiarly Gratifying, as It Was the Scene of Former British Defeat—Defenses Shattered.

With the British Armies in France, June 7.—In one of the most elaborately planned and daringly executed maneuvers of the war Sir Douglas Haig's forces have dealt a mighty blow against the German line in Belgium, and been rewarded with notable gains in terrain and the capture of more than 5,000 prisoners and numerous guns of various caliber. In addition they inflicted heavy casualties on the Germans.

The Germans, though apparently aware that the blow was coming and seemingly prepared to meet it, were driven from their nearly three years' hold on Messines ridge, opposite "poor old" Ypres. Ypres in a sense was avenged today, for Messines ridge has been the vantage point from which the Germans have poured torrents of shells into the stricken city. The British also wiped off an old score against the Germans, for they held the ridge in October, 1914, and with very thin forces, and virtually no artillery, fought bloodily but vainly to hold it when the Prussian troops massed their modern and overpowering weapons of war against it.

Prisoners taken declared that the bombardment of Vimy ridge was child's play compared with the gunfire turned upon Messines ridge.

Triumph for Artillery.

This fire reached its climax just as dawn was graying the eastern skies and while the full moon was still suspended high in the heavens.

The attack was accompanied by all the arts and devilries of latter-day war. The enemy guns and gun crews had been bathed for days in gas shells sent over by the long-range British guns.

The night was filled with red incendiary flames. Shells that spurted lead in streams crashed in appalling numbers about the heads of the defending soldiers. High-explosive and shrapnel fire was carried out with such rapidity that the earth writhed under the force of the attack.

Mines that had taken two years to dig and fill with an overwhelming explosive broke into an avalanche of flaming destruction in the half light of dawn. This was indeed an Ypres day of retaliation and victory for the vicious sufferings of two years and eight months.

Gunners Strip to Waist.

It was a day of intense heat, and the gunners worked stripped to the waist. The attack went forward with clocklike regularity.

The British casualties were slight. Three out of four of the casualties were reported to be walking cases, who would return to duty in a few days.

The attack began at dawn, and the setting was as picturesque as can well be imaginable. The day before had been hot and sultry. Toward evening there was a series of thunder storms which extended well into the night, the lightning mingling with the flashes of the guns, but the thunder being virtually unnoticed amid the din of the cannon. A full moon struggled continuously to break through the heavy clouds which scudded across the velvety night sky.

Sing on Way to Fight.

On the way to the front were all the familiar pictures of the war—endless trains of motor trucks; all varieties of horse transport, the British soldiers marching to battle light of heart and singing songs familiar in every American community.

In the shadow of an old windmill which has withstood the storms of a century and been undaunted by nearly three years of war, the correspondent witnessed the last phases of the seven-day preliminary bombardment and the final outburst of the guns which sent the British infantry confidently on their way to new successes in fighting the greatest military nation the world has ever known.

From the German line the same lazy, looping rockets signals were ascending to illuminate the treacherous bit of ground between the trenches known as No Man's Land. This nightly "evening" had been going on so long that the enemy considered it entirely normal and took no alarm. Occasionally blue and yellow rockets would be flung into the air by Germans holding the front line.

One by one the guns became silent. There was the old "grandmother" howitzer of enormous caliber, which kept breaking the peace at five-minute intervals, the shock of each succeeding explosion and the shriek of the heavy shells being emphasized by the silence which lay over all the surrounding country.

Like Volcanoes in Eruption.

Day was scarcely breaking when from the dimly visible ridge a score of fiery volcanoes seemed suddenly to spring from the earth. The night had been filled with strange noises and still stranger sights, but these masses of flame, leaping from the ground, had a meaning all their own. They were the spectacular outward and visible evidences of more than a million pounds of high explosives which had been buried deep in mines below the enemy's positions for months.

All the world appeared lurid and horrible under the sinister glow. The earth shook as if torn by a great seismic disturbance. It was not a single shock. The force of the explosion actually set the earth rocking to and fro, and under the influence of the giant guns, which immediately began to roar from far and near, the trembling continued indefinitely. It was 3:10 o'clock when this final terrific bombardment began.

It has seemed that the battle of the Somme attained the ultimate in the close assembly of war weapons, but this sudden outpouring on Messines ridge was beyond all calculation. The lighter field guns far forward set up a perfect curtain fire, under which the assaulting troops trudged confidently to their allotted goals. Farther back the deep-throated heavies began to pour out torrents of high explosive shells on the German trenches and communications, while still other guns—enough to win any ordinary battle—confined themselves solely to the task of deluging German guns and gunners in baths of gas fired in shells of every conceivable caliber.

The effect of this counter battery work was not appreciated until later in the day, when the infantry sent back word that their progress had not been hampered by the enemy artillery and that their casualties amounted to virtually nothing.

Enemy Signals for Help.

Great black observation balloons had stolen skyward during the din of the newly begun battle. In the wood back of the windmill spring birds, awakened by the deafening clamor, had begun to sing joyously. Like so many children who have come into the consciousness of being in the midst of the war, these birds regarded the appalling noise of the battle as a normal condition of life.

The smoke of the giant mines exploded along the battle front meantime rose in great, curling plumes toward the sky and was punctuated by red signals for help from the stricken Germans in the front and support lines. Never was the air filled with more frantic notices of danger. The entire horizon glowed with red balls of fire sent up by the nervous Germans.

More and more British airplanes began to make their appearance. One flew over the lines, the flashes of the guns being reflected brilliantly on its highly glazed wings.

Under this appalling fire trudged forward on the ten-mile front General Plumer's army. At many places the men found German troops utterly dazed by the mine explosion and the ordeal of the artillery fire.

First Taste of New Warfare.

Many of these troops had but recently come from Russia, where they had spent 18 months and knew nothing of what actual warfare was like on the western front. They had bolted at the first mine explosion and had only been gathered together in groups by their noncommissioned officers when the British appeared out of the smoke and shells and made them prisoner.

They said they had been given to understand by their officers that the British always killed their prisoners. It was really pitiful in some instances to see the manner in which these prisoners cringed to their captors.

As a matter of fact, the British soldier, when the fighting is done, is inclined almost too strongly to treat the German prisoners as pals. Some of the prisoners taken today had only gone into the German lines last night and had made their way forward under a galling fire and had lost heavily. But the troops already in the line were calling for relief in such a manner that their appeals could not be denied.

Failed to Time Attack.

In view of the fact that the attack had been expected the German commanders were endeavoring to get their best units actually into the fighting front, but had underestimated when the British would strike. The troops in a strange line were utterly bewildered when the attack began and fell easy prey to the advancing British.

The Irish, New Zealanders and Australians, who had been rehearsed in every detail of "the show," knew just what to do from the moment the word to advance was given.

The battle was far more visible during the first uncertain moments than later when the sun gradually burned its way through the eastern banks of clouds. By that time the smoke of exploding shells and the vapors from the blinding barrage, which had been part of the artillery duty, obscured the more distant landscape to such an extent that the roaring guns could not be seen at all, although the firing was almost at one's feet. The brilliantly leaping shrapnel shells, breaking far above ground, appeared through a thick mist only as brief and brilliant electric sparks.

British Planes Rule Air.

For a month past, but especially since June 1, the airplanes on this front have been indefatigably at work during every possible flying hour. They had brought down nearly 50 machines in six days as a means of blinding the enemy. Lately the Germans have endeavored valiantly to obtain airplane observations for their artillery, but their observing machines have seldom been able to direct more than one or two shots before the British fighting scouts had pounced upon them and either sent them crashing to the earth or had driven them to cover at breakneck speed.

Today the British planes flew far and long over the enemy's retreating lines and were only challenged by some very bad-shooting anti-aircraft batteries. All through the day British planes ruled the air. They co-operated actively with the British artillery and infantry in maintaining the success of this brilliant episode in modern warfare.

PRESIDENT STATES POSITION OF U. S.

No Territory Must Change After War, Says Wilson, Except To Secure Liberty For Inhabitants

OPPOSES GERMAN PROPOSAL

Wilson Says It Was The Status Quo Ante Out Of Which This Iniquitous War Issued Forth

Washington.—President Wilson, in communication to the new government of Russia, has made plain the war aims of the United States and its position on "no annexations; no indemnities." "No territory must change hands, except for the purpose of securing those who inhabit it a fair chance of life and liberty," says the communication. "No indemnities must be insisted except those that constitute payment for manifest wrongs done.

Ante-War Status Barred

"No readjustments of power must be made except such as will tend to secure the future peace of the world and the future welfare and happiness of its people." In unmistakable terms President Wilson declares against Germany's proposal to restore the "status quo" before the war.

No Such Hideous War Must Recur

"It was the status quo ante out of which this iniquitous war issued forth," he says, "the power of the imperial German government within the empire and its widespread domination and influence outside of that empire. The status must be altered in such fashion as to prevent any such hideous thing from ever happening again."

RUSSIANS MUST DEFEND THEIR NEW WON FREEDOM

Autocracy An Anachronism Which Cannot Be Tolerated By The Twentieth Century Mind

Petrograd.—Sir George Buchanan, the British ambassador, addressing a great meeting under the auspices of the Russo-British society, said he had constantly tried to impress on former Emperor Nicholas that in the twentieth century an irresponsible autocracy was an anachronism which could not endure. Russia, the ambassador said, had captured the bastile of autocracy by assault in a single week, and must consolidate the new-won freedom. "If you would keep it," Sir George continued, "not only must you defend it against atttacks of the enemy, but also drive him from the national territory in order that your brothers in those provinces may enjoy the same measure of freedom as yourselves.

"To enable you to reap the harvest of your revolution the democracies of France and Great Britain have been holding back the main forces of the Germans and shedding their blood not only in defense of their national patrimony, but to safeguard Russia. Had they not done so, had the Germans not transferred westward large bodies of troops who had been concentrated on your front, it might have gone hard with free Russia."

CANADIANS ARE DIVIDED ON CONSCRIPTION ISSUE

Cabinet Is Going To Pieces—Conscription Is The Source Of The Trouble

Ottawa.—E. P. Patenaud, secretary of state, hastened his resignation, owing to disagreement with the government on the conscription issue. Senator Beaubien and Sir Herbert are mentioned for the portfolio. Sir Robert Borden declined to discuss the matter. Mr. Sivigny, minister of territorial revenue, is rumored to have taken similar action.

M. Patenaud had been in the service two years. He is a French-Canadian and is against conscription. The attempt by Premier Borden to reconstruct his government into a union administration in which portfolios would be held by equal numbers of Conservatives and Liberals, has failed, and reconstruction of the government will be made within the Conservative party. The debate upon the compulsion bill is expected to be long and bitter, but indications are that it will pass.

All Railroads Show Great Increase

Washington.—Nearly complete returns from all railroads for the four months ending with April, made public by the interstate commerce commission show continuing improvement in net earnings in every section, notwithstanding the greatly increased cost of all factors entering into operating expenses. The east still continues the dark spot on the railroad map, but shows marked improvement in April over March. Southern roads showed net revenue for April, 1917, of $4 per mile less than April, 1916.

Liberty Bond Buyers Are Behind

Washington. — Totals of subscriptions to the Liberty Loan, aggregating $1,300,000,000 as announced by Secretary McAdoo, were made public by the treasury department, showing that not one of the twelve federal reserve districts has subscribed to its minimum allotment, although New York, with the most favorable showing, has nearly reached the minimum. In some instances the amount of subscription from federal reserve districts has fallen to less than one-third of the allotments.

GERMANS ARE DEMORALIZED

Many Germans Captured Are From Russian Front—Nerves Have Been Completely Wrecked

New York.—With the Messines-Wytschaete ridge in their possession, the British have organized the new ground and prepared for probable further action, while throwing back German counter attacks.

Surprised by the terrific onslaught of Sir Douglas Haig's men, the Germans, who lost more than sixty-four hundred prisoners and many more killed or wounded as a result of the mine explosions and the British artillery fire, made no immediate counter attacks. Waiting a day Crown Prince Rupprecht then threw his men forward against the new British positions northwest of Oostaverne and east of Messines. Every effort was repulsed by the British infantry or artillery fire.

All the prisoners taken by the British have not yet been counted, according to the latest official communication, but included in their number are 132 officers, many of them belonging to the artillery arm. The British also have collected more than 20 guns. The success of the British attack is admitted by the Berlin war office, which says that the troops of the Bavarian crown prince were withdrawn to prepared positions to the rear of the original line.

In Belgium north of Ypres the Belgians and Germans have been engaged in violent artillery bombardments. Along the Aisne front in the region of the Chemin-des-Dames the German crown prince has ceased his attacks, but the French and German artilleries continue their activities. There has been no marked activity in the other theaters of the war.

100 U. S. AIRMEN ARRIVE IN FRANCE

Secretary Of The Navy Daniels So Announces—First Fighting Force To Reach France From U. S.

Washington.—One hundred American aviators from the navy flying corps have arrived safely in France for any duty that may present itself, according to a statement issued by Secretary Daniels. They are first of the American fighting forces to reach France. The statement adds that Lieutenant Kenneth Whiting commands the corps which was sent for duty in anti-submarine operations, or for any other active duty that may be given them in France. In addition to Lieutenant Whiting commanding, the naval officers in the detachment are Lieutenant Virgil C. Griffin, Alabama; Lieutenant Grattan O. Dicichman, Georgia; Lieutenant Godfrey D. Chevalier, Massachusetts. Lieutenant Whiting is from New York.

U. S. Destroyers Going To France

Paris.—An additional American flotilla of destroyers and patrol boats, to co-operate with French forces in the English channel and the Atlantic, is expected shortly, according to The Matin. The paper says that naval bases have been prepared to accommodate the American ships.

GERMANY HAS SEVERED RELATIONS WITH HAITI

Tone Of Haitien Note Anent Submarine Warfare Caused The Break

Amsterdam.—The Haitien charge d'affairs at Berlin has been handed his passports, according to a dispatch from the German capital. The Haitien diplomat had previously handed to Foreign Secretary Zimmerman a note protesting against unrestricted submarine warfare and demanding commanding compensation for losses caused to Haitien commerce and life. The note also asked for guarantees for the future.

A statement issued by the Berlin foreign office in regard to the incident says: "As the demands were couched in an unusual form and demanded fulfillment within a period which would not allow even time for examination, the imperial government deems it proper to hand at once the charge d'affaires his passports."

36 Miners Dead And 167 Missing

Butte, Mont.—A statement by officials of the North Butte company gives 36 known dead as a result of the Speculator mine fire, 167 missing and 212 known to have been saved. The fire broke out in the lower levels of the mine.

British Steamer Reported Torpedoed

London.—The British steamer Southland, from Liverpool, for Philadelphia, in ballast, was torpedoed without any warning. She had six Americans on board, of whom one, Edward Rigney of New York City, is missing. The gun crew of the Southland fired ten shots at the submarine after the first torpedo was fired. A second torpedo was fired by the submarine and it caused an explosion in the magazine which killed eight men. Two boats containing forty men are still missing; 159 of the crew have been landed.

Liberty Bonds To Be 110 After War

Jacksonville, Fla.—Predicting that immediately after the war with Germany the Liberty Bonds would go to at least 110, Hollins N. Randolph, attorney for the federal reserve bank for the Sixth district, spoke to the Cotton Seed Crushers' Association in annual convention at Atlantic Beach on the Liberty Loan and addressed the Jacksonville chamber of commerce later. Mr. Randolph undertook this duty in the place of Gov. Joseph A. McCord of the federal reserve bank, who was unable to leave the city.

PERSHING AND HIS STAFF IN ENGLAND

Americans Received At Unnamed British Port With Military Honors And At Once Proceed To London

ACCORDED HEARTY WELCOME

U. S. Destroyers Escorted Pershing's Ship During Latter Part Of The Voyage

London.—A British trans-Atlantic steamer came slowly into her mooring in a British port with the most interesting complement of passengers she ever had carried during her years of plying between American and English ports.

The passengers consisted of the staff of the first division of the American army that will co-operate with the British and French armies on French soil in the world war: General John J. Pershing and his personal staff and the officers of the general staff, numbering nearly sixty. There also were on board about seventy private soldiers, a clerical force of the same number, a score of British officers from Canada and a large party of adventurous civilians, including several women.

The ship arrived in an English harbor late at night, having crossed without encountering any mishap or sighting a hostile craft. When the passengers came on deck on the last morning of the voyage they found torpedo boat destroyers escorting them on either side. When with difficulty they discovered through the marine glasses the colors which the escort flew—that the ships were American—there was great enthusiasm aboard, which increased when a patrol with the same familiar flag at the stern joined the little squadron later.

hTe coming of the American soldiers had been kept secret outside the official circles and there was no crowding aboard at the pier, as would have been the case had the townspeople been aware of the event. There was a large group of British artillery officers at the landing stage, with their scarlet cap bands and gold trimmings which denoted that the wearers belonged to the staff, the blue of the navy, the lord mayor with his gilt chains of office and the officials of the port, to give welcome to the Americans.

GREAT EARTHQUAKE DESTROYS SAN SALVADOR

Tremors Continued Twelve To Fourteen Hours—Hundreds Of Lives Lost

Panama.—Reports from Managua and San Juan del Sur say that hundreds of lives were lost in San Salvador. Earthquakes continued entirely through the night of June 7-8, and volcanoes are reported in eruption. Communication between Panama and San Salvador has been broken.

Shocks Continued Through Night

San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua.—San Salvador, San Tecla and neighboring towns and villages were destroyed in an earthquake which commenced at seven o'clock and continued throughout the night of June 7-8, according to information received here from the president of Nicaragua. The president's message says:

"Telegraphic communication just re-established with San Salvador confirms that earthquakes commenced at 7 o'clock p. m., June 7, and continued all night, accompanied by heavy rain. San Salvador, Santa Tecla and neighboring towns and villages were destroyed. The casualties were small. There were some fires."

The president of Nicaragua has telegraphed the president of Salvador, offering aid. He has ordered the organization of relief committees to send help to the suffering and the homeless. San Salvador, which is the capital of the Republic of Salvador, has a population of more than sixty thousand.

Stamp Taxes On Checks In War Bill

Washington.—New stamp taxes of two cents on bank checks and drafts of more than $5 to raise from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 were written into the war tax bill by the senate finance committee.

Goethals Discharges Two Engineers

Washington.—Charges by F. A. Eustis of the government's emergency fleet corporation, and E. Huntington Clark, his assistant, that Major General Goethals is deliberately blocking the wooden ship building program, has resulted in the dismissal of both as volunteer employees of the corporation. General Goethals, general manager of the corporation, announces that he has discharged the engineers who conceived the wooden shipbuilding plan because their usefulness is at an end.

Georgia Man Makes Great Discovery

Statesboro, Ga.—When Ben S. Mooney of Statesboro discovered a process to extract the oil from lightwood stumps two years ago, shortly afterward putting up a large plant here, little did he dream that he was on the track of a high explosive, one which, in all probability, will be of much value to his country. What it is or how he got it, Mr. Mooney does not know. It is made from two different oils and within a minute or so after the two have been poured together the explosion takes place.

EIGHT AIR RAIDERS DOWNED

Of Eighteen Airplanes That Bombed English Towns Only Ten Escaped

London.—Eight out of eighteen German airplanes that took part in an air raid on Essex and Kent were driven down by British airmen. Four were completely destroyed, while two others are believed to have been put out of commission.

Of the eighteen machines that started in the raid two were brought down near the British coast after having dropped their bombs. The remaining sixteen were engaged by ten naval airmen from Dunkirk, who, in a great battle over the sea, destroyed two more of the Germans and drove down another four, two of which it is reasonable to believe were put out of action.

The total casualties in the raid were: Killed, 12; injured, 16.

After the lesson of the Folkestone raid the British were ready for the visit and from the moment the Germans left the Belgian coast they were engaged, first with patrols over the channel, then with the land forces in England, and later on their return with the squadron of airplanes from Dunkirk.

In addition to this prompt defensive action a warning was given the inhabitants of the districts visited and they were able to take to cover so that the casualties, aggregating twelve killed and thirty-six wounded, were much smaller than in the case of Folkestone, which had no warning.

Anti-aircraft guns and airplanes succeeded in keeping the raiders from the naval and military centers and the casualties occurred chiefly in small villages and towns on which bombs were dropped indiscriminately.

NO GOLDEN FLOOD FOR UNITED STATES

Importations Of Gold Have Ceased And Flow Is Other Way—Allies Are Sending Bonds, Not Gold

Washington.—America's great gain of gold, which has grown with almost every month for two and one-half years, has ceased. Gold importations have stopped altogether and the flow has begun the other way, with indications that it will continue in comparatively small volume for some time.

The turning of the tide comes at a time when the country apparently faces the greatest industrial period of its history, greater, officials believe, than the past twelve months, which witnessed the establishment of a $6,000,000,000 record for American exports. Plans under consideration now call for an outpouring of approximately $6,000,000,000,000 a year of exports to entente nations alone, and if American fields and factories are equal to the task of meeting demands the total exports will be swollen hundreds of millions beyond these figures.

Statute of R. E. Lee At Gettysburg

Gettysburg, Pa.—Confederate Veterans from all parts of the South came here from Washington, where their annual reunion is in progress, to attend the unveiling of Virginia's monument on the Gettysburg battlefield. On the spot where Pickett's division formed, 54 years ago, for its famous charge, in the third day's battle that marked the high tide of the Confederacy, an equestrian statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee, mounted on his famous horse, Traveler, was formally presented to the nation. Several thousand Daughters of the Confederacy and Sons of Veterans also attended the ceremonies. General Stuart of Virginia, accompanied by cadets from the Virginia military institute and a battalion from the Fourth United States infantry, encamped here, led the parade to the battle grounds, accompanied by Governor Brumbaugh and Assistant Secretary of War Ingraham.

Italian War Mission Is In The South

Washington.—The Italian war mission has begun its delayed tour of the South and Middle West, leaving behind its chief, the prince of Udine, whose sudden illness several days ago caused the trip to be postponed. The prince is still unable to travel, but he expects to leave Washington in time to join the party at Chicago. Announcement of the new plans was made by Enrico Arlotta, minister of transportation in the Italian cabinet and ranking member of the mission.

$200,000,000 Offering Already Absorbed

Washington.—For the third time in six weeks an offering of $200,000,000 in treasury certificates of indebtedness convertible into Liberty Loan bonds and bearing a lower interest rate than the bond issue itself has been heavily over-subscribed. The entire offering, which brings the total of outsanding certificates issued under the war revenue bill up to approximately $870,000,000, was placed through the federal reserve banks. Estimates of the oversubscription of the latest issue place it as high as one-third.

Veterans Honor Their Dead Comrades

Washington.—The annual memorial exercises for the soldier dead, a feature of every reunion, was held by the Confederate Veterans, assisted by the Sons of Veterans and Daughters of the Confederacy, in the Confederate section of Arlington at the foot of the monument raised to Dixie's dead by the women of the south. Thousands crowded the grounds and heard the eulogies pronounced on those who died for the Lost Cause. Special wreaths were placed at the tomb of the unknown dead.

Jerry's ship is burned, he is reported lost. Sebastian presses his attentions. Jerry suddenly turns up to confront charges of the Navarres against him. In a struggle for a forged paper Diego Navarre is killed and Jerry is convicted of the murder. He escapes, and finds the treasure and a wonderful chemical pellet. Leontine is forced to marry Sebastian. On the honeymoon, he attacks her in a rage. Suddenly he is confronted by a weird apparition. Ravengar forces a confession from Louie. Sebastian attempts to get it. An earthquake occurs; in the excitement, Red Finn steals the confession and flees. He appears in New York as Romanoff and enlists the aid of Madame Bianca. Leontine confronts her husband in the gambling house. The Shadow battles for her and she escapes with the confession. One-Lamp Louie follows her and takes the paper from her. The Shadow saves Navarre from robbery. Romanoff attempts to kidnap Sebastian and Leontine, but Ravengar appears to thwart him. Bianca and her thugs are puzzled by Ravengar's repeated escapes and returns to his cellar prison. Leontine consents to accompany Hamilton on a balloon ascension. Sebastian drugs Hamilton and arranges to have Leontine set adrift in the balloon. The balloon bursts into flame and Leontine finds that her companion is Ravengar. They are rescued, but One-Lamp Louie reports that they perished in a hurricane. Sebastian arranges to marry Bianca. Louie prevents it to save himself and is thrown to death by Sebastian who changes his marriage plans. He sees Leontine alive and well. Later Sebastian kidnaps Leontine, but the Shadow has promised her protection. Ravengar delivers Leontine from the hands of her enemies, but Bianca's thugs capture him. Bianca hesitates to kill him as she is passionately in love with him. By maintaining that Leontine is insane, Sebastian again gains possession of her. Ravengar, after a terrific battle, rescues her, but the mystic mantle which renders them invisible, is stolen.

ELEVENTH EPISODE

The Passing of Bianca.

Stumbling along the forest trail, Ravengar and Leontine pursued their way for what seemed an eternity of hours, Ravengar growing weaker and more weary as time went on. He leaned more and more heavily upon Leontine. But neither dared to stop, for they knew that their pursuers were close upon them.

At last, just as Ravengar was ready to drop from weakness, they saw a small, abandoned hunting shack before them. They went in.

It consisted of a single room and a kitchen, with a small cellar for storing ice. Ravengar sank down on the wooden bed and lay there, half unconscious from his wound.

Leontine looked about her. The shack had been occupied at no distant date, and still contained the camping apparatus, including a shotgun and a pair of binoculars. She took the glasses and, going to the door, looked out.

Through the trees she could see the rocky hillside down which they had come in their first flight. And on the hillside, little black specks against the brown, she saw the forms of their pursuers.

Ravengar rose and came out to her.

"I must leave you here, Leontine," he said. "The cloth must be recovered. Without that we are lost."

He went back and took down the shotgun. In it were two unexploded cartridges. He handed it to Leontine.

It Was Hissing.

"You will be safe with this," he said. "Don't hesitate to use it. Wait for me here; I shall come back to you."

He went out of the door, and Leontine, watching him with a sinking heart, saw him disappear, carrying the glasses, among the trees.

Presently he saw something that brought his heart into his mouth. It was the solitary figure of a man standing on the crest of a hill, apparently in perplexity what to do.

Ravengar began hurrying through the thick brush toward him, now losing him, now regaining him. At last he came near enough to be able to make out the form of Joe, apparently resting upon the hilltop in fancied safety. As he drew nearer Ravengar saw that he was holding the mantle in his hand and examining it attentively.

As he held it, Ravengar, creeping up within leaping distance, suddenly sprang.

His right fist crashed full into Joe's mouth, and the thief went over like a rabbit and, striking his head against the rocks, lay motionless.

Ravengar picked up the mantle and began to make his descent among the rocks.

The crest was faced by another crest across a valley. Upon the second crest Sebastian and Bianca, with Bianca's second follower, stood, anxious spectators of the fight. They did not know Joe had the mantle, but they recognized him and also Ravengar.

As they watched they saw Ravengar knock out his antagonist and start down the declivity.

He found a difficult passage among the crumbling rocks on the face of the steep cliff; but it seemed to offer a quick return to Leontine, and Ravengar wanted more than anything else to give her the mantle.

At last he fell, and, in falling, dislodged a bowlder, which rolled downward, carrying him with it in a shower of pebbles.

Ravengar could no more stop his descent than an Alpine climber can stop an avalanche.

Fortune favored him. The boulder stopped at the edge of the steep lower drop, and Ravengar managed to catch a tree and draw himself to his feet. Seizing the mantle, he folded it invisible side outward, and thrust it into a gap between two rocks. Then he fell over in a dead faint.

Sebastian, Bianca and her follower, pursuing their way, came to the spot where the fight had occurred. At the bottom of the slope the three could make out the inert figure of Ravengar, lying apparently dead or unconscious.

"We've got him!" cried the man exultantly.

Sebastian shook with fear. The proceedings of the day had not been at all to his liking.

"You settle with him. I've got to go home," he said.

And, as Bianca looked at him contemptuously, he turned and made his way back along the trail.

Bianca and her companion began to descend the precipice. At the bottom they came upon Ravengar, lying insensible and bleeding freely from his wound. Bianca's companion looked about him. He espied a jagged stone and, taking it in his hands, poised it above Ravengar's forehead.

With a scream Bianca leaped at him in fury and dashed him backward.

But at that moment the figure of his companion, Joe, with a big bruise on the forehead and a split lip, emerged through the trees. "Cut it out! Wait!" he yelled. "Did you get the cloth?"

"That's so, boys," cried Bianca, grateful for the intermission. "We've got to get him round first and make him tell us where the cloth is. There's a hunting shack somewheres about here. Let's follow the trail and take him to it. Then we can give him the third degree and find what we want to know."

Leontine had seen them coming. She did not know it was Ravengar whose body was being borne through the trees.

Then suddenly her eyes fell upon the shotgun, and she remembered Ravengar's instructions. She grasped it from the wall and looked about her. Bianca's voice was to be heard plainly outside the door.

Leontine saw that the kitchen shelves were covered with a curtain, which hung right down to the floor. She rushed behind it, carrying the loaded gun. It was not much of a refuge, but it offered a temporary respite. From here she could hear the men bringing in their burden. They laid it on the bed.

"Where are you going?" Leontine heard one of them ask Bianca.

"Into the kitchen," she replied. "I'm going to search for something to bring him to."

The man growled something that was inaudible. Then Leontine became aware that Bianca was in the room.

She could see nothing, but she heard Bianca's steps coming toward the shelves. A moment later the curtain was thrown back. Leontine and Bianca looked into each other's faces.

Leontine, holding the loaded gun, watched Bianca defiantly. She was determined that she would sell her life dearly. Bianca looked back at her; then she lifted her hand for silence. She drew nearer.

"Ravengar is in great danger from those men," she whispered, "and I am powerless to help him. Go and find aid. Go quickly."

She reached up her hand and took the key of the padlock from a tumbler. Leontine had failed to see it in her excitement. She went swiftly to the back door, unlocked the padlock, and indicated to Leontine to go.

Leontine looked at Bianca in amazement. She could not understand the motive which prompted this woman, who had been her and Ravengar's bitterest enemy. However, she gathered her wits together and went swiftly out.

"Hurry up!" shouted Bianca's man, Joe, from the inner room. "We got to revive this guy and give him the third degree, and then finish him."

Bianca came quietly back, carrying a bottle which she had picked off the kitchen shelf.

Bianca kneeled over Ravengar and applied the contents of the bottle to his forehead. It was white vinegar, and it answered its purpose effectively. Ravengar stirred, opened his eyes, and fixed them on Bianca.

"Hush!" she whispered, laying her finger on her lips. "Can you understand what I am saying to you? If so, make the least nod."

Ravengar nodded.

"Your only chance of life is to make a dive for the cellar as soon as I open the trap door. Don't stir till then. You get my meaning?"

Again Ravengar nodded.

Bianca turned toward a closet which was in the room, as if with the intention of getting something out of it. She hoped, in fact, to find an ax or some such weapon. But there was something in the closet better than an ax—and also worse. It was a shotgun; but it would require an appreciable moment to load it, and that was denied her.

Holding the shotgun behind the door, Bianca leaned forward toward the cellar door, reached it, and coolly opened it. At the same instant Ravengar, who had been watching her, gathered all his strength and leaped from the bed.

His action was so quick and well-devised that the two men were completely taken by surprise. Before they could draw their pistols Ravengar was in the cellar.

Bianca Had Them at Her Mercy.

They drew; but before they could aim and fire they saw Bianca standing by the trapdoor, covering them with the shotgun.

"Hands up!" she called.

They threw their hands up. Bianca had them at her mercy. And then ensued the baffling mystery of feminine psychology. Instead of disarming them, Bianca dashed down into the cellar. As she ran a bullet from Joe's revolver pierced her gown.

Crouching on either side of the trapdoor, the men fired, with the hope of wounding Ravengar by random shots.

A spray of shot came up in return, spattering upon the wall. The two drew back and considered.

"We got to finish them—both of 'em," growled Joe's companion. "We're done now, so far as Bianca's concerned. See this trick, Joe?"

He picked up a piece of board and, hoisting a hat on it, so that it resembled the upper part of a man's face, moved it cautiously around the corner. As it came into sight from the cellar below two shots rang out from the shotgun.

The hat twirled upon the board, which dropped from the crook's hand. As it revealed the hand, two answering shots came from the crook's revolver. Aimed along the line taken by the pellets from below, it was difficult for the weapon to miss. Ravengar, wounded again, dropped to the cellar floor.

The men above heard the thud, and rushed toward the trapdoor in exultation. An instant later the shotgun spoke again. Joe yelled as half a dozen pellets caught him in the leg.

The two men beat a hurried retreat; but in that second they had caught sight of Bianca, standing like a lioness at bay above the body of Ravengar.

They drew off, Joe limping painfully and cursing hard. He slammed the cover down and looked at his companion. "We've got one of them," he said. "We've got to get her too."

Suddenly he uttered an exclamation and pointed to one of the shelves. Upon it lay a stick of dynamite, all ready set with a fuse.

He pulled down the stick and began winding the fuse about it. When it was ready he struck a light, lit the fuse, and, holding the stick in one hand, opened the cover hastily with the other and flung the fuse down the hatchway.

Madly the two ran from the shack as fast as they could go.

* * * * * * *

The second shot had struck Ravengar in the forehead, inflicting a scalp wound, but glancing off the bone. He was still alive, and breathing heavily.

A gleam of light flooded the cellar as the hatch was raised. Bianca grasped the shotgun and pointed toward the opening. But the lid fell down before she could fire, and something same tumbling down the steps.

Bianca heard the outer door slam as the men hurriedly took their departure. She lifted the thing she held in her hand. It was bissing. She ran up to the top of the steps, pushing open the lid of the cellar with her free hand.

It was a stick of dynamite, and the fuse was nearly burned down.

She hurried toward the door, tugging at the fuse.

She raised the stick of dynamite on high to fling it from her.

As her hand went back to her shoulder the explosion happened. The room was filled with smoke; the walls of the cabin tottered, stood for a moment, and collapsed inwardly. Where had been the shack was only a heap of smoking ruins.

From their hiding place the two confederates watched with grim satisfaction.

"Let's beat it, Joe," said one of them.

His companion, without answering, clutched him by the arm and pointed. An automobile had emerged from among the trees and was standing beside the ruined shack. Someone in it—a woman—was crying out and pointing toward them. The car approached.

They darted through the trees. As they ran they heard the car come whirling along the road and stop. Somebody cried again—a man. The cry was the note of discovery. The chase was taken up. The two ran faster. Before them lay a patch of irregular, rocky country, in which it seemed freedom might be found. Their pursuers were no longer near them, though they could still hear their cries.

Creeping cautiously forward, Joe reconnoitered, and then beckoned to his companion to follow them.

In front of them lay a sort of tunnel in the rocks. Within the mouth of the cave there should lie safety.

* * * * * * *

Leontine fled down the trail. She hardly dared hope to find help in time.

She had only gone a couple of hundred yards when the sound of an approaching automobile arrested her attention. A moment later she saw the machine whizzing toward her, and, planting herself in front of it, called to the driver.

The machine stopped. In it was a party of men, touring the woods, Leontine hurried toward them.

"Help!" she gasped, almost inarticulately.

"Yes. Where?"

She pointed back along the trail. "There are a band of crooks there, and they're going to commit murder," she cried.

She tried to get them to drive on, but the leader of the party shook his head.

"I'll drive you to the sheriff," he said. "You can tell your tale there."

He would not listen to Leontine's frantic appeals. They drove to the sheriff's office; and in a moment she was telling him her incoherent story.

He hurried to the door. "Put the machine about," he commanded.

The auto, running at full speed, came into sight of the shack. Leontine saw Bianca run into the doorway, and her heart leaped joyfully. He was unharmed then!

The next instant a rush of flame came from the hut, the roar of the explosion followed it. The hut collapsed into a heap of debris.

Leontine jumped from her seat and ran to where Bianca had been. There was no trace of her.

The Queen of the Underworld had met her fate.

Leontine flung herself down upon the sill of the broken door and wept bitterly.

The sheriff, half stunned by the suddenness of the disaster, quickly regained his wits.

"Watch the trees, gentlemen, and see if you can find any traces of them."

The car moved on, leaving Leontine behind, crouched in the doorway. Half a minute elapsed. Then the sheriff's hand fell on the chauffeur's shoulder. He pointed to the side of the road, where the long grass was trampled down.

The car stopped. One of the occupants uttered a cry and pointed through the trees. Two men were to be seen running at top speed across a little patch of open ground.

"Come along, boys; we'll get 'em," called the sheriff.

He tossed a revolver to the man nearest him, and, holding another in his hand, started in the pursuit, followed by all but the chauffeur.

* * * * * * *

The explosion in the shack was not the only one which took place that afternoon. Another, on a much larger scale, and less impromptu, had been planned to occur half an hour later, within the new aqueduct tunnel which was being blasted among the rocks. The gang had departed, and the man in charge of the blast was talking with the foreman.

"You'll let her go in three minutes," said the latter. "I'll go to the road and hold up any auto parties that's coming round the bend. Time her."

He made off across the broken ground as far as the edge of the woods. There he saw a car coming slowly along the road, the solitary chauffeur peering through the trees intently, as though following somebody.

"Hey! You there!" shouted the foreman, holding up his hand.

The chauffeur, who had not heard him, continued on his slow way.

"You there!" yelled the foreman. "Stop that machine! The blast's just going off!" And he began running toward him, shouting "dynamite!"

The chauffeur caught the word and put on the brakes hard. He had had enough dynamite that afternoon. He pointed through the trees, and the horrified foreman saw the party, led by the sheriff, beating the bushes for the fugitives.

"There they are!" he yelled, as the two crooks made their final dash across the open space. "Come along, boys. We'll get them sure."

The horrified foreman saw him darting immediately toward the tunnel, followed by the whole gang of excited tourists. One of the crooks turned and fired at random. The sheriff answered him, and the pursuers closed in on the pursued.

The foreman yelled loudest of all as he turned to cut off the approach of the party. Time was precious; the three minutes must have half gone.

Panting, the foreman caught up with the sheriff fifty paces from the tunnel entrance. "Hey! Dynamite!" he yelled, planting himself in front of him.

The sheriff grasped his meaning. He turned and bolted at the top of his speed, shouting and waving back the party.

Within the tunnel the two crooks were crouching, desperate men, but armed and resolved to sell their lives dearly. Suddenly with a roar that was heard throughout the countryside, the charge exploded. A ton of rock smashed down from above. The earth upheaved to receive what remained.

Sebastian had hurried homeward, overcome with panic at Leontine's disappearance. For the first time he began to despair.

* * * * * * *

He decided to prepare for flight.

Suddenly, glancing into the mirror of a cupboard, he jumped to his feet with an oath. In the mirror was to be seen the reflection of the window opposite, and looking through the window were the mysterious eyes that had haunted him.

On the table beside him stood a heavy glass water pitcher. Sebastian stretched out his hand cautiously, seized it, and hurled it through the window, shattering the glass.

The eyes vanished, and a great diamond-shaped star appeared. Sebastian left the library and went into the little garden at the rear of the house.

As he did so he caught sight of a figure dodging behind a tall syringa bush.

"What do you want?" he shouted.

The man stepped forward a little sheepishly. "I want to speak to you in private—about your wife," he said.

Sebastian hesitated; then he indicated to the man to follow him back into the library.

"Well?" he demanded, swinging round upon him.

"Well—er—Mr. Navarre, you are under arrest," said the other. "I'm going to hold you till the police come," he said.

"You are not from the police?"

"I'm acting for Mr. Ravengar. That's enough."

"I understand," said Sebastian. "May I get my coat?"

The other nodded, and the two proceeded upstairs toward Sebastian's bedroom. Sebastian took his coat from the closet and, turning back, tripped over the garment and fell to the ground. As the young man bent forward to assist him Sebastian sprang to his feet and felled him with a violent blow. In a flash he was upon him, and the two struggled upon the floor. Sebastian snatched the revolver from the detective's pocket and detached himself. As the other grappled with him he knocked him down again, hesitated an instant, and ran through the doorway at the far end of the room, stopping a moment to lock it behind him.

There was a hall beyond the door, leading to a window with a little balcony. Sebastian thrust the window open and ran out. He hesitated. He could go no further.

As he stood there he heard the door behind him splinter. It crashed from its hinges, and the detective appeared. Sebastian took aim deliberately through the window.

He heard the butler's footsteps in the bedroom. He poised himself like a swimmer, and plunged.

By a miracle of good fortune he fell into the leafy branches, clung to a bough, and made the descent unin-

He fired. The detective staggered and dropped. He did not move again.

Beneath the window, but some distance away, was a tall tree. As Sebastian hesitated, uncertain whether to make the desperate leap or to go back,

"You'll Be Safe With This," He Said.

jured, save for a few scratches. He dodged back into the library, smoothing his clothes as he did so, and gained his chair satisfied that he had been unobserved. Half a minute later the butler and another servant came running in.

"There's been a murder upstairs, sir!" the butler gasped.

Sebastian rose. "A murder?" he inquired blandly.

"Two burglars, sir. We heard them fighting. One shot the other and made his getaway."

"Get a doctor, quick!"

"It's too late for a doctor. He's dead, sir. Shall I telephone for the police?"

"No, leave it to me. I'll see to it," Sebastian answered.

* * * * * * *

The shock of the explosion that had cost Bianica her life brought Ravengar back to consciousness in the cellar. He opened his eyes to find the walls dissolving about him. The cellar rocked under the force of the detonation.

A heavy beam came crashing down upon him. Almost miraculously it fell across his body in such a manner as to pin him where he was without further injuring him.

His unconsciousness had partaken more of the nature of sleep. He felt refreshed, almost invigorated as he rose to his feet. But he remembered nothing of what had happened since he entered the cellar.

One thing, however, flashed back into his consciousness. That was the mantle. He had hidden it in the cleft between the rocks, and he must obtain it.

The walls of the cellar gaped apart in many places. Ravengar crawled slowly and painfully out between two stones. He gained the open and looked about him. Nobody was in sight.

As a matter of fact, the two crooks were on the other side of the house, watching the result of their devilish plot with glee. Had Ravengar emerged upon that side they would have seen him. Luck had brought him out at the back, among the thick foliage of the low shrubs that grew almost to the kitchen door.

Staggering painfully Ravengar made his way among the pines. He had gone a little way when he heard the sound of an approaching automobile. He did not wait but hurried into the recesses of the forest. Stumbling on, at length he reached the spot where he had hidden the mantle after his fall from the cliff. He put his hand between the stones, and drew it out tenderly, fearful of tearing it. He put it about him and returned to the hut.

His heart was filled with forebodings as to Leontine's fate. Dearly as he had longed to find her, he had known for both their sakes that the mantle must be his first objective. Now, as his brain began to clear, he wondered what the explosion had been which wrecked the hut.

He wondered whether Leontine had been in the hut at the time. But he would not let his mind dwell on that possibility. And he did not know that the entire hut was wrecked. He hurried on, feeling stronger every moment. For the first time since his wounding, too, he realized that he was hungry.

He was nearing the hut when he saw the automobile in the road, in charge of the chauffeur. He walked boldly toward it, stopped and regarded the man quietly. The chauffeur's eyes passed by his without a sign of perception. Ravengar was now completely satisfied. The rough handling to which the mantle had been subjected had done it no injury.

He went on toward the cabin. His heart was beating fast, and nameless terrors held him. Leontine! He felt like calling for her. He wanted to shout. Surely, if she were living, she would hear and answer him, wherever she were.

Then his heart gave a great leap of gladness. Upon the threshold of the wrecked structure he saw Leontine seated, her face bowed in her hands, while the tears streamed through her fingers. He went up to her, but for some moments his emotion was too great to permit him to speak.

She seemed to sense his presence, for she looked up wistfully. Ravengar pulled the mantle from his face and shoulders. With a wild cry of gladness Leontine leaped to her feet, and held out her hands to him.

HANDS, ARMS, LIMBS ASLEEP

And Was Run-Down, Weak and Nervous, Says Florida Lady. Five Bottles of Cardui Made Her Well.

Kathleen, Fla.—Mrs. Dallas Prine, of this place, says: "After the birth of my last child...I got very much run-down and weakened, so much that I could hardly do anything at all. I was so awfully nervous that I could scarcely endure the least noise. My condition was getting worse all the time...

I knew I must have some relief or I would soon be in the bed and in a serious condition for I felt so badly and was so nervous and weak I could hardly live. My husband asked Dr. ———about my taking Cardui. He said, 'It's a good medicine, and good for that trouble', so he got me 5 bottles...After about the second bottle I felt greatly improved...before taking it my limbs and hands and arms would go to sleep. After taking it, however, this poor circulation disappeared. My strength came back to me and I was soon on the road to health. After the use of about 5 bottles, I could do all my house-work and attend to my six children besides."

You can feel safe in giving Cardui a thorough trial for your troubles. It contains no harmful or habit-forming drugs, but is composed of mild, vegetable, medicinal ingredients with no bad after-effects. Thousands of women have voluntarily written, telling of the good Cardui has done them. It should help you, too. Try it. E 74

ROOSEVELT PLEADS FOR OUR LOYALTY

Criticises Policy for Failure to Protect Promptly Against Brutality of Germany

PLEAD FOR THE RED CROSS

Lincoln, Neb., June 14.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt, in a speech which he delivered here today at the celebration of the semi-centennial of the statehood of Nebraska, criticised the national policy of the United States government for failure to protect promptly against German ruthlessness and brutality, deplored national failure to prepare for war, pleaded for undivided loyalty to the American flag, denounced the pacifists, and asked for generous support and for the use of the red cross in caring for American troops on European battlefields.

"We permitted our national policy" he said, "to be swayed by the national devotions and national antipathies of men who exercised the rights of the American citizens but showed themselves traitors to America by the way in which they prostituted our citizenship to the interest of Germany or to their hatred of England.

Cannot Overstate Damage.

"It would be impossible to overstate the damage done to the morale fibre of our country by the professional pacifists propaganda. The professional pacifists during the first two and a half years of the war, have occupied precisely the position of the copperheads during the time of Abraham Lincoln.

"The fact that sheer cowardice was more potent than the love of peace was proved by the fact that the leading pacifists dared not condemn a single specific act of wrong-doing when such act was committed by the powerful and brutal foe they most feared—Germany. They clamored for neutrality between Germany and Belgium. They denounced war in language which reflected as heavily on their fathers who were defending their wives and daughters from outrage as upon the aggressors who sympathetically practiced rape and torture. By their failure to protect against the inhuman torture of the poison gas they made it necessary hereafter to accept this as an ordinary instrument of warfare; just as, by our failure to take immediate action in connection with the murder of innocent noncombatants by submarines, we commited the offense against humanity the effects of which cannot be completely eradicated by any subsequent action on our part.

Championed By Pacifists.

"All this meaness and abandonment of duty was championed by the professional pacifists on the plea that thereby we should be 'kept out of war.' And by this political pressure they prevented us from preparing and kept us utterly unprepared, on the ground that preparedness invited war; their motto was 'Safety First' not 'duty first.' They cared nothing for humanity. They cared nothing for our national honor or interest. All they asked was a 'peace' that would permit us to get all four feet in the trough while we strove to distract attention from the squalid baseness of our nationalism by the shrill clamor of a sham-sentimentality.

"And, nevertheless, we have not been kept out of war. Our avoidance of duty simply invited such compulative repetition of insult and injury that finally war was forced on us. It merely resulted in our drifting into war stern foremost, in a condition of such complete unreadiness that we owe an ignoble safety exclusively to the protection of the exhausted nations to whose help we have announced that we intend to come.

"From this time on let us insist on an absolute undivided Americanism in this land, untempered by any self-allegiance to the countries from which our ancestors may severally have sprung, and untainted by any unworthy national animosity towards any other country. Let us prepare ourselves spiritually, economically and in all military and naval matters—including as a permanent policy the policy of universal training and service, so that never again shall we be utterly unready, as we now are, to meet a great crisis. Finally, in the present war, a war for liberty and democracy against the ruthless militaristic tyranny of the Prussianized Germany of the Hohenzollerns, let us as speedily as possible train our giant, but our soft and unready strength, so that we may use our hardened might to bring the slaughter to a real and final end in the only way honorably possible by securing for ourselves and our allies the peace of justice based on overwhelming victory."

Pleads for Red Cross.

In his approval for the Red Cross, Colonel Roosevelt said:

"The most important thing is to send abroad at the earliest possible moment a fighting army. Second only to the army in the work of winning this war comes the Red Cross. Indeed, the importance of this work is so great that the president of the United States has set apart next week—from June 18 to 25—as a period of sacrifice and unselfish generosity, a week in which the whole American people wil be asked to join in raising funds to enable our Red Cross to perfrom its vast and indispensible duties in this war.

"The president has also commissioned some of the ablest business men of the country as a war council of the Red Cross, to administer this service on behalf of the stricken world. This war council tells us that a fund must be raised at once in order to meet even the most urgent needs.

Summons to Americans.

"Here indeed, is a summons to every American. It is an enormous sum of money, but what comfort can we take in withholding that or any other sum of money if it is needed to relieve the suffering of our sons or the sons of our allies who are fighting for all that makes life worth living.

"Into our Red Cross without stint should be poured a heartfelt offering of thanksgiving that we are permitted to join in this great service to all mankind. Our soldiers and sailors will do their part without flinching; we may rest assured of their courage and fidelity. The Red Cross offers to us who are not allowed to fight the opportunity for sacrifice and for help.

"We little realize what is before us. Our sons and brothers will soon be going into battle. They will be 3,000 miles from home, in a land already wasted by war, a land threatened by famine, a land smitten by disease. They tell us that in many cases today the wounds of soldiers in France must be tied up with newspapers for want of necessary surgical bandages. When our own men are wounded—as they surely will be in great numbers—are we going to allow them to suffer yet more because we fail to provide those things which can at least mitigate distress? Surely not! But we must do it in advance. If we wait it may be too late! Do it now!

To Become Foster Parent.

"Our Red Cross must not only care for the shattered bodies of our wounded men; it alone can become a foster parent to them in the trying conditions they are sure to face when they are convalescent from wounds or recovering from exhaustion. We shall soon have an army of a million soldiers. When they get to France they must have homes in which to rest and be cared for and to recover. The generosity of aur whole people must make it possible for our Red Cross to provide for them.

"In no previous war have the innocent non-combatants had to bear so terrible a share of its physical suffering; and it is by our Red Cross that we can show to the nations of the world how the great heart of the American people goes out to them in their distress

France Needs Us.

"France, proud, brave and bleeding from ghastly wounds, needs us sorely. Tuberculosis is raging throughout her land. Fifteen hundred of her towns and villages have been razed to the ground by the culcated barbarity of the invaders. Millions of her people are homeless and starving, bereft of even the barest covering of their bodies, of stoves, utensils with which to cook or eat, of agricultural implements, of animals—indeed of the simplest elements of civilization. And to us alone can these people come for help; we alone have the abundance with which to supply their direct needs.

"To Russia Too, we must reach out our helping hand. We little know what she has suffered and is suffering. Russia, long obedient to autocracy has not flinched in this conflict. Her people have had to struggle not only to free the world from autocracy but to make their own land a land of liberty. Russia needs all we can do to strengthen her courage and make her feel that we are indeed behind her. Our armies can do little for her. Our Red Cross alone can take into Russia the message of hope, of help, of confidenre which she so terribly needs. The message must be practical. It must carry deeds and not merely words, and it should be carried at once. Probably never before were so many people in distress and agony as in Russia in this very hour.

WHEN MASTIC PAINT GOES ON THE HOUSE, THE "FOR RENT" SIGN COMES OFF.

Too many houses are without tenants on account of their appearance. It's false economy to let your property stay unpainted. You not only lose revenue, but its value and life are lessened to a marked degree.

The expense of painting is by far less than the loss thus incurred.

The wise owner paints his property before he puts the "for rent" sign on. Let us tell you how little it will really cost you to paint your house with MASTIC PAINT—"the kind that lasts." It's the best paint for you to use. The purest white lead and zinc-oxide, 50 per cent. each, ground in pure linseed oils, go into it. That's the reason it stood the test of time of half a century. Don't put off painting, let us figure with you at once. Ask for free paint booklets and color card.

NOT AS MANY WEEVILS AS WERE LAST YEAR

Number reduced by the Excessive cold of last winter.

A year ago the boll weevils began to appear on the cotton plants by the middle of May and by the middle of June they had appeared in alarming numbers. This year and up to the present time very few weevils have made their appearance. The question is being asked, "what has become of the boll weevils?" The reason why so many weevils appeared last spring was because of the fall of 1915 being warm, damp and late. Cotton kept putting on squares and making weevils until frost. A vast army of weevils went into winter quarters and the winter being short and mild, naturally a large per cent lived through the winter and came out on the cotton in the spring of 1916. These would have been conquered and fairly good crops made had it not been for the heavy rains in July, forcing the farmers to abandon their crops to the weeds, weevils and wet weather.

Last fall 1916 from August to December. Cotton made very little top growth and practically no late squares therefore, very few weevils went into winter quarters as compared with the year before. I give as my opinion that ten times as many weevils went into winter quarters in 1915 as did in 1916. The past winter was long and severe. Many weevils starved during the winter and late spring and less than a tenth as many weevils are in existence as was the case a year ago. Since cotton was planted, dry weather has prevailed, three or four weeks have been hot and cultivation during this hot, dry period has helped to further reduce the number and activity of the weevils.

By frequent cultivation and close watching we may be able to get by with the cotton crop without much damage from weevils this year. It all depends on good farming and normally dry seasons. The big crop in Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana are due to such conditions as we are having up to the present. It will not do to get careless or negligent as weather can change in a short time and a few weevils can make many more in a few days under wet weather conditions. It is best to play safe by killing every weevil you see, and keep stirring the hot, dry soil. If the crop yield is satisfactory, don't think the weevils are gone for good. The next late fall followed by a wet summer they will appear again in damaging numbers. Alabama farmers saw the worst of the boll weevil last year, but it will be many years before they are entirely gone, if ever.

PARTY LOYALTY NOT TREASON

The little passage-at-arms between Senators Harding and Lewis over the result of the special election in New Hampshire was amusing—but it also had its serious side. Senator Lewis went to New Hampshire to speak for the administration. He had a prepared address which he gave out to the newspapers in advance. In it he adjured the New Hampshire Voters to support a Democrat for Congress lest for the first time, their state be charged with treason and dishonor. Their choice, he asserted, was between Wilson and the Kaiser, between liberty and Prussianism. The falsity of this issue was readily perceived by the people of New Hampshire, and Senator Harding was fully justified in calling the attention of the Senate to it. There will be other congressional elections; indeed, one is now even pending in Indiana. There will be an attempt to raise this same false issue there. Senator Lewis may not be the administration's spokesman—but someone will be on the job. We do not think that Indiana, any more than New Hampshire, will deem it a proper way to show loyalty to the country by abandoning loyalty to one's principles.

RELY ON ROOT

The Pan-Germans in Germany are not keen for peace without annexations; and they have framed up a scheme for the dismemberment of Russia. Coming at the time when Mr. Wilson's note to the Russian government on this same subject is just reaching its destination, the German plan should have an effect upon Russian sentiment which should stimulate a consolidation of Russian action with the Allies. Mr. Root's arrival in Petrograd was also about synchronous with the other two events—and the trinity of happenings ought to be productive. Mr. Root's contribution to the situation will have the added value of being made in person, with all the power of his great personality.

A COMMENDABLE POLICY OF EDUCATIONAL WORK

Weekly Newsletter of the State Department of Education.

The educational policy of the West Point Manufacturing Company, which operates cotton mills at Lanette, Langdale, Shawmut, Fairfax and River View, on the Chattahoochee River in Chambers County is so distinctive in type that it is well worthy of note in a Department letter.

Free Schools for Nine Months.

At each of the above named villages the company supplements the county school fund and maintains nine months graded schools, housed in modern buildings and manned by an able corps of teachers. The schools are absolutely free to all pupils in the elementary grades. This liberality extends to the children of the parents of the villages who are not employees of the company.

Free Text Books.

Next year free text books will be furnished to all the children of mill employees that are under sixteen years of age, the limit passed by the National Child Labor Law.

Education for Old and Young.

Free kindergartens are maintained at each village for the children between the ages of three and seven years and adult night schools are taught for older people. The management has cooperated splendidly with the adult school movement which is being directed by this department.

Instructive Entertainments.

A feature of the educational program which is far reaching in its effect is the lyceum course which is offered during the winter months. The opening of community halls three times each week where selected pictures of an educational value are shown is another commendable feature. These entertainments are given at the minimum cost, all profit going to the Welfare Fund, which is used for laudable purposes among the employees of the mills.

A Splendid Example.

Every citizen of Alabama should come in touch with this system of schools which is being maintained by the above mentioned company in carrying out its splendid business policy.

DEATH OF MRS. C. P. TURNQUIST

Mrs. Turnquist was born in Sweden on June 13, 1852, coming to America in her early girlhood. Her home was in Wisconsin until she came to Thorsby with her husband about twenty years ago. She was an earnest Christian and faithful worker in the activities of the Sweedish Lutheran church, where her presence will be sorely missed. She is survived by her husband and several children.

CONGRESS DOING PRETTY WELL

(From the Cincinnati Times-Star)

This Congress has been called upon to change the whole structure of our government; to abandon, temporarily many of our ancient liberties and to substitute for them bureaucratic control. Most of these changes are made necessary by the war. We will have to give up some of our individual freedom, temporarily, in order to secure liberty in the future. But congress cannot be reasonably expected to do all of these things in an hour or a week Representatives and Senators are sent to Washington to represent the people and to use their best judgment in the framing of laws. They might, at a word, turn over all the functions of government to the president; but that would be an abandonment of our well-tried system of balanced government and a betrayal of the people of the United States.

Congress has passed a conscription bill. It has made considerable progress with the new taxation bill. It is going ahead with the espionage bill, the food control bill and other important measures.

Of course this congress is not perfection. No thoughtful believer in democracy expects perfection from any legislative body. But it is a fairly creditable congress which finds itself confronted with an unprecedented task. And on the whole is doing pretty well. It took England two years to put her government on a war basis. Is it reasonable to expect this country further removed from European militarism, and always impatient of too much governmental control to do the work in a month?

HUNTING TROUBLE—GOT IT

(From Buffalo Express Ind't Rep.)

The administration rather broke the present truce between parties by sending speakers to New Hampshire to plead for the election of a Democratic successor to Representative Sulloway. If the choice of the Republican candidate, Sherman E. Burroughs is a rebuke to the President, he brought it on himself.

FINEST PHYSICAL MEN TO BE IN THE NEW ARMY

Mem must be Perfections of Health and Pbysique say Army Surgeons.

Washington, June 19.—America's armies will be made up of the finest physical manhood of the nation.

Army surgeons estimated today that 40 per cent of the men brought to the colors by selective draft will be rejected upon the first physical scrutiny, so severe are the examinations. Nearly 1,000,000 must be drawn to get the 625,000 for the first levy. At present the rejections in the regular army average 40 to 60 per cent of the applicants.

After undergoing the severe physical examinations imposed by the army surgeons, the chosen ones will form the best army physically in the world. In no other army are the physical requirements so hard to meet. Even Germany's vaunted armies are picked on a less stringent scale of requirements.

Here are the general requirements for the army:

Height, not less than five feet, four inches, nor more than six feet; weight, not less than 128 pounds nor more than 190. Lungs and heart must be well nigh perfect. Any heart "murmur" disqualifies. Hearing and sight must be good. Color blindness is not necessarily a disqualification. Chronic disease and mental disorders cause rejection. Loss of fingers, toes or an ear are dispualifications. Flat feet or deformed feet are also causes for rejection. The surgeons examine closely for any affections of the kidneys or chest. At least four molar teeth are necessary.

The thorough examination usually consumes more than an hour.

"This war will be won by young men," and an official of the medical corps. "That's why we will win—we've got the most and the best young men."

SAVE YOUR WINTER OATS FOR PLANTING

Farmers are warned of Scarcity of Oats for seed next Fall.

Washington, D. C. June 20—Farmers in the South who have winter oats of good quality are urged to save them for seed rather than to feed them. This crop was winterkilled very generally over the South last winter, and specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture say that the indications are now that the seed supply will be very short. Many counties in the Southwestern states will have to purchase all their seed from other localities, and those favored sections where a partial or full crop was produced should save every available bushel to meet this demand. Farmers are urged to feed corn or other grain to work stock or to purchase northern grown spring oats for feeding in order to save the winter oats for sowing.

Because of the scarcity of winter oats of good quality, those who have them are quite sure to profit by saving them for seed rather than feeding them. Farmers who do not know where they could sell seed oats should communicate with their county agent or the director of their state experiment station, or R. A. Oakley, Chairman committee on seed stocks, U. S. Deparement of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Present indications are that there will be a ready market for all good seed of this crop this year.

He said that less than 100 have applied for commissions in the reserve corps and that older men are needed as well as younger. He expressed the belief that Alabama will get its full quot.

RUSSIAN ARMIES ORDERED TO FIGHT

Duma Declares For Immediate Offensive Against Teutons In Resolution Passed At Secret Session

PEACE TREASON TO ALLIES

Prolonged Inactivity On Battle Fronts Styled Traitorous—Russian Cabinet Sticks To London Pact

Petrograd.—The duma, in secret session, has passed a resolution for an immediate offensive by the Russian troops. The resolution declares a separate peace with Germany or prolonged inactivity on the battle front to be ignoble treason toward Russia's allies, for which future generations never would pardon the Russia of the present day. "The duma, therefore, considers," the resolution adds, "that the safety of Russia and the maintenance of the liberties which have been obtained lie in an immediate offensive in close co-operation with Russia's allies."

German Agent Driven From Russia

The announcement that the cabinet had decided to suggest a conference of the entente allies for examination of treaties was followed by the publication of the note sent to the other governments in question. The note suggests a conference to revise the agreements existing among the allies as to war aims, with the exception of the London agreement, which provides that none of the signatory powers shall conclude a separate peace.

No Chance For Separate Peace

The first act of the Pan-Russian congress of all councils of workmen's and soldiers' delegates, upon which depends the immediate destiny of Russia in regard to both international and domestic questions, was to ratify the expulsion by the provisional government of the Swiss Socialist, Robert Grimm, who is reported to have been the medium through which the Germans attempted to arrange a separate peace with Russia.

BELGIUM'S DIPLOMATIC MISSION IN WASHINGTON

Received With All Courtesies And Deeper Emotions Than Missions Of Greater Nations

Washington.—Belgium's diplomatic mission came to Washington to express its gratitude for all that the United States has done in the past to relieve the suffering of its people and to discuss with American officials the reparation that is to be demanded of Germany for her violated faith at the beginning of the war and international crimes which have followed it.

The representatives of King Albert, who has clung tenaciously for nearly three years to the last free fringe of his country, were received with all the coutesies and probably with deeper emotions than the official missions of the greater nations who preceded them. Secretary Lansing, Counsellor Polk and Assistant Secretary Phillips of the state department greeted them at the station, after which, escorted by two companies of cavalry, they motored to the home of Larse Anderson, former minister to Belgium, which is to be their headquarters.

Baron Ludovic Boncheur, chief of the political bureau of the Belgian foreign office, and for eight years minister to this country, is the head of the mission. It is understood he expects to confine his efforts in the United States largely to the ultimate peace questions rather than to immediate war needs.

U. S. To Drive Germans From The Air

Washington. — Full approval has been given by the war department to the air supremacy program of the defense council's aircraft board, and President Wilson has been asked to put the administration's support behind the great project for which an appropriation of $600,000,000 is sought. Under the plan the United States would become immediately a great elementary training base for all the allies and enormous numbers of training machines would be turned out, while American plants are developing a serviceable battlecraft type.

Civil War Menaces Chinese Republic

New York.—A cablegram foreshadowing extensive military operations by six of the Chinese southern provinces against the government, was received here by the Chinese Nationalist League of New York from its headquarters in Canton. The league claims to represent politically the six provinces and to favor China's entry into the war on the entente side under a liberal republican government. Already southern troops are marching on Wu-Chang, according to the message.

Dictator Ruling Republic Of China

Pekin.—Gen. Chang Hsun now is dictator, President Li Yuan Hung being little more than a figure-head. The insurgents are calling a convention at Tien Tsin to form a provisional government headed by the dictator, who is expected to act as president and premier. Gen. Chang Hsun's motives are obscure, but it is believed he is attempting to obtain from the former leaders of the Manchu dynasty an agreement for restoration of the empire.

GREEK KING LOSES THRONE

Constantine, King Of Greece, Forced To Abdicate By Great Britain, France And Russia

Athens, Greece.—King Constantine has abdicated his throne in favor of his second son, Prince Alexander, and, with Crown Prince George, is to leave Greece. The abdication was made on the demand of the entente powers, and thus ends the anomalous situation which long has existed in Greece because of the refusal of Constantine and his followers to acquiesce in full in the demands of the entente allies for the freedom of movement of their forces in and through Greece and for their safety from attack.

Italian Army in Greece

That the entente was prepared to move with expedition in bringing a change in the situation in Greece is indicated by the fact that simultaneously with the arrival in that country of the French Senator Jonnart, who bore plenary powers to act for the entente, came the occupation by the Italians in northwestern Greece near the Albanian frontier, of the strategic town of Janina and by other entente forces of Elassona, in northeastern Greece, situated at the foot of Mount Olympus and near the Gulf of Saloniki.

This climax in the affairs of Greece was brought about through the agency of the French senator, M. Jonnart, who has held posts in several French cabinets, and who arrived at Athens only a short time ago on a special mission as the representative of France, Great Britain and Russia. M. Jonnart had previously visited Saloniki and other points, and he lost no time in getting into conference with the Greek premier, Alexander Zaimis. The demands of the powers respecting the abdication of King Constantine also specifically eliminated Crown Prince George as his successor, the crown prince being included among those Greeks in official life who were considered strongly pro-German.

RUSSIAN TROOPS PROVE LOYALTY TO DEMOCRACY

Soldiers Sternly Putting Down Mutiny On The Roumanian Front And Government Jubilates

Petrograd.—The forces in the army at the front which are loyal to the provisional government have had their first test of strength with disloyal pacifists, and have won a notable victory. Lieutenant General Stcherbatcheff, the commander on the Roumanian front, gave an order to disband one infantry, one tiraileur and one Siberian tiraileur regiment, all of which were considered useless for fighting purposes.

Three regiments of another division were ordered to take up a new position, but refused to do so, and thereupon received an order to disband. The soldiers openly mutinied. The men of one of the regiments arrested the commander and seven officers, tore their badges from their uniform and beat two officers, leaving one insensible on the road. A regimental committee resolved that the regiment should not move; thereupon a loyal committee of soldiers of the whole army, after deliberating with the army staff, pronounced for stern measures against the mutineers.

Irish Rebels To Be Freed By Britain

London.—All of the prisoners taken in the Irish rebellion of Easter Sunday, 1916, will be released without reservation. This announcement was made in the house of commons by Andrew Bonar Law, who said that the government felt that by so doing it would aid in the success of the approaching Irish convention, which the government hoped would effect a reconciliation among Irish political parties. In making the announcement, Mr. Bonar Law said: "The government ha sgiven long and anxious consideration to the position of Irish political prisoners and has arrived at the decision it is now my duty to announce."

Wilson Pardons Nearly Five Thousand

Washington.—Nearly five thousand persons at liberty under suspended sentences imposed by federal courts have been granted "full amnesty and pardon" by President Wilson in a proclamation carrying out the recently announced policy of extending clemency in such cases. Without the exercise of such clemency the person affected would have been compelled under a Supreme court mandate, to return to custody.

German Editors Denounce Mr. Wilson

Amsterdam, Holland.—Commenting on President Wilson's note to Russia, the Berliner Tageblatt, according to a Wolff bureau dispatch to the Dutch papers, says: "The entente countries naturally are filled with satisfaction and gratitude to President Wilson for having made himself the mouthpiece of the enemy alliance against democracy. President Wilson has practiced self-denial to such an extent that he could not have given the message a more appropriate superscription than 'Wilson versus Wilson.'"

Shortage Of Ships Problem Of War

Washington.—Shortage of ships for military transport service constitutes the biggest single problem before the United States war chiefs today. That the dispatch of the bulk of the new army may have to be delayed by reason of this lack of transports is admitted by men in charge. True, there are sufficient ships to carry vast numbers of soldiers, but this is only a small part of the problem, inasmuch as these men must be constantly supplied with food, clothing, artillery and other equipment.

NEARLY 3,000,000 PEOPLE BUY BONDS

Hope For Widespread Response Of The Average Man More Than Realized In Multitude That Invest

AMOUNT IS OVERSUBSCRIBED

Exact Measure Of Country's Response Will Not Be Known For Some Time To Come

Washington.—The American people have responded to the government's call for funds to finance the war with an oversubscription to the two billion Liberty Loan of proportions so huge that officials are buried beneath a landslide of untabulated returns.

No man could say how great had been the nation's answer. Apparently it was overwhelmingly beyond the most sanguine hopes of treasury officials, though only one of the twelve federal reserve banks, Atlanta, with a total subscription of $52,593,800 out of a minimum allotment of $60,000,000—could hazard more than estimate of the total. The Atlanta figures, however, were final.

In the country's ringing answer to the call the dominant note was the voice of the small investor. His money talked on the last day of the campaign in eloquent terms. The hope for a widespread response of the average man with the average income was more than realized in the multitudes that flocked to the banks. It appeared that all previous estimates had gone by the boards and that nearly 3,000,000 men and women had bouhgt the bonds.

In the absence of official figures of the returns officials hesitated to predict how high the total would soar. It mounted every hour to new heights and assumed such proportions that there was an apparent inclination to accept with some allowances the rosy estimates of local Liberty Loan committees as to the totals of their districts.

At the treasury a note of conservatism was sounded concerning these estimates. It was feared that the committee, flushed with success, might be over-optimistic and there was a manifest unwillingness to accept as final any estimates unverified by actual tabulations.

AMERICAN NAVY GUNNERS DEFEATED IN OPEN FIGHT

Captain Of Submarine Congratulated Commander Of The Moreni On Game Fight

Washington.—American naval gunners have met their first defeat in an open fight with a German submarine. Official dispatches announced the destruction of the tank steamship Moreni, abandoned ablaze by her crew and armed guard after a desperate running fight in the war zone which cost the lives of four of her crew.

Half an hour after the tanker had been sent to the bottom her forty-three survivors, including all of the members of the armed guard, were picked up with their life boat by a passing steamer. The German commander had set them adrift after congratulating the American skipper upon his game fight and having the men who were wounded treated by the submarine's surgeon.

The submarine began the action at a range of 8,000 yards, four nautical miles, when she hardly was visible to the steamer without glasses. Presenting virtually no target herself, she sent 200 shells at the big tanker, making many hits, while the American gunners wasted 150 shots without harming the speck from which the deadly hail came.

Naval officials assumed that the submarine was armed with the six-inch rifles mounted by most of the newest undersea boats. No statement was available as to the armament of the Moreni, nor as to whether she was one of the vessels that sailed without waiting for full equipment, includes a range finder. The failure of the gunners to get the submarine was attributed generally to the long range and the small target.

The action of the submarine commander in treating his vanquished opponents with such unexpected courtesy was the subject of much comment.

Southern Allowed To Reduce Service

Atlanta, Ga.—After hearing the petition of the Southern railroad to discontinue fifteen passenger trains operating in Georgia on account of the emergency created by the war and the need of the government for a large part of the equipment in moving troops the Georgia railroad commission has passed an order allowing the discontinuance of nine of these trains. Two addition trains, not included in the petition, were substituted for others in it, making a total of eleven discontinued.

Lufberry, a New Yorker, Air "Ace"

Paris, France.—Adjutant Raoul Lufberry, of New York, premier "ace" and fighting airman of the Lafayette Escadrille, has just brouhgt down his eleventh "official" enemy plane in a single handed fight against five Boches, according to word received here. It took the New York fighter just twenty-five shots to shatter the wings of the adversary plane nearest to him, the German whirling down from the 15,000 feet altitude to death. He exchanged shots with the remaining four.

DEATH RAINED ON LONDON

Ninety-Seven Persons Killed And 437 Wounded By Raids Of Airships On English Towns

London.—In a swift and deadly raid on the city of London, German airplanes took a heav ytoll in killed and wounded. Other places were attacked, but so far the heaviest losses occurred in London town itself.

The casualties, as officially announced, numbered 534, includng 97 killed and 437 wounded. Fifty-five men met death and 223 men were wounded. Sixteen women and 26 children were killed and 122 women and 94 children were wounded.

The German squadron consisted of about fifteen machines, and the down-town section of London was their chief objective. Many bombs fell in the East End, where buildings were destroyed and others badly damaged, and scores of persons fell victims to the explosions. In one instance alone ten children were killed in a school and fifty were injured.

British airplanes ascended immediately the signal was given that hostile machines were coming, but the Germans remained at a great height and flew swiftly, and evidently the British fighters had difficulty in the pursuit, for the loss of only one German machine has been recorded. Others are reported to have been brought down, but there is no official confirmation of this. The anti-aircraft guns of London seemingly were unable to reach the Germans.

While a great many small business houses and the homes of the poor in the crowded districts suffered more damage, Field Marshal Viscount French, commander of the home defense, announces that no damage of a military or naval nature was done.

GERMAN SUBMARINE SINKS FRENCH LINER MISSISSIPPI

Steamship Sent To Bottom One Hundred And Forty-Five Miles From Brest

New York.—News of the destruction of the big French steamship Mississippi by a German submarine, with a loss of one of the merchantman's crew, was brouhgt here by officers of a British freight vessel that arrived from a French port.

Mississippi 6,677 Tons Gross

The Mississippi, of 6,677 tons gross, was torpedoed and sunk about one hundred and forty-five miles out from Brest, France, according to officers of the British ship which rescued forty-seven officers and seamen from open boats. They had been afloat only a short time.

Details Not Disclosed

The British officers refused to disclose the details of the sinking as related to them by the French crew. The only sailor lost was drowned while the crew was taken to the boats. The British ship landed the survivors at Fayal, Azores.

Vessel In Regular Trade

The Mississippi, owned by the General Trans-Atlantic Steamship company of Havre, was last reported in marine quarters as having arrived at New Orleans on March 31 from Havre. She was in regular trade between those two ports.

America Ready To Pay The Cost

Princeton, N. J.—America has counted the cost in entering the war, and is getting ready to pay the price, no matter how great the sacrifice, to secure world triumph of democracy over absolutism and the crushing of Prussian despotism. Secretary of State Lansing said at the one hundred and seventieth commencement of Princeton university, at which Mr. Lansing was one of those upon whom the honorary degree of dotcor of laws was conferred, including ambassadors and ministers of the allied countries at war with Germany.

Italians Saluted By Roar Of Cannon

Atlanta, Ga.—In the bright sunshine the members of the Italian commission to America motored through the gateway at Fort McPherson, while a cannon just inside the post boomed a salute of nineteen guns. Fifteen minutes later they stood beneath the shade trees bordering Officers' Row and watched the Seventeenth infantry and men of the officers' training camp pass in review to the blare of a military march. Captain Marconi, inventor of the wireless, who was with the party, stated the submarine menace would be overcome.

Nominates Georgian For Colonel

Washington.—Louis F. Garrard, Jr., of Columbus, Ga., whose military career began during the Spanish-American war, when he was commissioned as first lieutenant in the Third Georgia infantry, was nominated by the president as a lieutenant colonel in the quartermaster's corps of the army. After his service with the Third Georgia regiment, Colonel Garrard was mustered out in April, 1899. He entered the permanent military establishment in February, 1901, as a captain in the quartermaster's corps.

Japan Is Peeved At United States

Tokio.—The American government's note to China expressing regret over the dissensions in that country and a sincere desire that tranquility and political co-ordination be forthwith established, caused surprise and unfavorable criticism in Japan, where the action is regarded as ignoring Japan's special mission in China. The feeling as expressed in official cricles is that the situation would have been better treated by first exchanging views with the entente and especially Japan.

In a struggle for a forged paper Diego Navarre is killed and Jerry is convicted of the murder. He escapes, and finds the treasure and a wonderful chemical pellet. Leontine is forced to marry Sebastian. On the honeymoon, he attacks her in a rage. Suddenly he is confronted by a weird apparition. Ravengar forces a confession from Louie. Sebastian attempts to get it. An earthquake occurs; in the excitement, Red Finn steals the confession and flees. He appears in New York as Romanoff and enlists the aid of Madame Bianca. Leontine confronts her husband in the gambling house. The Shadow battles for her and she escapes with the confession. One-Lamp Louie follows her and takes the paper from her. The Shadow saves Navarre from robbery. Romanoff attempts to kidnap Sebastian and Leontine, but Ravengar appears to thwart him. Bianca and her thugs are puzzled by Ravengar's repeated escapes and returns to his cellar prison. Leontine consents to accompany Hamilton on a balloon ascension. Sebastian drugs Hamilton and arranges to have Leontine set adrift in the balloon. The balloon bursts into flame and Leontine finds that her companion is Ravengar. They are rescued, but One-Lamp Louie reports that they perished in a hurricane. Sebastian arranges to marry Bianca. Louie prevents it to save himself and is thrown to death by Sebastian who changes his marriage plans. He sees Leontine alive and well. Later Sebastian kidnaps Leontine, but the Shadow has promised her protection. Ravengar delivers Leontine from the hands of her enemies, but Bianca's thugs capture him. Bianca hesitates to kill him as she is passionately in love with him. By maintaining that Leontine is insane, Sebastian again gains possession of her. Ravengar, after a terrific battle, rescues her, but the mystic mantle which renders them invisible, is stolen. Bianca's thugs corner Ravengar and Leontine in a shack. Bianca defends Ravengar. He escapes and recovers the invisible mantle. Out of revenge the thugs dynamite the shack and kill Bianca.

TWELFTH EPISODE

The Stolen Shadow.

Sebastian had hurried homeward, overcome with panic at Leontine's disappearance. The game was up at last, and he recognized that fact. For he had no hope that Bianca and her gang would succeed in discovering the fugitives.

He had played his game remorselessly, and in every one of Leontine's escapes from imminent death he had seen the finger of fate.

He resolved to fly. There was still time; there was ample time before the police got on his trail.

He packed a few essentials into a couple of grips and got ready to leave. He had drawn several thousand dollars out of his bank; that would suffice him for the present. He closed the grips and took them down to his library. He lit a cigar and sat down for a few moments' thought.

The thought of Bianca rushed back through his mind. He shifted his feet uncertainly. It was hard to give her up. Should he stay, then?

As he looked across the room there appeared suddenly the luminous hands and eyes, the apparition that had so startled and horrified him before. Sebastian screamed and leaped to his feet. In his shaken condition this seemed more than he could bear. But as he stared at the apparition it changed suddenly into the figure of Ravengar, his enemy.

Sebastian sank back trembling into his chair, and Ravengar came forward with easy nonchalance and stood before him, smiling gravely at him.

"Yes, Sebastian Navarre, the game is up," he said. "Your wife is at the police station, and shortly you will be arrested and on the way to paying the penalty for your crimes."

Sebastian shook with fear. "Why do you persecute me?" he groaned.

"You have one chance of escape, so far as your wife and I are concerned," Ravengar continued. "If you will write a confession of the crime which sent Jerry Carson to prison, we will call off the police and let you go free. Your other crimes will be on your own head."

Sebastian began to recover his equanimity. If the man was willing to bargain with him, he could not be sure of his ground. He shook his head.

"Then," said Ravengar quietly, "there is no more to be said."

At that moment the sound of an approaching automobile was heard. Sebastian, who had risen, looked out of the window, to see a police auto drawing up to the house. In it sat two policemen and Leontine.

"Wait!" yelled Sebastian, as Ravengar was nearing the door. "If I write that confession, do you swear you will call off the police?"

Ravengar nodded, and Sebastian rushed to his writing table and, taking a sheet of notepaper, began to write with trembling fingers. Ravengar watched him for a moment. There came a ring at the door. Ravengar left the library and went to the aperture in it, which Sebastian had had made in order that he might scrutinize unwelcome visitors before admitting them. Leontine, upon the doorstep with the policemen, saw Ravengar's face.

"You have got him?" she cried.

Sebastian, writing furiously at his desk, saw Leontine through the window. She was talking to Ravengar, and she seemed at a loss to understand why he did not open the door. Sebastian threw the pen down, and a crafty look came over his face.

He reflected for a moment; then he deliberately tore up the confession which he had written and threw the scraps away. He crept toward the door. Near this was standing a heavy teakwood chair, which he had brought with him from the Argentine. It was very old, and the wood was almost as strong and solid as if it were steel. Sebastian picked it up and noiselessly opened the door.

He crept into the hall. His feet made no sound on the thick carpet. He saw Ravengar, talking to Leontine and the policeman through the door. He raised the chair and brought it crashing down on Ravengar's head.

Ravengar dropped like a log, without a sound. The fragments of the broken chair fell all about him.

Sebastian turned and fled up the stairs. He dashed into a room which overlooked a neighboring garden. It was his plan to leap from the window, thus to avoid the police.

In front of it stretched a line of telegraph wires. It was a desperate spring, almost an impossible one.

He heard the front door splinter, and the police rush into the house. They were searching the library, they were coming up the stairs. A hand was at the door. Sebastian poised himself upon the window sill, and, rendered desperate, leaped as the police entered the room.

Sebastian caught the yielding telegraph wires with one hand, hung there a moment, reached up the other hand, and made his way to the pole. He climbed down, and had just reached the bottom when a shout from the window above him indicated that he was discovered.

He heard a warning cry. A bullet whizzed past his head; but Sebastian was running swiftly for the garden gate. It was unlocked. He darted through and found himself in the street.

His versatile brain was working fast. He knew exactly what he was going to do. His garage stood near. In this he kept, besides his autos, a motorcycle, a hobby of his. Sebastian snatched it, mounted it, and whirled away.

He rode with all his might, for he was bent on making this supreme effort and shaking his pursuers off the track. But now fortune ceased to favor him. The police auto had been brought round to the back of the house; as Sebastian dashed along the road he was seen. The hue and cry was up. In a moment the police auto was after him.

Sebastian headed toward the hills, but a glance showed him that there he would be caught. He could not hope to best an auto on an ascent. He turned and headed toward the harbor. And now he became panic-stricken. He headed toward a wharf.

It was the last wharf up the river. It was a little private dock once used for sailing ships, but now practically abandoned. In the distance, toward the river mouth, a fisherman sat in a motorboat.

Sebastian saw him and his scheme was formed. He drove straight for the head of the wharf. Without checking himself, he let the motorcycle plunge into the river, and, disentangling himself, began to strike out toward the motorboat.

The police chauffeur threw on the brakes just in time to prevent the auto from following the motorcycle into the water.

The police watched the swimmer. He was too far away now for a revolver shot to have any likelihood of reaching him. Sebastian was making good progress.

The police shouted to the fisherman. He was too far away to hear their cries distinctly. He turned his head and listened. Presently he caught sight of the swimmer in the water. Naturally he came to the conclusion that the men in the auto were calling attention to his predicament.

He pulled in his rod, started the motor boat, and began chugging his way toward Sebastian, who was still swimming strongly in his direction.

The watchers saw the motor boat draw up toward him. The fisherman leaned over and grasped Sebastian by the wrists. Sebastian hauled himself up out of the water, clung for a moment to the side of the boat, and managed to scramble in.

As Sebastian gained the shelter of the boat the police saw him turn upon the fisherman and deal him a buffet which sent him sprawling into the sea.

Sebastian, without troubling further about him, started the engine again, and the motor boat sped swiftly seaward, while the police watched helplessly from the auto.

* * * * * * *

Sebastian and his whereabouts were next to nothing in Leontine's mind as she bent over the unconscious Ravengar within the hall of her husband's house.

Presently Ravengar stirred and opened his eyes. They fixed themselves upon Leontine's, and, with a sob of thankfulness, she leaned over him and kissed his forehead.

He rose weakly, and she assisted him to a couch in the library. They were hardly seated before the police lieutenant came in. Leontine looked at him in mute inquiry.

The lieutenant shook his head. "He made his getaway in a motor boat, and added murder to his crimes," he said.

Briefly he detailed what had happened and, excusing himself, took his departure. Leontine remained silent. She knew now that so long as Sebastion lived there could never be any peace for her.

And Jerry's name, for which she had fought so long, still remained uncleared—the convict's brand was on him. Tears came into her eyes.

"He will never return," she sobbed, as Ravengar tried to comfort her, "and I can never clear poor Jerry's name of the accusation of forgery."

"Perhaps Jerry will return some day and clear himself," suggested Ravengar.

Leontine shook her head mournfully. "No, there is no hope," she answered sadly.

"But you can never tell," Ravengar persisted. "Be true to your love, for Jerry, and all will be well."

They were the words which had been uttered on the first occasion when she saw the mysterious hands and eyes. Leontine started back in fear. She looked at Ravengar searchingly.

He smiled. There was something sad and charming in the inscrutable look upon his face.

"What do you mean?" she cried. "What do you know about Jerry? Who are you?"

Ravengar smiled still. "I? I am only your shielding shadow," he replied.

"But what is your mysterious power?" asked the girl excitedly. "Whence comes your ability to appear and disappear at will?"

"Have you forgotten the invisible mantle?"

"No, but that only intensifies the mystery. Why is it invisible? And why is it invisible on one side and not on the other?"

Ravengar took her by the hand. "Do you trust me, Leontine?" he inquired. "Do you, who have been surrounded by so much evil, trust to my good motives?"

"How can I help but trust you?" replied the girl.

"Then come with me," he answered, "and I will show you."

* * * * * * *

Leontine and Ravengar got out of a taxicab and entered a house in a quiet part of the town. Ravengar opened the door.

"I do not live here," he said. "I rent an upper floor for use as a laboratory. It is necessary that I should not have it in my home, for fear of its discovery by our enemies. You are the only person who knows the secret."

They went up the stairs together. Ravengar unlocked a door and opened it. Leontine looked with wonder into the interior. She saw what seemed to be an ordinary laboratory, such as a chemist might have. But why did Ravengar want a laboratory?

"This is my secret," said Ravengar, taking up a bottle containing a few black pellets and placing it before the girl. Although they appear black when seen through the medium of the glass, if you held them in your hand you would see nothing. They are absolute black. Ordinary black, as you know, is not really black at all—that is to say, it is not invisibility, as black should be. It is, instead, composed of a blending of hues. Real black is invisible.

"This is absolute black. The pellets were found upon a ledge—Ravengar's ledge—in the South Atlantic. They were the discovery of the scientist, Joseph Dexter."

Leontine started. She had heard the name before, but when or where she could not think.

"He wrote of his discovery in his journal. Wait. I will get it for you—" continued Ravengar.

Upon the table was the invisible mantle. Leaving it with the pellets in front of the open window, Ravengar turned away and went toward a safe that stood in the corner. Leontine followed him.

"I have his journal here," Ravengar continued, beginning to open the safe. "Some day it will be published and will make interesting reading. Here it is."

He took out a cover containing a number of sheets of waterstained paper, closed the safe, and went back toward the table, to lay the journal down. Then he started and stared alternately at the table and at Leontine. The cloth and the bottle of pellets were gone.

"The pellets!" gasped Ravengar. They were here a moment ago."

"I haven't touched them. You must have put them somewhere," answered Leontine.

Ravengar began hunting for them hurriedly, but he could find them nowhere. Both the pellets and the cloth were gone.

"You may have taken them to the safe," Leontine suggested.

The Hand Grasped the Bottle and the Cloth.

Ravengar shook his head. Nevertheless, he went back to the safe and opened it again. The quest was fruitless. The bottle was nowhere to be found.

"That window!" exclaimed Ravengar. "Was it open when I went to the safe?"

"I don't think so," Leontine answered.

The window, which was of the French variety, and had been closed when they entered, was now slightly open. They looked out. The house was set near another of similar architecture, and between the two there ran a narrow passage. A window in the adjacent house was set opposite the laboratory window. It would have been just possible for an agile man, seated upon the sill, to have stretched out his arm and reached the bottle of pellets.

"We must find out who is in the next house," said Ravengar to Leontine. "If somebody has taken it, we must get him before he escapes us."

He darted from the room, Leontine following him, and they rushed down the stairs and gained the street together. There was an immense crowd, a policeman was standing beside an auto, in which appeared a second policeman. He and the chauffeur were supporting a figure, but whether of a man or woman neither Ravengar nor Leontine could see above the heads of the crowd which pressed in front of them.

As Ravengar tried to clear a way to the auto the first policeman raised his hand, and the auto moved away, carrying the injured person, the second policeman and the chauffeur. Ravengar managed to reach the official who was now dispersing the crowd.

"Accident?" he asked.

"Them joy riders knocked down a fellow that was coming out of the alley here. They've taken him to St. Luke's," answered the policeman.

"Was he a tall man, dark—strongly built, and smooth face? Looks like—"

"That's the fellow. Friend of yours?"

"No," said Ravengar decisively. "I know him, that's all. Did you happen to notice whether he was holding anything in his hand?"

"I guess not," said the policeman. "Wait a bit! Now I come to think of it, I did notice that he had one of his hands clenched tight, as if he wanted to hold on to it. But I guess there wasn't nothing in it—there couldn't have been, because his fingers was so close together he couldn't have had a pea or a penny inside."

"It mightn't have been a medicine bottle?" Ravengar persisted.

The policeman shook his head, and Ravengar went back to Leontine, who had been unable to push toward him.

"It was Sebastian," he said, "and they've taken him to St. Luke's. It seems as if he's got rid of the pellets, but they may be in his clothes. We'll have to see him."

Ravengar shouted to a passing taxi, which drew up to the sidewalk. "St. Luke's!" he shouted, and, helping Leontine in, he followed her.

* * * * * * * *

Sebastian, alone in the motorboat, put on all speed.

He crossed the river, put in at a little private dock, left the boat there, and hurried along the waterfront. He entered a shop where sailors' clothing was sold, and purchased a cap and a long overcoat, which hid his dripping garments.

Then, feeling safer from scrutiny, he made his way along the river front, and worked back toward his home.

He was approaching the house when he saw Leontine and Ravengar leave and hail a taxicab. He followed the vehicle, which went slowly through the traffic until it reached the street on which Ravengar's laboratory was situated. Here it quickened its pace. Sebastian began to run. He panted along, the taxicab drawing farther and farther away from him, until, just as he began to despair of catching it, it drew up at the house in which the laboratory was situated.

Sebastian watched them enter. He wondered whose house it was, and why they were going there. He crept up to reconnoiter and perceived that an alley ran between this house and the next. Entering this, he heard Ravengar and Leontine enter a room on an upper floor.

Sebastian was a good climber. He shinned up a pipe like a monkey, until he was clinging to the window sill opposite Ravengar's laboratory, yet a little below the direct line of vision.

Hanging there, Sebastian heard Ravengar begin to explain his secret to Leontine. He gathered enough to realize what power lay in his grasp.

Ravengar set the bottle down on the table with the cloth and turned away. Sebastian could hardly believe his eyes. What a fool the man was! He stretched his arm out, clinging with the other hand to the window ledge. The hand stretched out toward the laboratory window crept quickly forward. It passed through the open window, grasped the bottle and the cloth, and disappeared.

Sebastian balanced himself for an instant upon the window ledge and then swung back into the room of the house adjoining.

Sebastian ran through the room, along the passage, down the stairs, and made his escape by the back door into the street. Still clutching the cloth and the pellets, he ran on blindly.

He looked up as he heard an auto horn. He heard the shouts of the chauffeur. Then the car containing the joy riders drove down on him, catching him and flinging him beneath the wheels, one of which passed over his chest.

A policeman came up. The body was lifted from under the car. A doctor, who happened to be passing, was summoned. After a brief examination, he announced that Sebastian was not badly hurt, but advised that he be taken to a hospital.

The car with the policeman drove off, at his directions, toward St. Luke's, and Sebastian was put to bed in the ward.

There he opened his eyes a few minutes after his arrival, to find himself alone, except for a sick man in the opposite corner. The nurse had gone out of the ward.

Sebastian tried to remember what had happened. He wondered why his fist was tightly clenched and why he was conscious of a strong impulse not to open it.

Then he knew why. So powerful had been his exercise of will power that all through the period of his unconsciousness he had clutched hard to the filmy mantle, the entire bulk of which could be held in one hand.

With this at his command, he could await developments without fear. He regretted, however, the loss of the bottle of pellets.

Suddenly he started. He sat up in his bed and ground his teeth. He heard voices outside the door of the ward. They were those of Ravengar and Leontine.

* * * * * * *

Ravengar leaped out of the taxicab the moment it stopped at the hospital gates and assisted Leontine down. He paid the driver and went inside. The clerk acknowledged that a patient had just been brought in, suffering from the effects of an automobile accident.

They hurried to Sebastian's bedside. Already Sebastian had seen them; his eyes were fixed in hatred upon his wife's Leontine, unmoved, returned his stare. And then there happened an extraordinary thing.

The face of the man on the bed went out. The neck and shoulders followed it. Sebastian had disappeared.

The doctor stared about him in the utmost bewilderment.

"Where is he? What has happened?" gasped the doctor.

Ravengar spun round. "Don't stand there talking, but obey me!" he shouted. "Hold the door fast and don't let him out even if you don't see him coming. That man is a dangerous criminal with a secret power of making himself invisible."

And he jumped to the side of the bed in order to seize Sabastian before he could make his getaway. But Sebastian had been too quick for him.

Robed in the mantle, which completely enveloped him, Sebastian was crouching upon one of the empty beds, waiting for his opportunity to make a break for freedom. He saw Ravengar hunting for him in the wrong direction.

He crept softly from bed to bed. Ravengar was advancing along the middle of the room, with arms outspread, like a man in blind man's buff. It was easy to elude him.

He crept toward the window, near which, in a rack, rested the fire extinguisher and the fire ax. Raising the ax, he shattered the window glass.

The doctor by the door, seeing the ax apparently pick itself out of the rack and break the pane, uttered a loud cry and came running forward.

"Go back!" shouted Ravengar, and pricipitated himself toward the window, trying to grasp Sebastian by the legs and bring him down.

Sebastian had anticipated this move. He flung the ax into Ravengar's face. Fortunately for the latter, he happened to move aside at that moment.

Sebastian had crawled under the nearest bed as Ravengar made for him. Ravengar was puzzled. Crouching down, he began to beat the room with his arms. But Sebastian was already traveling from bed to bed.

"Look!" cried Leontine.

The depressions caused by Sebastian's feet were becoming visible upon the counterpanes. Ravengar rushed to head Sebastian off, but Sebastian had already reached the door. The doctor suddenly felt a violent blow in the face, which sent sent him staggering. The next moment Sebastian had opened the door and rushed toward the stairs.

Fate was with him no longer. An attendant was coming up the middle of the stairway. Sebastian hesitated an instant, but Ravengar was close behind him, and the two men were closing in on him. The one was conscious of his presence, the other not.

"Stop him!" Ravengar yelled to the attendant, who stopped in surprise and looked about him.

The next instant Ravengar saw the attendant stagger under the impact of the collision.

"Now hold him!" he yelled, and dashed down after Sebastian. His hands caught the surface of the cloth, dragging it from Sebastian's head.

The attendant, seeing a head, unsupported by any body, apparently floating in the air, uttered one scream and promptly disappeared.

Ravengar made a wild leap for Sebastian. The head disappeared again as Sebastian threw the mantle over himself. But Ravengar tackled him, and the doctor and the hospital attendants who had been drawn to the spot by hearing the sounds of the struggle saw Ravengar apparently fighting with himself upon the stairway.

Then, as the struggle grew fiercer, they saw first a head, then an arm, then part of a body appear and disappear, as if materialized out of thin air. It was too much for their nerves.

Sebastian fought desperately, for it was a battle for life. He and Ravengar were very fairly matched. They buffeted each other and struggled, until, with a supreme effort, Ravengar raised Sebastian in his arms and tried to fling him over the banisters to the hall below.

Sebastian, poised thus, clung to Ravengar. If he died, his enemy should die with him.

The doctor, standing above, saw the two men fall headlong to the mosaic pavement underneath, where the clerks and other attendants had already gathered.

As the bodies struck the hall floor, there was a hasty scramble for safety. By a miracle neither was seriously injured. Ravengar, however, was slightly stunned, and, during the few moments of semiconsciousness that followed Sebastian managed to wrench the cloth out of his hands and disappear.

He vanished as Leontine came running down and knelt beside her friend.

A LESSON TO LEARN

There is, at this critical age of the United States of America, no lesson of more value that we could possibly learn than the lesson of economy.

The people in this country have in their power the doing of no one thing that would aid us in the furtherance of our national purposes more than the curtailment of waste and unnecessary extravagance in the consumption of food supplies.

Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, the great expert on food conservation, who has been placed at the head of that department of our national government, carries an insignia of his department these words, "Save the Waste and win the War."

The whole truth of the situation is summed up right there. If we save the waste we have therein taken the greatest step that it is possible for our people to make in the direction of success and assistance for our allies.

And there is nothing to prevent us from saving the food that is and has been going to waste.

There are, no doubt, a great many things which would aid our purposes in the war, but possibly the majority of them can be put into operation only under impediments. Maybe they cannot be grasped and enforced with readiness.

But nothing prevents each and every citizen from saving the food and feed stuff that has been wasted heretofore.

ABOUT THE WEATHER

This editor shall never again have anything to say about the weather, no matter how hot, or how cold it gets. He is completely bluffed by what happened last week.

We made mention of the fact that on last Wednesday the mercury stood at ninety-nine, and congratulated ourselves on the fact that real summer time had arrived.

But lo, and behold! By Friday, even by the time our paper had reached its readers, the whole thing had taken such a radical turn that overcoats were comfortably in evidence.

So we have decided that the weather is a subject too variable for an editor to discuss, and we are done with it.

All we expect to do in the future is to try to keep both and overcoat and a palm beach suit in readiness all the time, so that we can jump into either at a moment's notice, as the occasion demands.

The Connecticut Manufacturing Association, representing over 200 of the leading manufacturers of that state passed a resolution favoring complete War Prohibition by a vote of 176 to 1.

The American Medical Association, the most representative body of its kind in the world, at its national convention in New York this month adopted resolutions declaring alcohol to be neither a food nor a stimulant.

With cotton 25 cents a pound our farmers feel better able to afford to pick the boll weevils and dead squares off their cotton.

It is easy to be popular. All you have to do is to make other people think that they know more than you.

THE PICTURE OF PEACE

Cooling, refreshing and wholesome, like a loitering breeze in a woodland glade, comes the mind-created picture of universal peace—visions of the time when the world shall lay down arms, when on fields of battle now red with blood the silence of the Sabbath shall supplant the booming of cannon, the cries of the wounded and the anguished farewells of the dying.

How weary must be the way, how long the time before that picture will become a reality, no man can know.

How much more blood and treasure must be poured out before that day shall come, it is impossible to even estimate. At last practically the whole world is engaged in the war. Christian and pagan fight side by side and destroy the lives of Christian and pagan fighting against them. The white man, the yellow man, the brown man, the black man—all the races, all the colors have joined in the strife. All that man has accomplished, all the arts and the sciences, all the industries, all the conquests of the air and beneath the waters—all that may be used for the slaying of men are being devoted to the destruction of human life.

And it is the United States that holds out to the world the pledge that the picture of peace shall become a reality. The Stars and Stripes shall become a sign of universal safety its red, white and blue, a rainbow of promise to the peoples of all the earth that the sufferings of war shall cease.

Beneath its folds there has been freedom and protection for all who would come to the hospitable shores of America, and now it is carried to other lands that other peoples may find life and liberty beneath it.—Industrial Index.

WE ARE FIGHTING THE GERMAN PEOPLE

There is a great deal of bosh going the rounds about the United States not fighting the German people, but opposing only the Kaiser and his autocratic government. Does it never occur to the sentimentalities that if the German people were not behind the kaiser and his form of government that there would be no world-wide war? Supposing the Kaiser and all his official retainers were left alone to fight Germany's battles, how long do you think the war would last?

Was there ever a time when a man who called himself an American could have favored the German form of government and still have been an American? May a phohibitionist favor the continuance of the liquor traffic—a raving anarchist take a stand for law and order?

Americans should not be deceived by twaddle. We are about to engage in the bloodiest war in all history—are not actually engaged in it—with the most ruthless, brutal enemy ever known in mankind's history and that enemy is the German people just so long as they uphold their present inhuman warfare, and that enemy ceases to be the German people just as soon as they throw off the yoke of imperialistic militarism, and no sooner. The fact should be clear to the mind of everybody that the German people are upholding the Kaiser's bloody arm and are furnishing themselves as human sacrifices for a barbaric ideal. The sooner we Americans get that fixed firmly fixed in our heads, the sooner we shall be in a mental attitude that will make us good soldiers, and not much sooner.—National Republican.

UNION STATE BANK MATTERS

On May 5, 1917, a meeting of depositors and stockholders of Union State Bank was held at Thorsby. At this meeting, after discussion of the present status of the liquidation, it was suggested that an effort be made to get the liquidation into the hands of the stockholders and depositors, in the belief that they could handle the matter more economically and to better advantage than the banking department could. A committee was selected to take the matter up with the Superintendent of Banks. It was believed that the Superintendent of Banks would be willing to relinquish the liquidation if all the stockholders and creditors consented to the plan.

The Superintendent of Banks has turned the proposition down, giving as his reason some ruling of the attorney general. We do not know just what proposition was submitted to the attorney general, but it seems to be generally believed that there is no reason, legal or otherwise, why the liquidation cannot be turned over to the stockholders or depositors in some perfectly legal manner, if there is unanimous consent. Suppose that some one, whom we shall call Attorney Jones, had authority to settle the claims of all creditors—check depositors, savings depositors, stock holders and all other creditors. Suppose that Attorney Jones should offer to accept the assets of the Bank in payment of the claims of all check depositors, or of all depositors and creditors except stockholders. Suppose that he could prove that his offer was reasonable and as good for the trust as any other solution that could be worked out. Is there any reason in the world why all the assets should not be transferred to Attorney Jones? And, if they were transferred to him, could he not then handle them in any manner which had been authorized by the stockholders, depositors and other creditors? Why should the court which has jurisdiction in these matters, refuse to ratify such a reasonable and satisfactory offer? I ask the Supt. of Banks to answer these questions.

I think that it was generally believed by those at the meeting referred to, that the savings depositors are not likely to get all their money, if they get any at all, if the liquidation is completed by the Banking Department; also that there would be a much greater chance of paying all depositors and creditors in full, as well as possibly leaving something for the stockholders, if the liquidation were conducted by the depositors or stockholders themselves. And why should the Superintendent of Banks object to any fair proposition in that line? Would it cut down his salary? No. Would it deprive him or his office of any legitimate prerequisites? No. Then why should the Supt. of Banks and his attorney want to hold on to their jobs in this matter? Does anyone think they want to do it for the protection of the creditors? May it not be that they want to hold the books and records in their own hands for their own protection and for the purpose of enforcing prosecution of those who have manhood enough to oppose their plans? Why is it necessary that there should be so much threatening in these liquidation matters, anyway? Isn't there something wrong in liquidation matters, when is is necessary to threaten a person if he wants things done for the interest of the depositors and stockholders? Does it not look as though there were something in these matters which would not bear the light of day and that it was necessary to threaten criminal prosecution, for the one who has nerve enough to protest, in order to scare him into quietude?

Mr. A. E. Walker, did not your examiner make threats to scare me into coming to Montgomery on January 25, 1916, (five days after you took charge of Union State Bank), on a pretext of banking business? When I called to your office by telephone, from Thorsby, to make sure about the matter, was I not told that this banking matter was not a matter of form and that I would have to take the consequences if I did not come? When I arrived at Montgomery and found that the banking matter was only a matter of form and that my presence was entirely unnecessary, when I asked you to pay my expenses, did you not say that you told me by telephone that it was only a matter of form and that I need not come? And did you not afterwards tell the truth to another party and admit that you had not advised that I need not come? And, then, after threatening me in this manner, what followed? There was no witness to our conversation, so I cannot say too much about it. But you insinuated that I had induced or influenced a bond company to cease to be surety for your agent, and you called this "interfering with the agent." (I did not even know of the bond until after the company had given notice that it would not continue to be surety.) I want to ask you whether or not you threatened me at that time in exactly or substantially the following words: "If you or your friends interfere with me or my agent, I will have auditors sent up there at great expense to the bank, and have them audit the business from beginning to end, and see what they can dig up. Furthermore, in that case I shall not feel so interested in conserving the assets of the bank, and not only the stockholders will not get any money but even the depositors will not get all of theirs."

Did you, Mr. Walker, or did you not, at that same time, explain how money might be lost to the trust (the bank) if you did not take a proper interest in it? Did you explain that thousands of dollars might be lost in a transaction with the National Park Bank of New York, if you failed to use your best efforts to prevent such a result? Now ,come right out and answer my questions. I know that there is only one answer that you can give, but I want the satisfaction of seeing the answer. When I am put on the witness stand, I shall be free to tell whether you said it or not.

I wish to call attention here to the fact that a threat to hire auditors to "dig up" things may be construed as a hint that the auditors might be hired to find things on which to base a criminal prosecution. It also indicates, to my mind, that the party making such a threat did not know of anything which would justify a prosecution but that he hoped that the auditors would find something to base a prosecution on.

And now, I want to ask Lawrence Gerald: "Isn't it your intention to have me prosecuted on some felony charge if I do not keep quiet about banking matters?" You admitted in presence of a witness that your therats (that I would be prosecuted in case I did certain things displeasing to the Supt. of Banks) were not authorized by the Supt of Banks. Are you not trying to get a great big attorney's fee, and do you not intend to carry out your threats and try to send me to the coal mines or the penitentiary if you cannot get me out of the way without taking such action? Have you something to conceal? And how about your close friend, the solicitor of a judicial circuit in Alabama (not the solicitor of the circuit we are in)? When I informed him in some correspondence we had, that it might be necessary for me to publish some things that had happened in connection with liquidation matters, he wrote me: "If you do mention my name in any of your newspaper controversies, you need not have any uneasiness about my attacking you with any weapon whatever, except those what nature may give, but if you do, I promise you now, so help me God, that you or I one will take the best licking with a naked fist that a white man has had in this country for many a day."

Just think of it! a big powerful looking representative of law and order threatening to take the law into his own hands in such a manner! Perhaps he thought I would consider it a great boon to die of assault and battery, but I should prefer to be blown to pieces by a 42-centimeter shell. I really hope that I may not find it neecssary to elucidate the matter further in print or to give the party's name, but I shall not hesitate to do so if I hear Mr. Walker's attorney again use a certain one of his arguments against me.

And now, I want to ask Supt. Walker and Lawrence Gerald another question: "Are you going to have me prosecuted, or use your influence to have me prosecuted because I do things in these bank matters? Does either one of you know of any charge on which I ought to be prosecuted? If so, why have I not been prosecuted already?

I wish to suggest that if it is necessary that I be prosecuted, perhaps if someone connected with the liquidation could give Mr. A. K. Horn another present of about $33.00 of the depositors' or stockholders' money, perhaps he would again consider it his conscientious duty to try to get me indicted. Thirty three dollars would truly be a reasonable price to pay for securing the prosecution of a party who objects to such gifts, the price being especially reasonable when it is paid with depositors' or stockholders' money.

I feel that I have been and am handicapped by Lawrence Gerald's professions that he is interested in my welfare, and also, to a lesser extent, by some expressions of kindly feeling toward me by some other parties. I feel that some of these representations tend to make it appear that I am a poor, misguided fool who has worried till he does not know what he wants, and that my opponents want to act as my guardian angels. Some of them probably do want to be my guardian angels—for a price—the price being my silence in banking matters. I am not ready to pay the price. What do I care for expressions of love, sympathy or respect if I do not see that the real thing is behind them? I want these parties to do right. I want them to handle bank matters to the best advantage—so that all the depositors will get all their money. What good will it do a depositor if everybody loves me and he loses his money? Let those who love me help me in my efforts to get matters right.

It is my opinion that Superintendent Alex E. Walker is guilty of gross negligence in handling the affairs of some banks in Alabama, including the Union State Bank, and judging from his acts and methods of procedure, that he is incompetent to hold the office which he occupies. It seems to me that justice to the State of Alabama demands an investigation.

I also believe that the stockholders and depositors should demand relief, hold another meeting, select a committee to ascertain their legal remedies, and instruct a committee to confer with the Superintendent. Let them make up their minds that they will have Mr. Walker impeached (if the charges against him justify it), unless he grants them relief. Let those who confer with the Superintendent "speak softly and carry a big stick."

When the savings depositors of the Jefferson County Bank of Birmingham, where publicity is easy, wanted to be saved they did not get down on their hands and knees and ask the Superintendent to save them. Oh no! They started to save themselves and the Superintendent listened to them. But when WE want something Mr. Walker's representative, a man of high standing in Alabama, tells us that Mr. Walker considers that he occupies "such a high and exalted state office" that it would not be proper for him to consider the wishes of interested parties! Who ever heard of George Washington or Abraham Lincoln or Woodrow Wilson occupying "such a high and exalted office" that he was above the obligation to do right? Only Czars and Kaisers attain to such heights, and these are bad days for them.

I am prepared to give definite instances of failure to handle the assets of the bank for the best interest of the depositors and stockholders and definite reasons for the impeachment of the Superintendent of Banks and expect to give the information at a later date.

If Your System Is Poisoned

with acids, you cannot know what it is to be healthy. Acids poison the blood and are the source of many diseases affecting the heart and arteries, skin and mucous surfaces, joints and muscles, and the brain and general nervous system. Some of these diseases are Rheumatism in various forms, Catarrh, Eczema, Pimples, boils, rashes, and other skin diseases, Malaria, Scrofula and general blood troubles. In order to restore yourself to a healthy condition, you must drive these acids from your system and purify your blood.

S. S. S. has been purifying and revitalizing the blood of thousands for fifty years. It is a purely vegetable remedy, and is the most efficient agent known for cleansing the blood and building up the system.

Is your barn a cotton warehouse?

WHEN you store a ton of old style cottonseed hulls you give space to almost 500 pounds of lint and all the extra bulk that the lint causes.

When you store a ton of

TRADE MARK
BUCKEYE COTTONSEED HULLS
LINTLESS

you give space to 2000 pounds of real roughage, free from lint, compact, concentrated, solid.

Buckeye Hulls save half your storage space or enable you to carry twice as much roughage.

Other Advantages

2000 pounds of roughage value to the ton—not 1500.	Better assimilation of other food.
Priced much less per ton.	No trash or dust.
Every pound goes farther.	Sacked—easy to handle.
	Mix well with other forage.

Mr. John Wicker, Forest, Miss., says:

that his first experience in feeding Buckeye Hulls was unsatisfactory as he fed them improperly. He now soaks the hulls over night, then feeds them and has very satisfactory results. Mr. Wicker states that these hulls are more economical than the old style hulls and thinks that they go almost twice as far as the old style hulls at a considerably less cost to begin with.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

CLIMBED STAIRS ON HER HANDS

Too Ill to Walk Upright. Operation Advised. Saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

This woman now raises chickens and does manual labor. Read her story:

Richmond, Ind.—"For two years I was so sick and weak with troubles from my age that when going up stairs I had to go very slowly with my hands on the steps, then sit down at the top to rest. The doctor said he thought I should have an operation, and my friends thought I would not live to move into our new house. My daughter asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she had taken it with good results. I did so, my weakness disappeared, I gained in strength, moved into our new home, did all kinds of garden work, shoveled dirt, did building and cement work, and raised hundreds of chickens and ducks. I cannot say enough in praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and if these facts are useful you may publish them for the benefit of other women."—Mrs. M. O. Why She Is Hated.

Governor Whitman said at a banquet in Albany:

"Germany has the whole world against her because she has attempted to change the eternal verities. The eternal verities—that you mustn't sink a hospital ship, that you musn't murder babies, that you mustn't betray your trusting friends, and so forth and so on—all these things Germany has tried to change. But she has tried in vain.

"Germany reminds me of the chap who used to hold out a dollar or two from his envelope every pay day. His wife suspected him, and to make suspicion sure, she got a ready reckoner to check him up by.

"The next pay day, after consulting the ready reckoner, she said:

"'Are you sure that's all, George?'

"George turned red.

"'Of course it's all,' he said, confusedly, with a cough.

"'Well, George, I got a ready reckoner here, and, according to it, I should get more.'

"'Let's see your ready reckoner,' said George.

"He examined the book, then he tossed it contemptuously aside.

"'That ain't no good,' he said. 'It's last year's.'"

PRESIDENT SAYS MILITARY MASTERS DENIED U. S. RIGHT TO BE NEUTRAL.

FILLED COUNTRY WITH SPIES

Failed in Attempt to Spread Sedition —German People in Grip of Same Sinister Power That Has Drawn Blood From Us.

Washington, June 15.—President Wilson in a Flag day address delivered here on Thursday declared that we were forced into the world-wide war by the extraordinary insults and aggressions of the military masters of Germany.

The president's address in part is as follows:

My Fellow Citizens: We meet to celebrate Flag Day because this flag which we honor and under which we serve is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a nation. It has no other character than that which we give it from generation to generation. The choices are ours. It floats in majestic silence above the hosts that execute those choices, whether in peace or in war. And yet, though silent, it speaks to us—speaks to us of the past, of the men and women who went before us and of the records they wrote upon it. We celebrate the day of its birth; and from its birth until now it has witnessed a great history, has floated on high the symbol of great events, of a great plan of life worked out by a great people. We are about to carry it into battle, to lift it where it will draw the fire of our enemies. We are about to bid thousands, hundreds of thousands, it may be millions of our men, the young, the strong, the capable men of the nation, to go forth and die beneath it on fields of blood far away—for what? For some unaccustomed thing? For something for which it has never sought the fire before? American armies were never before sent across the seas. Why are they sent now? For some new purpose, for which this great flag has never been carried before, or for some old, familiar, heroic purpose for which it has seen men, its own men, die on every battlefield upon which Americans have borne arms since the Revolution?

These are questions which must be answered. We are Americans. We in our turn serve America, and can serve her with no private purpose. We must use her flag as she has always used it. We are accountable at the bar of history and must plead in utter frankness what purpose it is we seek to serve.

United States Forced Into War.

It is plain enough how we were forced into the war. The extraordinary insults and aggressions of the imperial German government left us no self-respecting choice but to take up arms in defense of our rights as a free people and of our honor as a sovereign government. The military masters of Germany denied us the right to be neutral. They filled our unsuspecting communities with vicious spies and conspirators and sought to corrupt the opinion of our people in their own behalf. When they found that they could not do that, their agents diligently spread sedition amongst us and sought to draw our own citizens from their allegiance, and some of those agents were men connected with the official embassy of the German government itself here in our own capital. They sought by violence to destroy our industries and arrest our commerce. They tried to incite Mexico to take up arms against us and to draw Japan into a hostile alliance with her—and that, not by indirection, but by direct suggestion from the foreign office in Berlin. They impudently denied us the use of the high seas and repeatedly executed their threat that they would send to their death any of our people who ventured to approach the coasts of Europe. And many of our own people were corrupted. Men began to look upon their own neighbors with suspicion and to wonder in their hot resentment and surprise whether there was any community in which hostile intrigue did not lurk. What great nation in such circumstances would not have taken up arms? Much as we had desired peace, it was denied us, and not of our own choice. This flag under which we serve would have been dishonored had we withheld our hand.

No Enmity Toward German People.

But that is only part of the story. We know now as clearly as we knew before we were ourselves engaged that we are not enemies of the German people and that they are not our enemies. They did not originate or desire this hideous war or wish that we should be drawn into it; and we are vaguely conscious that we are fighting their cause, as they will some day see it, as well as our own. They are themselves in the grip of the same sinister power that has now at last stretched its ugly talons out and drawn blood from us. The whole world is in the grip of that power and is trying out the great battle which shall determine whether it is to be brought under its mastery or fling itself free.

The war was begun by the military masters of Germany, who proved to be also the masters of Austria-Hungary. These men have never regarded nations as peoples, men, women, and children of like blood and frame as themselves, for whom governments existed and in whom governments had their life. They have regarded them merely as serviceable organizations which they could by force or intrigue bend or corrupt to their own purpose. They have regarded the smaller states, in particular, and the peoples who could be overwhelmed by force, as their natural tools and instruments of domination. Their purpose has long been avowed.

The demands made by Austria upon Serbia were a mere single step in a plan which compassed Europe and Asia, from Berlin to Bagdad. They hoped those demands might not arouse Europe, but they meant to press them whether they did or not, for they thought themselves ready for the final issue of arms.

Vast Empire Planned.

Their plan was to throw a broad belt of German military power and political control across the very center of Europe and beyond the Mediterranean into the heart of Asia; and Austria-Hungary was to be as much their tool and pawn as Serbia or Bulgaria or Turkey or the ponderous states of the East. The dream had its heart at Berlin. It could have had a heart nowhere else! It rejected the idea of solidarity of race entirely. The choice of peoples played no part in it at all. They ardently desired to direct their own affairs, would be satisfied only by undisputed independence. They could be kept quiet only by the presence or the constant threat of armed men. The German military statesmen had reckoned with all that and were ready to deal with it in their own way.

And they have actually carried the greater part of that amazing plan into execution! Look how things stand. Austria is at their mercy. It has acted, not upon its own initiative or upon the choice of its own people, but at Berlin's dictation ever since the war began. Its people now desire peace, but cannot have it until leave is granted from Berlin. The so-called central powers are in fact but a single power. Serbia is at its mercy, should its hands be but for a moment freed. From Hamburg to the Persian gulf the net is spread.

Why Berlin Seeks Peace.

Is it not easy to understand the eagerness for peace that has been manifested from Berlin ever since the snare was set and sprung? Peace, peace, peace has been the talk of her foreign office for now a year and more; not peace upon her own initiative, but upon the initiative of the nations over which she now deems herself to hold the advantage. Through all sorts of channels it has come to me, and in all sorts of guises, but never with the terms disclosed which the German government would be willing to accept. That government still holds a valuable part of France, though with slowly relaxing grasp, and practically the whole of Belgium. It cannot go further; it dare not go back. It wishes to close its bargain before it is too late and it has little left to offer for the pound of flesh it will demand.

The military masters under whom Germany is bleeding see very clearly to what point Fate has brought them. If they fall back or are forced back an inch, their power both abroad and at home will fall to pieces like a house of cards. If they can secure peace now with the immense advantages still in their hands which they have up to this point apparently gained, they will have justified themselves before the German people; they will have gained by force what they promised to gain by it: an immense expansion of German power, an immense enlargement of German industrial and commercial opportunities. If they fail, their people will thrust them aside; a government accountable to the people themselves will be set up in Germany as it has been in England, in the United States, in France, and in all the great countries of the modern time except Germany. If they succeed they are safe and Germany and the world are undone; if they fail Germany is saved and the world will be at peace. If they succeed, we and all the rest of the world must remain armed, as they will remain, and must make ready for the next step of aggression; if they fail, the world may unite for peace, and Germany may be of the union.

Seek to Deceive World.

The present particular aim of the masters of Germany is to deceive all those who throughout the world stand for the rights of peoples and the self-government of nations; for they see what immense strength the forces of justice and of liberalism are gathering out of this war.

The sinister intrigue is being no less actively conducted in this country than in Russia and in every country in Europe to which the agents and dupes of the imperial German government can get access.

United States in War for Freedom.

The great fact that stands out above all the rest is that this is a People's war, a war for freedom and justice and self-government amongst all the nations of the world, a war to make the world safe for the peoples who live in it and have made it their own, the German people themselves included; and that with us rests the choice to break through all these hypocrisies and patent cheats and masks of brute force and help set the world free, or else stand aside and let it be dominated a long age through by sheer weight of arms and the arbitrary choices of self-constituted masters, by the nation which can maintain the biggest armies and the most irresistible armaments—a power to which the world has afforded no parallel and in the face of which political freedom must wither and perish.

For us there is but one choice. We have made it. Woe be to the man or group of men that seeks to stand in our way in this day of high resolution when every principle we hold dearest is to be vindicated and made secure for the salvation of the nations. We are ready to plead at the bar of history, and our flag shall wear a new luster.

FIRST ARMY DRAFT MAY BE DELAYED

CONSTRUCTION OF 16 CANTONMENTS PROVING TOO GREAT AN UNDERTAKING

SURROUNDED BY DIFFICULTIES

Department Under Fire From Every Side, Especially Congressmen and Contractors.

Washington. — Simultaneous construction of 16 war army cantonments, each to house 40,000 troops, has proved such an enormous task that officials do not now believe that it can be completed in time to permit mobilization of the first quota of 650,000 by September 1.

Whether any of the men selected under the draft will be called out until the government is ready to begin training of the entire first quota has not been revealed. It is believed, however, that even if all the contonments are not complete by the beginning of September, the date generally suggested for the mobilization, such units as can be accommodated may be summoned in advance of the others.

Work on the cantonments will go forward as rapidly as possible and war department officials are hopeful that if all hove not been completed by September 1, they will be ready soon after that date.

The task has been surrounded with many unexpected difficulties. The department has been under fire from committees which hoped for cantonment sites and has been deluged with correspondence from contractors seeking a share of the work. There have been conficting opinions as to types of buildings, and the present plan for two-story company buildings to house together the 180 men of each infantry company having met with objection from the medical section of the defense advisory council on the ground that not enough air space would be allowed.

The price of $56.00 will stand, Mr. Denman announced until a final figure is set by the rPesident or by some agency he may designate.

MORE MEN NEEDED IN NATIONAL GUARD

ALABAMA BRIGADE NEEDS 2,500 MEN, SAYS STEINER—VACANCIES IN MOST BRANCHES.

AT THE STATE'S CAPITAL

Interesting News Budget of Happenings in Various Departments of State.

—Montgomery.

The Alabama Brigade needs 2,500 men. General R. E. Steiner has requested that the newspapers of this State, including the weekly papers that reach many readers who do not see the larger dailies, shall repeat the above facts and keep on repeating until the people of Alabama are made to realize that the future history of the State is involved in the status of the troops that bear the name of Alabama.

The National Guard can enlist men between the ages of 18 and 40, inclusive. It can take those who have registered and those who have not done so. There are places open for men in many organizations and branches of the service. The cavalry has just about reached war strength, the ambulance company, which is one of the most important units in the army, saving instead of taking life, still requires nearly fifty men. Nearly every company of the three infantry regiments needs men.

Trains To Be Discontinued.

The Alabama Public Service Commission has granted the petition of the Southern Railway and allied lines in Alabama for the discontinuance of 12 trains on its lines as a war measure. The decision of the commission was given in the following order of the commission:

Two trains between Selma and Meridian and four trains from Blossburg to Jefferson Junction. Schedules of some of the trains have been maintained for many years. E. H. "Doans Saved My Life"

"I Had Given Up Hope" Says Mr. Dent, "But Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Me Permanently."

Mr. Dent

"My kidney trouble began with backache, which ran on about a year," says W. H. Dent, 2213 Reynolds Street, Brunswick, Ga. "My back got so I was at times unable to sleep, even in a chair. Often the pain bent me double. I would be prostrated and someone would have to move me. Uric acid got into my blood and I began to break out. This got so bad I went to a hospital for treatment. I stayed there three months, but got but little better. Dropsy set in and I bloated until nearly half again my size. My knees were so swollen the flesh burst in strips. I lay there panting, and just about able to catch my breath. I had five doctors; each one said it was impossible for me to live.

"I hadn't taken Doan's Kidney Pills long before I began to feel better. I kept on and was soon able to get up. The swelling gradually went away and when I had used eleven boxes I was completely cured. I have never had a bit of trouble since. I owe my life and my health to Doan's Kidney Pills."

One Result of War.

The "plant your bit" idea is bringing one distinct change into the lives of many New Yorkers. The repugnance of citizens of this big town to the idea of carrying bundles and packages is disappearing before the onslaught of seed planting.

It is a common sight now to see a nattily clad, spatted and cane-bearing gentleman lugging up paper bags of onion sets or rhubarb roots on the subway to be installed in miniature backyard gardens or even on roofs or in window boxes. It isn't too much to expect that New York will yet become a market-basket town like Washington, D. C., and other cities where the women, regardless of position or affluence, go down to market every morning and do their own buying.—New York Sun.

Lemons Whiten and Beautify the Skin! Make Cheap Lotion

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It should naturally help to whiten, soften, freshen and bring out the hidden roses and beauty of any skin. It is wonderful for rough, red hands.

Your druggist will sell three ounces of orchard white at little cost, and any grocer will supply the lemons. Adv.

"I was a cripple with rheumatism for a long time and for three years I had to use crutches to get about on. I had severe pains in my hips and the small of my back and for years I hadn't been able to do any of my housework to amount to anything. I lost my appetite and things didn't taste right nor agree with me, and I was constipated and had to be taking something for it constantly. All my neighbors knew about my helpless condition, for the fact is, I was an invalid for going on twenty-two years.

"After I had taken five bottles of Tanlac I could walk anywhere I wanted to go without my crutches, for I didn't need them any more, so I laid them aside. The rheumatic pains left me, my appetite is good and I can eat anything I want without the least bit of trouble. As I said before, I am on my feet and doing my own housework again after all these years. I want everybody to know about Tanlac, for it is certainly wonderful."

Too Much.

George Ade said at a wedding breakfast at St. Joseph:

"Once, in putting on a new play of mine, the manager refused to have a young married couple in the cast.

"'I'll take on one or the other, George,' he said, 'but not both.'

"'Why not both?' said I. 'They're both clever.'

"'That may be,' said he, 'but the public, George, don't care to see a man making love to his own wife.'

"'Looks too much like acting, eh?' said I."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JUNE 24

THE PURPOSE OF JOHN'S GOSPEL (REVIEW—READ JOHN 21:15-25.)

REVIEW—Read John 21:15-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—These are written, that you might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name. —John 20:31.

There are a variety of methods to be followed in reviewing the work of the past six months and to give variety. Teachers of classes, or superintendents of schools, may select one or combine several, as their judgment dictates. Of course, the easiest way is to procure a good speaker who is familiar with the Gospel of John and the lessons of the past quarter, and let him bring out in the review its most outstanding and salient features.

One method would be to have one-minute talks either by members of the class or persons selected from the school. Each of twelve scholars could be assigned one minute, each to have one of the lessons of the past quarter.

Another good way would be to take the outstanding and significant verses from the lessons of the quarter, not the golden text, but verses which seem to emphasize the outstanding features of the six months' work. "Behold the Lamb of God," (Ch. 1:36): "Ye must be born again," (3:7); "Come see a man which told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?" (4:29): "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation but is passed from death unto life," (5:24). "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work."

Another method of review would be, particularly in the adult classes, to have each lesson with its present-day emphasis. For instance, the past quarter: Lesson 1—The Christian in his dealing with blindness. Lesson 2—Modern wonders of healing and medical missions. Lesson 3—The shepherding of church members. Lesson 4—Do we know how to give? Lesson 5—Is Christ supreme in our national life? Lesson 6—Ambition and its cure. Lesson 7—The world's good springing from Christ. Lesson 8—Temperance reform. Lesson 9—The Holy Spirit in everyday life. Lesson 10—How Christ is betrayed and denied today. Lesson 11—The uplifting power of the cross. Lesson 12—Why men believe in immortality.

A good method of review would be to have someone take up each of the golden texts, announcing it in advance that pupils may be prepared for this method. The teacher would write the texts of the quarter, each on a separate piece of cardboard, and lay them face down on a table; pupils would then draw the golden texts, one at a time, and tell what the lesson is to which this text belongs, giving as full an account of the lesson as possible, the teacher helping out with questions where necessary.

It will be of great value to the pupils if they can get in this review a clear outline of the main events of Christ's last weeks upon earth, covered particularly by the past quarter. There are forty standing events of the past quarters: (1) The healing of the man born blind; (2) Jesus the good Shepherd; (3) Jesus sending forth the seventy; (4) Jesus in Berea; (5) The raising of Lazarus; (6) The ten lepers healed; (7) Bartimaeus at Jericho; (8) Jesus visits Zaccheus; (9) Jesus anointed by Mary; (10) The fig tree; (11) Triumphal entry; (12) Cleaning the temple; (13) Weeping over Jerusalem; (14) The widow's mite; (15) The Greeks seek Jesus; (16) Preparation for the passover; (17) Washing the disciples' feet; (18) The Lord's supper; (19) The farewell discourse; (20) The farewell prayer; (21) The agony in Gethsemane; (22) Judas betrays Jesus; (23) The arrest of Jesus; (24) Peter denies Jesus; (25) Jesus before Ananias; (26) Jesus before Caiphas; (27) Jesus before the Sanhedrin; (28) The mocking of Jesus; (29) Jesus before Pilate; (30) Jesus before Herod; (31) Pilate condemns Jesus; (32) The sorrowful wait; (33) The crucifixion; (34) The seven last words; (35) Jesus dies; (36) Burial; (37) Resurrection; (38) Appears to Mary; (39) Appearance during the forty days; (40) The ascension.

As brought out heretofore, John sets forth the purpose of this Gospel; namely, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing on him we might have everlasting life, eternal life in his name." (See golden text).

A Suggestion.

In setting forth this review, let us not as teachers and officers, overlook the opportunity we have of calling from our scholars an expression of the faith that has been born within them. (See Rom. 10:9, 10). Jesus the light of the world has power to set men free from sin and "whom the son shall make free is free indeed." If we properly set him before our scholars they will be made free from the slavery of sin and enter into the freedom of believers. True faith is built upon facts; those who accept and believe these facts will have everlasting life.

POTATO SPRAYING IN SOUTHERN STATES

POTATO SPRAYER COVERING FOUR ROWS.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When potato spraying is worth while there is nothing equal to the old standard bordeaux mixture. Lime sulphur, powdered sulphur, and other new mixtures that have come into use in orchards are injurious to the foliage or weaker in fungicidal action, or both, and the experiments to date show that for potatoes and other truck crops nothing has yet been found to replace the copper fungicides.

Potato spraying in the northern states is an established practice of proven profit, but conditions in the Atlantic coastal region from New Jersey to Florida are so different that spraying cannot be expected to give as large returns as in Maine or New York.

Outbreaks of late blight, the principal disease for which potatoes are sprayed, do not occur in the South every year, but only during warm and rainy seasons. Early blight is more frequent, but the potatoes are harvested before its injuries are fully evident.

In the North the gains from spraying are due to the prolongation of the period of growth from two to six weeks at the end of the season. In the South where potatoes are generally dug before full maturity, the sprayed fields do not have a chance to develop a full measure of return for the protection given by the spray.

In dry seasons, especially, which are unfavorable for late blight, it is unlikely that spraying early potatoes in the South will be profitable. The average experience of the past ten years from South Carolina to Norfolk does not present a strong argument for spraying. In Florida, there have been several years when late blight has prevailed and spraying has been profitable. Here the argument for crop insurance is stronger, and spray applications may be advised in number proportioned to the frequency of rain, but always thorough.

In New Jersey, also, as conditions begin to approach those of the North, gains from spraying may be expected.

Growers should see that pumps are in order and materials within reach. Watch the weather and the crop, and if conditions favorable to blight occur, spray with bordeaux mixture (bluestone four pounds, lime four pounds, water fifty gallons). Apply thoroughly and at a high pressure. The prevailing prices for potatoes make such insurance of the new crop doubly desirable.

PLANTING OF PEANUTS

Level System Is to Be Preferred on Well-Drained Soils.

Runner Varieties Should Be Planted About 36 Inches Apart in Row and 16 Inches in Drill—Keep Rodents Away.

(By FLETCHER DAVIS, Texas Department of Agriculture.)

On well-drained soils, such as most southwest Texas soils, level planting for peanuts is to be preferred. Whether the level system or the ridge method is to be preferred, however, is best determined—as in the preparation of the soil—by the man on the ground. They may be planted any time after the danger of frost is passed up to about May 20 for the large pod varieties or July 10 for the Spanish. The runner varieties should be planted about 36 inches apart in the row and 16 inches in the drill, while 28 inches in the row and 9 to 12 inches in the drill will suffice for the bunch varieties. There are peanut planters on the market at from $10 to $20 that will drop the shelled peas of the larger varieties or either the shelled peas or the whole pods of the Spanish variety. It takes about 1½ pecks of the larger varieties of shelled peanuts and one peck of the Spanish or 1¼ bushels of whole pods to plant an acre. Where the whole pods are planted, they should be soaked in water a few hours—not long enough for them to spoil—and planted down in the moist soil before being permitted to dry.

Keep Rodents Away.

If there is a liability of rodents destroying the seeds, it is claimed by some that they can be protected by dissolving a five-cent bar of laundry soap in boiling water and stirring thoroughly into this a half pint of coal oil and then mixing this hot preparation with sufficient quantity of cool water to soak two bushels of peanuts in the hulls. This preparation should not be used on shelled peanuts, and it is better to poison the rodents before planting rather than seek to repel them in this way. The nuts should be planted in moist ground, but they need be covered to a depth varying from only three-fourths of an inch in heavy soils to two inches in light sandy soils.

If the soil shows a tendency to bake or is becoming foul with weeds or grass, a drag harrow can be run over the crop while it is young or just coming up, being careful, of course, to set the teeth of the harrow so as not to tear the plants out of the ground, or where soil is loose and loamy and when grass and weeds grow rapidly, the first and even the second plowing may be done by running a sweep shallow and close enough to completely cover up all the grass, weeds and even the peanuts. This operation, if done in time, will clean the rows by smothering the grass and weeds, but the peanuts will come through to a perfect stand within 24 to 48 hours, provided, of course, they are not covered too deep, in which case, they may never come through. Frequent shallow cultivation with ordinary implements to keep down weeds and maintain a soil mulch is all the cultivation needed. Even this should cease when the plants begin to peg and by the last plowing, a gently sloping ridge or bed should be formed around the plants.

Time for Harvesting.

Do not be in too great a hurry to harvest. When the vines begin to ripen, or turn "yellow" and the nuts do not rattle in the shell after being dried a few days, plow them out with a potato digger, or turning plow from which the mold board has been removed, being careful to plow as shallow as possible, without leaving any of the nuts in the ground. The nitrogen-bearing nodules are on the roots of the plant and the roots, for that reason, are more valuable left in the ground than harvested with the crop. Allow the plowed-out nuts and vines to dry an hour or two and then stack in small well-ventilated stacks—preferably around a small pole and off the ground a few inches—and let them cure thoroughly for five or six weeks. Do not handle when damp from dew or rain and watch stacks to see that they do not heat or mold. The average yield per acre the country over is 34 bushels and from one-half to two tons of hay, but a smaller yield should bring a reasonable profit to the grower.

GOOD VARIETIES OF TOMATO

Make Plantings of Stone Variety Every Four Weeks—Spark's Earliana Is Favored.

(Clemson College Bulletin.)

For an early crop of smooth, attractive tomatoes, Spark's Earliana is about the best variety to plant. For home use, the first planting should consist of one-half Earliana and one-half Stone plants. In order to gather fresh tomatoes all summer, make successive plantings of the Stone variety every four weeks until about August 15.

There will be green tomatoes on the plants that were set out last when the frost appears. If these vines are hung up under shelter before they are damaged by frost, most of this green fruit will ripen.

BEST PROFITS FROM MANURE

Farmer Who Permits Loss Through Leaching Is Neglecting Important Fertility Feature.

The best profit to be obtained from feeding live stock is the stable manure. With our lands responding as they do to applications of stable manure the amount saved, especially when a liberal amount of bedding is used, may be equal to the value of the feeds used; certainly, equal to the manurial or fertilizer value of the feeds used.

The stockman who allows half of this profit to waste through leaching or through failure to provide ample bedding is neglecting to save the only certain profit from the feeding of live stock.—Progressive Farmer.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! ACTS LIKE DYNAMITE ON LIVER

I Guarantee "Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Give You the Best Liver and Bowel Cleansing You Ever Had—Doesn't Make You Sick!

Stop using calomel! It makes you sick. Don't lose a day's work. If you feel lazy, sluggish, bilious or constipated, listen to me!

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile, crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste. —Adv.

Back to Earth.

We had a friend who had been pretty prosperous, but who came upon evil days. We met him one day and he said that he was pretty close to being busted, but he was still hoping. Then he honked his horn, mournfully, and drove away, and we didn't see him again till the other day when we bumped into him on the street, says the Cleveland Plaindealer.

"Hello, old scout!" we said. "How are things breaking now?"

"Fine!" he answered. "I'm on my feet again."

"Bully!" we exclaimed. "How did you do it?"

"Sold my car."

The joke was so obvious that we didn't see it till after he had gone.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and for years it was supposed to be incurable. Doctors prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Catarrh is a local disease, greatly influenced by constitutional conditions and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. THE FIRST COTTON BLOOM

On Wednesday the first cotton bloom reported this season was left at our office. It came from the field of Joe Moore, who lives on one of the Wyatt farms a mile and a half northeast of Clanton.

Mr. Moore reports that his field contains a number of the blossoms, and that all the way round his cotton offers promising prospects.

Mr. Moore did not state whether he had any boll weevils or not; but we have heard reports from some places in the county, stating that the weevil had made its appearance and begun its work on the squares.

COTTON CONDITION SHOWS SMALL GAIN

Summary of Reports from all over the Cotton Growing States of the South.

Alabama.

The crop has made poor progress owing to low temperatures. Plant is small, with little if any of the initial lateness overcome, but healthy in appearance. Stands poor to good. Cultivation well up and soil in good condition and fields clean. Boll weevils reported in some of the infested sections.

Arkansas.

The crop has made only moderate progress. Cool weather and other conditions have prevented the plant from making progress in overcoming its initial lateness. Stands are fair to good with the plant still small, but generally healthy in appearance. During the last month further inloads on cotton acreage has been made by corn and other feed crops. Cultivation has progressed fairly well and only a few fields are foul.

Georgia.

Low temperatures have retarded growth and the crop shows little improvement for June. Stands are only moderately good. Plants very uneven in size owing to different dates of planting, but averages about two weeks late. Some minor insects reported as a result of cool weather. Rains have been local in character, and many sections complaining of drouth. Cultivation well advanced and fields clean.

Louisiana.

Crop progress has been retarded by dry, cold weather. The plant is still small and backward, but has healthy appearance. Fields are well cultivated and clean. A few boll weevils reported, but in somewhat less numbers than at the corresponding time of last year.

Mississippi.

The crop has made little progress in overcoming the initial imperfections. Cool weather recently has checked the growth and further dwarfed the plant, for the time of year. Much complaint of lack of rain in southern part of state. Stands moderately good. Plants blooming almost to northern boundary, but is still very late and much uneasiness felt over possible depredations of boll weevils, which are already reported in many infested localities.

North Carolina.

Cool weather has prevented development of the crop. Stands are moderately good. Plant small and poorly developed. Cultivation well advanced in most sections, although there are some conplaints of grass and weeds.

Oklahoma.

Although retarded by cool weather the crop has made some progress during the last month. Plant still small, but generally healthy. Stands fairly good. Cultivation well up and fields clean. Winds and rain storms have done considerable damage in certain sections, even causing cotton to be plowed up and planted to other crops. The acreage thus affected is not large.

South Carolina.

Crop has made fairly good progress weather has not been altogether favorable, and cool nights have prevented best development. Plant generally small but healthy. Cultivation is excellent and fields clean. Use of fertilizers has increased over last year.

Tennessee.

Moderate progress has been made. Plant is still late and small and there is some complaint of its dying from insufficient root. However, aside from this condition, the plant is generally healthy. Stands are fair to good. Cultivation has been pushed during the last several days of dry weather, and grassy fields have been reduced to considerably less than 20 per cent of the total. Soil is working well.

Texas.

Dry weather and cool nights have prevented normal progress of the crop as a whole, although the northern portion of the state reports the crop doing fairly well. In the west much damage has resulted from continued lack of rain, and thousands of acres have been plowed up and planted to other crops. The plant generally is small for the time of year, but outside the west is holding up well against the drouth. A few boll weevils reported, but making little headway. Cultivation top notch and fields clean.

ARRESTS MADE FOR VIOLATING PROHI LAW

Last Saturday afternoon the Sheriff officers arrested W. M. Heath and E. C. Easterling for alleged violations of the Prohibition laws. The men were found in possession of more "white lightning" than the law allows, and were taken in charge by the officers.

Both were placed under bonds to await action by the courts.

DANGEROUS AUTOMOBILE WRECK SATURDAY NIGHT

Car of W. M. Heath Made Thrilling Dash Off Ten-foot Fill.

Automobiles seem to be rather given to doing unbelievable feats of thrill and danger, but when you see the results with your own eyes, you can't deny it.

There have been a good many wrecks of cars in this vicinity in the past few years but none so miraculous and dangerous as that which occurred Saturday night, when the Ford driven by W. M. Heath missed the high bridge on the highway just east of town and turned sumersault down the ten-foot fill, landing topsyturvey in the mud just on the verge of the creek. When the machine landed it caughtt he driver who was the only occupant beneath its weight, and it required several minutes for him to extricate himself from his perilious position. He was cut and scratched about the head and face, but not seriously hurt. Mr. Heath states that he met a wagon on the fill at the bridge as he was driving out home about midnight Saturday night. In meeting the wagon he said he got too far to the side of the inclining embankment, when his car turned over and rolled down to the bottom.

It was thought Sunday morning when the wreck was first discovered that the driver of the car had plunged headlong into the creek and had drowned. Divers were searching for the body when the reports reached the scene that he had escaped the horrible death that seemed imminent for such a dangerous experience and made his way to the home of a friend a mile up the road.

RIVER FALLS

Editor Union-Banner:

No doubt, there are those in your community who are subscribers of your most worthy paper, who would enjoy a letter from River Falls.

We are 86 miles south of Montgomery at a saw mill camp. There are about 140 state and county prisoners confined here. We work in the saw mill of the Horse Shoe Lumber Co. 120,000 feet of lumber is cut each day. There are some confined here in the big state boarding house. Our treatment here is good as can be expected under any and all circumstances. There are many men here—free men—who are electricians, civil engineers, inspectors and mechanics of all kinds. There are some confined in prison who are not guilty of any crime. Malice in their own community has placed them here. I find many who are educated and are gentlemen, but in a moment of weakness they have fallen from grace. None of us are perfect, you know, we are only human beings, after all, moulded of clay. Restraint is man's greatest punishment. He is locked away from all that is near and dear to him—all that makes life worth the while. Some people class these unfortunates as moral leopards. They shun them; but I find that such is not the case. A man can come to River Falls and be just as much of a gentleman as tho' he were free.

There are men here who would give up their life to protect virtue in womankind, and they are indeed scarce outside. Some come here expecting to find it a summer resort, but upon arrival they find they are sadly mistaken. It is work from dawn until dark. Being separated from those we love is the greatest punishment man can suffer.

At eventide, when his daily task is over, it is then that his heart and thoughts wander back to those he loves. No one to say an endearing word—no sweet wife or mother caresses him. That's what makes his heart ache. I pray that none will hold malace against me in their hearts, for in my own heart, it is faith, hope and charity toward all mankind.

Yours truly,
LAMAR BLACKMON.

DEATH OF OLD VETERAN JOHN A. RAWLINSON

Another old Confederate veteran passed away on the 23rd of May at 3 o'clock, when the death angel carried away Bro. John A. Rawlinson to a better land to die no more and will be at rest with loved ones long gone before.

Mr. Rawlinson had been a sufferer for the last twenty years, but always bore his afflictions with patience and without murmuring.

He was a member of Sardis Baptist Church at the time of his death.

His remains were laid to rest in Pilgrim's Rest Cemetery, Rev. Tilman Deason conducting the services.

Bro. Rawlinson was 72 years old, and leaves a wife, two sons, one daughter, 16 grand children and 5 great-grand children.

I want to live a Christian here—
I want to die while shouting;
I want to fel my Savior near,
While soul and body are parting.
I want to see the angels stand
Waiting to receive me,
To lead my soul to Canaan's land,
Where Christ has gone before me.

One who Loved Him.

THE NEW ROAD LAW IN EFFECT ON JULY THE 1.

Judge Reynolds Writes Letter on Some Applications of ihe new System of Regulations.

The new road law for this county goes into effect the first day of July, and the Commissioners will be in session on the 16th of July to appoint overseers for Beats 1, 2, 9, 12, 13, and 14. And will be here the 17th to appoint overseers for Beats 3, 6, 7, 8 and 15, and on the 18th to appoint overseers for Beats 4, 5, 10, 11 and 16.

The Court will be glad to have as many of those interested in the roads as possible to meet the Court. We realize that the success of the new road law depends on the overseers we appoint and we want good men for the places—men that will work the roads. And if we appoint men that will not do their duty we have provided that the Court may discharge them at any time.

All persons hauling lumber, logs, turpentine, naval stores, graphite, ore or cord wood for hire or for sale must pay license on their wagons. The tags may be had at the Probate's office.

It is the duty of the overseers and apportioners to report any one violating any of the provisions of the law.

A copy of the law may be had at the Probate's office, and I will be glad to give any information I can to anyone about the law. I hope the law will be a success, and I hope to see better roads in Chilton County. I want all the people to get their share of the road money, but one thing you must keep in mind, that we have no money to work roads with. We are pledged to reduce the debt of the county as fast as we can.

I hope the overseers when appointed will fix all the places in their roads that get impassable in the winter. We know the places that were so bad that they could not be traveled last winter, andt the time to fix them is in the summer or fall—not wait until it gets so bad that it will be impossible to fix them.

The money reveived from the wagon tax will be expended on the roads the wagons run over, and I hope the overseers will see that the roads get the benefit of the money. Each overseer might as well understand from the start, that if they do not work their roads they will be replaced and the law enforced. Each hand must put in honest work, or the overseers must discharge him, and the time must be kept by hours. Road hands must work 50 hours each year or pay $5.00.

We can have good roads all over the county if we all try. We all want good roads, and we know there is no use to wait for the county to build them, for it cannot. Our debt is over the limit. We have no money nor credit; so we must work the roads without money. If we ever have good roads the people of the county will have to build them.

I hope all the people using wagons will pay the tax without trouble; and let us give the law a chance to see what it will do. Sawmill and other public wagons ruin the roads and this law taxes them; but puts the money back on the same road, and makes a good road for them to haul over.

Remember that if any part of the road law is bad, it may be changed at any regular meeting of the Commissioners Court. So, from time to time the law will be changed to meet any reasonable objections.

Respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

INTENSE INTEREST MANIFEST IN ADULT SCHOOL WORK

Gratfying results are being manifested in the adult school work of the counties where campaigns have been launched. Men and women who grew up during the reconstruction period and who were thereby deprived of school advantages are now embracing the opportunities offered to them by these adult schools.

The following report from Coffee County is typical of several other counties:

"The people throughout this county are manifesting a great deal of interest in the adult school movement. The trustees in the various communities are pushing it in every way possible and in a great many instances are themselves enrolling. To date twenty such schools have been organized. The work is gaining such unexpected headway is now looks as if it will be possible to have a school in every district in the county this summer. Last summer we had more teachers wanting to do this gratuitous and praiseworthy work than we could locate schools. At the last institute 58 teachers volunteered to give their time to this work this summer—a noble example of willingness to serve."

A report from Escambia County shows that 18 schools have been organized, 210 pupils enrolled and 50 teachers pledged their services for the summer.

The lessons of these schools should not be lost to those actively engaged in the school work of the state. Unless the schools are maintained and improved, the problems which will confront us in the future will not be unlike those which stood in the way of these veterans who are just beginning to receive the rightful heritage of their youth.

Let not this phase of history repeat itself.

TEACHERS EXAMS, JULY 16-18

Examinations for teachers will be held in the several counties of the state July 16, 17 and 18. Those who desire information relative to these examinations should write for Department Bulletins Nos. 32 and 40. Two cents in postage should accompany each request.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. ELLA GORE

On Tuesday morning, June 19th, 1917, about 9 o'clock the death angel visited the home of Mr. Will Gore and took from him his darling wife.

All was done for her that physicians, friends and loving hands could do, but for some cause unknown to us God called her from this life into the Great Beyond.

Mrs. Gore was born January 1st, 1883 near Coosa River, the place now known as Lock 12. After joining heart and heart with Mr. Gore, on December 28th, 1899, they joined hand in hand and took a binding obligation that they would cling to each other until separated by death, which they did. She was a loving wife and affectionate mother, and to know her was to love her.

When we look toward Mr. Gore's and cannot see his loving wife it looks lonesone, oh so lonesome!

We know she is gone—we can never see her here on this earth again, but hope to meet her on that Happy Golden Shore, where there is no more pain and sorrow but joy and happiness forever.

Mrs. Gore joined the Missionary Baptist Church at Macedonia when she was about the age of fifteen years and in 1908 they moved their home near New Salem where she placed her membership with us in August, 1915. She lived a true consecrated Christian life until death.

Mrs. Gore leaves a husband, six sweet children, a mother, five brothers and three sisters and a host of friends to mourn her loss; although, we feel sure that our loss is heaven's gain.

We do hope and pray that Mr. Gore will live a life before his children that as they grow up in age they may grow in grace, so as to meet their dear mother in that sweet by and by.

Her name was lai

Her remains were laid to rest in New Salem cemetery, to await the resurrection morning.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. M. J. Parrish and W. J. Armstrong.

Ones who Loved Her.

HARVESTING PREMATURE POTATOES IN ALABAMA

Alabama has a larger acreage in sweet potatoes this year than ever before. The crop is later than usual on account of so much unseasonable cool dry weather. This will delay early harvesting, but will not necessarily shorten the yield, if given time to grow as the potato has wonderful power of making up under normal summer seasons.

In Southern Alabama early varities are grown extensively for early marketing. The usual time for early harvesting and marketing is during the month of July, at which time the crop is still green and growing. The yield per acre at this stage is about half as much as it would be if allowed to grow a month or six weeks longer nearing the stage of maximum maturity. They would be better food, more healthful, easily kept by storage and the increased yield would more than compensate the difference in price.

The reason why harvesting and marketing potatoes in the premature state became customary was due to a desire to get them on the market first while the demand for new potatoes was greatest and the price sufficiently high to compensate for the loss in yield. This custom originated and was practiced under normal times when the nation's food supply was bountiful and the fall market for potatoes very poor. Times have changed and the producer is facing entirely new conditions. Under present conditions the premature harvester will have reduced his contribution to the nation's food supply by half and short changed himself by hastily following the customary premature harvesting plan. In view of the scarcity and high prices of food stuff and the probability of future high prices for many months, it is the patriotic duty of farmerst o give their crops time to produce the maximum yield before harvesting.

Utilize Fertile Stubble Land.

All fertile stubble land should be used for second crop. Cow peas, soy beans, sorghum and early maturing corn are the crops generally recommended for second crops on stubble lands. Seed for such crops is scarse, high in price and almost unobtainable. Farmers fho are fortunate enough to havet hem should prepare their land well, plant after a good season, if possible using as few seed as will give them a good stand. By economy with seed you may be able to furnish a few seed to the fellow who could not othrwise obtain them. Do not forget that clippings from sweet potato vines may yet be set. This should be done immediately after the next rain. Tthey will make some potatoes and a loto f ideal seed for bedding next spring.

MEN HERE INTERESTED IN GRAPHITE LANDS

The graphite mining and manufacturing business over in Coosa County is growing into considerable magnitude. Large sums of money have been made over night by the holders of land in the district, and many men have seen their hill-side land in a single night turn from worthless rocky knolls to priceless prospects for mining purposes. Mr. Wm. Shurett of Rockford, a holder of large options in the mining country was in Clanton last week on business connected with some deals he is endeavoring to make. He went down to Montgomery to confer with some parties interested in the power sites on Hatchett Creek, in the vicinity of the mines, from which it is planned to develop power to run several near-by graphite mills. Mr. Shurett controls options on the power site and graphite lands surrounding it.

CHILTON COUNTY SINGING CONVENTION NEXT SUNDAY

We have been requested to announce that the Chilton County Singing Convention will be held at Providence church, seven miles east of Clanton, on next Sunday, July 1. The session will consist of one day only—Sunday—and not two days as is the custom.

All who are interested in the furtherance of the causes espoused by the Convention are invited and urgently requested to attend and assist in the work.

DR. ANDREW SLED CONDUCTING 8-DAY MEETING AT VERBENA

CANNING CLUB GIRLS HERE THIS WEEK FOR THE SHORT COURSE

Delegates in Meeting for Instruction Work at the High School Building.

The Chilton County Canning Club girls came to Clanton on Tuesday and captured the town.

They were represented by 63 delegates from the 23 separate Canning Club Societies in Chilton County; and in addition to the delegates there was a large number of their friends.

These canning club young ladies were entertained these three days at the private homes of some of the ladies of Clanton.

Early in the morning hours the girls commenced to assemble in the high school auditorium, and after being introduced by Mrs. Lida Jones, Rev. Gable, pastor of the Clanton Baptist Church, and Rev. T. G. Jones, pastor of the Methodist church, addressed the audience.

At 11 o'clock Mrs. Jones introduced Judge L. H. Reynolds, who had been requested to deliver an address.

Judge Reynolds, in opening his speech said, "Stop, look and listen," and then he proceeded to tell the young ladies as to the present greatest struggle that the world ever experienced, he said: "Women have always done their part, but they have been contented to let men have all the honor; but this is not true today—women have come to the front and are today man's equal in many pursuits and superior in some.

"It was thought one hundred years ago by some that women had no rights. How different now! Co-operation is the key note to success; and with this thought in mind, it is my pleasure to say that the Chilton County officials will cooperate as individuals with you ladies in food preservation and in maintaining your organizations as Canning Clubs."

Right here the young ladies applauded the Judge.

"God saw that the child was the greatest of his many cares in the world and need at creation," and that the rearing of them to become Christian men and women was a grave responsibility. "God hath laid down the course to pursue, and Christian men and women are following with eagerness."

"There are you, now, representative young ladies and matronly women present here today from Clanton and Chilton County. All that is needful to convince an observer of your present and future usefulness in food preservation."

Speaking of matters educational, Judge Reynolds said:

"Ignorance breeds poverty. An ignorant people not only is but always must be a poor people. Those who are destitute of sagacity and providence must of course be lacking in competence and comfort.

"Richness of climate, facilities of commerce, and even stores of gold cannot confer prosperity upon an uneducated people. They cannot create wealth, and whatever riches are showered upon them will surely run to waste.

"Within the last four centuries, the people of Spain have posessed as much silver and gold as all the other nations of Europe combined; but poor, indeed is that nation whose people today have less than Spain.

"The ignorant pearl diver does not wear the pearl he wins! the diamond digger is not ornamented with the jewel he finds; the ignorant toiler in the most luxuriant field is not filled with the harvest he gathers. The choiciest production of the world whether mineral or vegetable, wherever found or wherever gathered, will inevitably by some secret and resistless attraction make their way into the hands of the most intelligent."

At the conclusion of Judge Reynolds' address there was adjournment for dinner, and then the worthy and pretty club girls went to the homes of the matrons to eat. They rested and returned for another session.

On the evening of the 27th Mr. P. C. Smith put on an extra attraction at the Ideal Theatre for the young ladies.

Altogether, the three days were enjoyed by those who participated.

See that your garden produces dry beans. cabbage, potatoes and root crops that can be kept without canning.

FOOD CONTROL BILL PASSED IN HOUSE

Lever Measure Is Adopted In Congress By Overwhelming Vote Following Heated Debate

DEFINE POWER OF PRESIDENT

Senate Takes Rest On Debate—Will Consider Dry Clause Of The Bill

Washington.—The administration food control bill, giving the president broad authority to control the distribution of food, feed and fuel for war purposes and appropriating $152,500,000 for its enforcement and administration, was passed by the house after far-reaching prohibition provisions had been written into it.

The vote was 356 to 5, Representatives McLemore, Slayden and Young, of Texas, Democrats, and Meeker of Missouri and Ward of New York, Republicans, voting in the negative.

The prohibition provisions adopted would permit the use of foodstuffs for the manufacture of alcoholic beverages, and would give the president authority to take over for war purposes all liquor now on hand. They were put into the measure during the evening in committee of the whole, and when the bill came up in the house proper the anti-prohibition faction did not demand that they be voted on again.

The bill now goes to the senate, where it probably will be substituted for a similar measure already under consideration.

Few important changes were made by the house outside the prohibition section. The control powers of the president were limited to articles specifically mentioned in the bill instead of giving him blanket authority; voluntary aids in control work were made subject to the penal provisions, all persons in the food administration except those serving without compensation were placed under civil service; and the president was required to make an annual report on the operation of the bill.

The amendment designed to cut off manufacture of liquors was adopted, 132 to 114. It was submitted by Representative Barkley of Kentucky, Democrat, and would provide that no food, food material or feed would be used during the war for the manufacture of alcohol or alcoholic beverages except for governmental, industrial, scientific, medicinal or sacramental purposes.

HEARTY APPLAUSE GREETS AMERICAN MISSION TO RUSSIA

Antagonism And Indifference Yielded To Rapt Attention As Soon As Root Began To Speak

Moscow.—The first meeting attended here by Elihu Root and the other members of the American commission was held in the palace of the governor general. There were assembled representatives of the zemstvo industrial committee and the local council of the workmen's and soldiers' deputies.

The meeting was in the nature of a test to determine whether the commission is to have the real sympathy of the Socialist element in the country. It is said here that no foreign government ever succeeded in enlisting the attention and interest of committees representing the working men of Moscow. But as Mr. Root began to speak, antagonism and indifference yielded to rapt attention and he was "warmly applauded" at the conclusion.

"We have seen nothing since we came to Russia," said Mr. Root, "that gives cause for criticism. We marvel at the self-control, the kindliness of spirit and the sound common sense that the Russians display.

"The government of Germany, the German social system, even German Socialism, are all militaristic in their essential nature. They shall not gain control of free America, but if we can help you to prevent their gaining control of free Russia we shall be happy in feeling that we have assisted in the perpetuation of the ideals of our fathers who fought and sacrificed to make us free."

Germany Looks On With Contempt

Amsterdam.—The North German Gazette publishes a review of the military situation in which General von Blume writes: "With head erect and a gaze full of contempt we come to a consideration of the nations which, since the beginning of the year, have joined our enemies, the United States in the forefront of them. With our three allies we now have to guard against 13 entire hostile and 9 half hostile states, comprising the greatest part of the earth's inhabitants. The more enemies the more honor."
